ENDOWED SCHOOLS (IRELAND) COMMISSION.

R E P O R T .

TO HIS EXCELLENCY FRANCIS THOMAS DE GREY, EARL COWPER, K.G.,

LORD LIEUTENANT-GENERAL AND GENERAL GOVERNOR OF IRELAND

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY.

In the month of December, 1878, we had the honor to receive the Warrant of His Grace the Duke of Marlborough, K.G., Lord Lieutenant-General and General Governor of Ireland, bearing date the 3rd of that month, appointing us (with Mr. William Wilson, M.P., whose death in November, 1879, deprived us of his active and valuable co-operation) Commissioners to inquire into the endowments, funds, and actual condition of all schools endowed for the purposes of education in Ireland, and authorizing and directing us to inquire into and report upon the matter following, that is to say :—

1. What schools in Ireland are endowed with property.
2. Whether the endowments of the aforesaid schools respectively are of public or private foundation.
3. What is the nature of the endowment of each such school.
4. In what manner the property which constitutes the endowment of each school is managed.
5. What is the course of education in each such school, the number of scholars in attendance thereat, and the salaries of the master and under-masters thereof.
6. The condition of the school-buildings and premises of each such school, and their adaptation for scholastic requirements.

And we were by His Grace's said Warrant further authorized and directed to examine all such persons as we might judge expedient, and to call for and examine all books, documents, and records likely to afford us information on the subject of our Commission. And we were thereby further authorized and directed to report to His Grace in writing, on or before the 1st of January, 1880, our several proceedings by virtue of the said Commission together with the results of our inquiry into the several matters thereby referred to us for investigation. And we were by the said Warrant further authorized from time to time to report our several proceedings, with such statements as it might, from time to time, appear to us expedient to present in the premises.

By His Grace's Warrant, bearing date the 30th day of December, 1879, he was pleased to extend the duration of the Commission to the 30th day of June, 1880.

By Your Excellency's Warrant, bearing date the 26th day of June, 1880, you were pleased to further extend the duration of the Commission to the 31st day of October, 1880.

We now humbly beg to report to Your Excellency our several proceedings by virtue of the Commission, together with the results of our inquiries into the several matters referred to our investigation, and to submit such statements of matters arising upon our examinations and inquiries as it has appeared to us expedient to present.

STATEMENT OF THE COURSE OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

Our first meeting was held on the 21st of December, 1878, when we commenced our proceedings by directing the preparation of a list of the Endowed Schools in Ireland from the reports of previous Commissions and such other sources as were available.

In order to secure as complete a list as possible we took the following steps :—

We addressed to the Board of National Education in Ireland a letter requesting them to furnish us with a list of all schools endowed with property (distinct from the aid received from them) which were vested in them, or were under their management. Vol. II., p. 603.

We addressed to "The Commissioners of Education in Ireland," a letter requesting them to furnish us with a list of all existing schools which were under their management or control, or which had been visited by them. 552, p. 603.

We addressed a letter to the Rector of the Catholic University asking him to furnish us with a list of any Endowed Schools with which he was officially connected, or which were in any way connected with the Institution of which he was the head. 554, p. 603.

Proceedings of Commission.

Vol. II., p.
605.

We addressed to The Governors of the Schools founded by Erasmus Smith, Esq., a letter requesting them to furnish us with a list of all schools then in operation which were under their management, and also a list of all schools which having been under their management in 1837, or subsequently, had been discontinued, or had ceased to be under their control.

Ibid., p. 606.

We applied by letter to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for the particulars of any devises or bequests of property for the endowment of Schools, which had come to their knowledge since the year 1837, excepting bequests of less than £100 unaccompanied by directions to invest, as to which we did not consider it necessary to institute inquiries.

Ibid., p. 606.

We addressed to the Commissioners of Church Temporalities in Ireland a letter requesting them to furnish us with any information in their possession relative to property appearing to have been originally devoted to, or intended for, purposes of Education in Ireland, which had become vested in them, and further requesting them to inform us how such property had been disposed of.

Ibid., p. 606.

We also addressed communications to the Honourable the Irish Society, the Worshipful the Company of Drapers, and the Worshipful the Company of Ironmongers, the Incorporated Society in Dublin for Promoting English Protestant Schools, the Association for Discourteising Vice, the Church Education Society for Ireland, the Irish Society for Promoting the Education of the Irish-Speaking People, the Society for Irish Church Missions, the Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor (Kildare-place), the Island and Coast Society, the Sunday School Society, the Hibernian Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, and the Primitive Wesleyan Methodist Society. We requested each of these societies to furnish us with a list of all Endowed Schools under its management or control, or receiving aid from it.

Ibid., p. 606.

We prepared a circular addressed to the Clergy of all denominations in Ireland, requesting them to furnish us with any information in their possession, as to schools coming within the scope of our Commission, which were in existence in their parishes or districts, or which having been in existence in 1837, or subsequently, had been discontinued.

This circular we forwarded to the Clergy named in Thom's Official Directory as Incumbents in the Church of Ireland, (the number of such Incumbents being 1,293), to the clergy named in the same Directory as Parish Priests, or Administrators of parishes of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, (the number of such Parish Priests and Administrators being 1,090), and to the Ministers of the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches in Ireland, (the number of the former being 485, and of the latter 160).

Ibid., p. 607.

We prepared, and caused to be inserted in the leading newspapers of Ireland, advertisements, calling the attention of the public to the appointment and objects of the Commission, and inviting persons willing to afford information as to any matters coming within the scope of the Commission to communicate with our Secretary.

Ibid., p. 607.

Having as the result of these proceedings prepared a preliminary list of schools which appeared to come within the scope of our Commission, we forwarded to each head master a paper of questions, and tabular form of return, requesting information as to the foundation and endowments of the school, the emoluments of the master, the course of instruction, the attendance of pupils, and the other matters necessary to ascertain its condition.

The Board of National Education informed us that it would be exceedingly difficult for them to supply the information requested in the letter which we had addressed to them, but that they were most anxious to co-operate with us in every way in their power. Accordingly we prepared a circular and list of queries, specially adapted to the case of National schools, which the Board of National Education permitted us to forward through their office to the managers of all such schools in Ireland.

Ibid., p. 608.

The number of National Schools in operation at the date of our inquiry appeared to be about 7,322; of these about 7,244 were maintained by public funds, with school fees and occasional or temporary local contributions, and did not appear to have any permanent endowment, except that a large majority (over 80 per cent. of those from which returns were received) occupied free sites. We found it would be, in many cases, impossible to trace the title to such sites, or their tenure, and that no commensurate object could be attained by attempting the prosecution of further inquiry in cases where the school property consisted merely of a site. We therefore resolved to retain upon our list such National Schools only as we found to possess some permanent endowment other than, or in addition to, the site of the school itself. The number of these was 278, and the number of the other Endowed Schools included in our investigation being 415 raised the total number of distinct schools upon which we have to report to 693.

In those instances in which our communications elicited no sufficient response, we sent duplicate forms and circulars or letters addressed to the Incumbents, Parish Priests, or other persons from whom it appeared probable that we might obtain information.

As soon as the probable limits of our inquiry had become apparent, we began to take evidence in public courts with respect to the various schools and classes of schools within the scope of our commission.

Public notice was previously given of the holding of these courts, and notices were addressed to those persons who had been in correspondence with us, or from whom we thought it likely that important information might be obtained, informing them that evidence with respect to the schools, or classes of schools, in which they were interested, would be taken on a particular day, and inviting their attendance.

Our first public court was held at our office, Four Courts, Dublin, on the 2nd of April, 1879. During the months of April, May, July, September, October, and December, 1879, and January, April, May, and August, 1880, we held in Dublin twenty-eight public courts.

At these courts we examined the masters of the principal schools, members of the chief Boards of Education, and many of the officials of these boards, and we received evidence from the Clergy of all denominations, trustees, inhabitants of towns and districts, landed proprietors, and other persons interested in particular endowments, or in the subject of Education generally.

In September and October, 1879, we held sixteen public courts in various parts of the country. For greater expedition in completing this portion of our labours, the Commissioners divided and held inquiries simultaneously in the north and south of Ireland.

Courts were held at Belfast, Londonderry, Enniskillen, Cavan, Armagh, Limerick, Clonmel, Waterford, Kilkenny, Cork, and Kinsale.

Our course of proceedings, with respect to these courts, was similar to that adopted in Dublin. We caused advertisements to be inserted in the leading local papers, addressed notices to all persons who had been in special correspondence with us, or whom we considered it desirable to examine, and received evidence from the principal inhabitants of the towns in which our inquiries were held, the clergy of the parishes or districts, and other persons interested in particular endowments, or in the subject of education generally.

The minutes of the evidence given at our several courts will be found in Vol. II., pp. 1 to 587.

We applied to "The Commissioners of Education," to the Board of Erasmus Smith, and others, for leave to examine their books, rentals, and accounts. Permission having been obtained, our Secretary attended at the various offices, and wherever, from his report, such a step seemed necessary, we requested the accountant or other person in charge to attend before us with the books, and to elucidate such matters as required explanation.

In May, 1879, we applied to His Grace The Lord Lieutenant for authority to appoint two inspectors to visit all the principal grammar schools and some of the primary and commercial schools; and the sanction of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury having been obtained in August, 1879, we then appointed the Rev. John P. Mahaffy, r.t.c.d., inspector of grammar schools, and Hugh Keys Moore, Esq., Sch., t.c.d., inspector of primary and commercial schools.

These gentlemen commenced their inspection in September, 1879, and have furnished to us the reports printed in Appendices A, B and C, infra, pp. 233 to 285.

Early in the year 1880, we, with the sanction of His Grace The Lord Lieutenant, directed the Rev. J. P. Mahaffy, r.t.c.d., our inspector of grammar schools, to visit and inspect six of the leading grammar schools in England, for the purpose of comparison. The results of his inspection are stated in his Report; infra, p. 238.

In consequence of evidence indicating unsatisfactory management of several estates held in trust for the purposes of Education, we found it necessary in September, 1879, to apply for the assistance of an Inspector of Estates. The sanction of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to this step was only received, after a long correspondence, late in February, 1880, when we were at length enabled to appoint Edmund Murphy, Esq., a.s., who in accordance with our instructions proceeded to inspect the estates mentioned in his report, which is printed in Appendix D, infra, pp. 286 to 322.

During the progress of our Commission a quorum of our body met for the despatch of business on 113 days. Sixty-nine meetings were held at our office, Four Courts, Dublin, for the private transaction of business.

We resolved, at an early stage of our proceedings, to take the Report of the Royal Commission on Endowed Schools (Ireland), 1854-8, as our starting point, and, to a great extent, as the basis of our inquiries; we have, therefore, generally referred to that Report for the earlier history of the various classes of Endowed Schools, and have used and adopted the information collected by the previous Commission, except in those few instances where it has been found necessary to correct it. While we refer, however, to the report presented by the majority of the members of that Commission for the full, minute, and valuable information, and for the history of Irish education, which it contains, it is not within the scope of our more limited Commission to express any opinion upon the recommendations contained in that Report, or upon the controversies which prevented two of the Royal Commissioners from concurring with their three colleagues, and which led Mr. Stephens to express his reasons for dissenting in a separate letter to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, which was subsequently laid before Parliament.

GENERAL ARRANGEMENT OF THE REPORT.

The schools which came within the scope of our Commission might naturally be divided, according to the education given in them, into two leading classes:—first, grammar schools, and other schools in which a superior education is given; and secondly, primary schools. But the most important subject for our investigation appearing to us to have been the management of the endowments, we have thought it more convenient to classify the schools, as far as possible, with reference to the several governing bodies, or other authorities responsible for their condition, and taking first in each class those schools in which a superior education is given we have arranged the subjects of this Report in the following order:—I. Schools under "The Commissioners of Education in Ireland," subdivided as follows:—Royal Free Schools, Diocesan Schools, and Schools of private foundation. II. Schools under "The Governors of the Schools founded by Erasmus Smith." III. Schools under the Incorporated Society. IV. Schools connected with the Church of Ireland. V. Roman Catholic Schools. VI. Schools of other denominations, including Presbyterian Schools, Methodist Schools, and Schools of the Society of Friends. VII. National Schools. VIII. Schools whose endowments are under the management of "The Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland." And IX. Miscellaneous Schools, not falling within any of the above classes. As to each of these classes we give a general Report, followed, where necessary, by special mention of particular schools.

We have appended a list (infra, p. 511) of the endowments of public foundation, so far as they could be clearly defined as such.

In the Tables annexed to the Report, which have been prepared by our Secretary, (Appendix P, infra, pp. 345 to 514) a complete list will be found of all the schools included in our inquiries, with a tabulated summary of the information obtained as to each. As to many schools we have not found it necessary to make any special report, but refer to the statements set forth in the Tables.

I.—"THE COMMISSIONERS OF EDUCATION IN IRELAND"

*Letter, Dr.
Kyle, 10th
March,
1879, vol.

In reply to the letter which we addressed to "The Commissioners of Education" on 4th February, 1879, intimating the commencement of our inquiries, we received a letter (vide infra, vol. II., p. 610) from William Cotter Kyle, esq., M.B., the Secretary of the Commissioners, dated 10th March, 1879, containing the following statement:—

"Every investigation into the constitution and working of this Commission has remarked on its deficiency of powers, and recommended its complete reconstruction; and this Board, being fully convinced of the necessity of its reorganization and extension of powers, has frequently and urgently in its annual Reports brought this subject under consideration of the Government, making suggestions and calling special attention to the principal points on which new legislation was, in its opinion, absolutely required. It is, however, to be regretted that neither the recommendations of the Select Committee of the House of Commons (1838), nor of the Royal Commission (1858), nor the frequently repeated suggestions from this Board, have, as yet, led to any legislative reforms."

As we found the condition of the schools and the management of the endowments which are under the control of "the Commissioners of Education in Ireland" to be, in many respects, unsatisfactory, and as the defects have been so repeatedly, but ineffectually, attributed to deficiency of powers, it is necessary to refer to the constitution of the Commission.

"The Commissioners of Education in Ireland" are constituted under two statutes of the Imperial Parliament, passed respectively in 1813 and 1823 (53 Geo. III., cap. 107, and 3 Geo. IV., cap. 79), which seem to have been intended to provide an effective and comprehensive administration for the Endowed Schools of Ireland. The first and principal Act was intitled "An Act for the appointment of Commissioners for the Regulation of the several Endowed Schools of public and private foundation in Ireland," and it recited the necessity of constituting Commissioners for the purpose of visiting, regulating, and superintending the management and due application of the funds and revenues of the several Endowed Schools in Ireland, as well those of private foundation as those which have been founded and endowed by the Crown, or established and confirmed by the authority of Parliament, or for the maintenance and support of which any sum or sums of money have been at any time granted by Parliament, or been devised or bequeathed by private persons, or in any manner granted or appropriated, excepting such only as were thereafter mentioned. The Amending Act (sec. 11.) extended all the powers of the Commissioners to all schools of the nature and description mentioned in the original Act, which might be thereafter at any time founded, endowed, or erected. The excepting clause in the original Act (53 Geo. III., cap. 107, sec. 2), provided as to public schools, that none of the schools on the foundation of Erasmus Smith, nor the Protestant Charter Schools, nor any parochial school established under the Act 23 Hen. VIII., cap. 15, nor any establishment for the purposes of education under the control of visitors appointed by Act of Parliament or charter, should be deemed subject to the jurisdiction of the Commissioners, and the same Act (sec. 15) exempted from their power to visit and regulate schools of private foundation and endowment, all "private schools supported by the voluntary occasional contributions of private individuals, and which have no settled or permanent funds or endowments," and also, "all schools of private foundation for the education of persons professing any religion or religious persuasion other than that of the United Church of England and Ireland." With these exceptions, all the Endowed Schools in Ireland were placed under the regulation and superintendence of the Commissioners.

The powers expressly conferred upon the Commissioners were (53 George III., cap. 107, sec. 5) to hold lands for the purposes of the Act; (sec. 9), to visit the endowed schools either in person or by deputies, to hold visitations of the said schools, and at such visitations to administer oaths, and do all other acts appertaining to the office of visitors respectively relating to such schools, and for that purpose to repair to any such school, or to any other necessary or convenient place or places, to summon and examine witnesses on oath or otherwise, to call for all vouchers and other documents whatsoever, and to examine and inquire into all matters whatsoever which the said visitors should deem requisite and necessary.

The Commissioners were further empowered (sec. 10) by writing to depute and appoint one or more person or persons for them, and in their stead, to visit any of the said schools, and every such deputy was to have the same rights and powers in every instance as the Commissioners themselves, and was directed at every such visitation to cause his proceedings to be entered in a book to be kept for that purpose by the master of each school, and to lay an attested copy of the same before the Commissioners at their first meeting after his return from such visitation, and to report to the Commissioners such other matters relating to the state and condition of the said schools, or any of them, as he should think necessary to be reported, whereupon it should be lawful for the Commissioners to make such orders and adopt such measures as they should judge proper or necessary with regard to each of the said schools respectively, provided that in case of misconduct of the master, under-master, or usher of any school deserving deprivation, notice should be given to the person charged, and to the trustee or trustees of the schools, and in case of deprivation, if for three months thereafter the person or persons to whom the appointment belonged should fail to appoint a proper successor to the person deprived, the Commissioners should themselves proceed to appoint a fit and proper successor, who should not be subject to be removed unless with their consent.

As to the estates of the seven Royal Schools of Armagh, Dunganon, Eniskillen, Raphoe, Cavan, Banagher, and Carysfort, it was recited that it was necessary for the well-ordering of the several schools that the Commissioners should have full power over, and the entire disposal of, the rents and profits of all the lands, and all the said lands were vested in the Commissioners and their successors for ever, and it was enacted (sec. 11) that the rents and profits should from time to time be received by such agent or agents as the Commissioners should appoint, and should be paid and applied by the orders of the Commissioners for and towards the maintenance and support of the masters of the said several schools, and for such other purposes as the Commissioners were under the Act directed and empowered to provide for and carry into effect for the benefit of the said schools.

The Commissioners were empowered to invest all sums of money belonging to any of the said schools in Government Funds and Securities, and the application of the issue and profits of all funds or estates applicable to the support of each and every, or any of such schools, was prescribed as follows:—

First.—Such share and proportion as the Commissioners should think proper to be paid and applied to and for the use and benefit of the schoolmaster for the time being.

Secondly.—Such other share or proportion, or shares or proportions, as the Commissioners should think proper, to be applied to the sole use and benefit of such one or more under master or under masters as should appear to the Commissioners to be necessary for any such school.

Thirdly.—Out of the issues and profits remaining after payment of the salaries of the masters, such yearly or other sums as should be deemed necessary for the purpose, to be applied in or towards the purchasing, procuring, building, enlarging, repairing, or furnishing the school-house, together with grounds, houses, and other appurtenances and accommodations necessary or useful for or towards the proper keeping of a school therein, and, if any residue should remain, the Commissioners were empowered to apply it to the supporting, maintaining, and providing of such and so many free scholars, according to such arrangements, and in such sums, shares, and proportions as should be directed by any such order or orders, and for the endowment of such and so many exhibitions to Trinity College, to be held by such persons and under such regulations and restrictions, as to the Commissioners should seem proper.

53 Geo. III.,

As to schools of private foundation, (sec. 14), after reciting the conveyance of certain lands by Alderman John Preston for the schools of Navan and Ballyroan, the Commissioners were empowered, for the purposes of ascertaining the due management of the trust and the application of the funds arising out of the lands, from time to time to make such visitations, inquiries, and reports, and to direct that the issues and profits of the lands, and the overplus and accumulation thereof, should be applied in like manner as the Commissioners were empowered to do with respect to any other schools of private foundation under the Act, and the net rents were, in pursuance of the grant, directed to be paid in the proportion of four sixteenths to the King's Hospital, Ormsbottom, seven sixteenths to the use of the school at Navan, and five sixteenths to the use of the school of Ballyroan.

53 Geo. III.,

After reciting, (sec. 15), that there were in different parts of Ireland various other schools of private foundation and endowments, many of which were mentioned and specified in the 12th and 13th reports of the Commissioners of Enquiry appointed under the Act 46 Geo. III., cap. 122, and that some of the said schools were possessed of considerable estates in land and other property, with respect to the application of which for the purposes of the several schools, and to carry into effect the intentions of the founders, certain regulations might be needed, it was enacted that it should be lawful for the Commissioners, for the purpose of examining into the management of the funds of such private schools, and the due application of the same, to visit and regulate all such schools of private foundation and endowment in Ireland as were endowed and supported by the bequests or donations of the founders thereof or assisted by any Parliamentary grant from time to time, excepting the classes of schools already mentioned.

In case of the disobedience of any order or regulation of the Commissioners, or of any visitors acting under their authority, made respecting the said schools of private foundation, the Commissioners were empowered to proceed by summary petition in Chancery for, and to obtain, such order and direction respecting any such endowed school in Ireland of private foundation as should seem fitting and expedient, and in all cases in which it should appear that the mismanagement of any such endowed school of private foundation, or the misapplication of its funds and revenues, were so great as to render the managers or trustees unfit to be continued, the Court was empowered to remove them from the trusts, and to direct that the execution of the trusts should devolve upon and be vested in the Commissioners or be otherwise provided for, which Commissioners, or other persons on whom the trusts should be decreed to devolve, should in that case have the funds and revenues, direction and management, of the schools vested in them.

53 Geo. III.,
c. 107, sec.

The Act (sec. 18) enacted "That the schoolmasters of the several Endowed Schools shall continue to be respectively appointed in the same manner . . . as if this Act had not passed," and the appointment of under masters was given to the head masters with the consent of the persons in whom their own appointment was vested.

53 Geo. III.,
c. 107, sec.
19.

Powers were given for obtaining advances on the security of school property out of the Consolidated Fund for purchasing, building, enlarging, or repairing school-houses.

53 Geo. III.,
c. 107, sec.

As to Diocesan schools, the Commissioners were empowered (sec. 23), with the consent of the Lord Lieutenant, to unite two or more dioceses into one district, and to direct that the free schools of such two or more dioceses should be consolidated into one; the appointment (sec. 23) of the schoolmaster for the united district to be made in rotation, and (sec. 24) the Lord Lieutenant and Privy Council to appoint what provision, stipend, or salary should be paid to the schoolmaster of any diocesan or district school, and what portion of such salary should be raised in each diocese of any district where such district school should be established; one-third part of all which sums of money should be levied on, and paid by, the bishops, the remaining two third parts to be levied on, and paid by, the parsons, vicars, prebendaries, and other ecclesiastical persons, by equal contribution according to the values of their benefices.

53 Geo. III.,
c. 107, sec.

The original Act further contained (sec. 13) leasing powers, (sec. 26) powers to convey lands for the site of diocesan or district schools, (sec. 27) powers to the Commissioners to purchase houses or lands fit for school-houses, and for the habitations of schoolmasters, in such situations as they should deem proper and convenient, and also to exchange such lands, (sec. 29) and powers (repealed by the Amending Act) to the Grand Jury of any county to present for purchasing, providing, building, or repairing any diocesan or district school, or a dwelling-house for the master thereof.

The amending Act 3 Geo. IV., cap. 79, so far as it affected property, (sec. 8), enabled the Commissioners, if they should think fit, to cause the residue of the funds of any of the seven Royal schools, after defraying the expenses of the master, under-masters, and all enlargements and improvements of and in the school-house, grounds, appurtenances, and furniture which should be thought necessary, to be applied to, and in the like maintenance and improvements of, any other or others of the said schools whose funds might stand in need of such aid.

It would therefore appear to have been the intention of these Acts as well to place a large number of the Endowed Schools of Ireland under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners, as also to make that jurisdiction effectual to secure the proper management and the due regulation from time to time of the schools and of their property.

We were, however, informed by the Secretary of the Commissioners that the want of the power to appoint and pay inspectors, who should constantly inspect and report upon all endowed schools, had been always felt, and had "to a great extent paralysed almost every function" of the Board. As authorities that the Board had not this most necessary power, the Secretary referred to the statement of the Select Committee of the House of Commons, which took evidence on Irish Foundation Schools in the year 1838, and to the opinion of Mr. Stephens, expressed in his letter to the Secretary of State, already mentioned.

The means provided for carrying out the objects of the Act were dependent upon the discretion of the Executive. The original Act (sec. 4) enacted that it should be lawful for the Commissioners from time to time to appoint a secretary with a salary not exceeding £700, and also such other subordinate officer or officers as they should think proper, for the carrying into execution the purposes of the Act, and to certify to the Lord Lieutenant such sum or sums of money as they should deem adequate to defray the expense of said officers, and the incidental expenses of the Board; whereupon it should be lawful for the Lord Lieutenant to direct the High Treasurer to issue out of the Consolidated Fund such sum or sums of money to defray the expenses of said officers, and the incidental expenses of the Board, as to the Lord Lieutenant should seem fitting and convenient.

By the Act 17 & 18 Vict., cap. 94, the charges and expenses of the Commissioners were transferred from the Consolidated Fund to the moneys annually voted by Parliament, but no change was made in the expenditure authorized.

After the passing of that Act, the course of proceeding for obtaining the funds required by the Commissioners was that they should certify such sums as they deemed adequate to the Lord Lieutenant, who, on approving the application, was enabled to take the necessary steps to have the amount placed by the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury upon the annual estimates. The first step necessary to obtain any sum required has always rested with the Commissioners themselves.

The body charged with the execution of the Acts 53 Geo. III., cap. 107, and 3 Geo. IV., cap. 79, was composed of the following nineteen persons:—Nine ex-officio members, viz.:—The Lord Primate, the Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of Dublin, the Archbishop of Tuam, the Archbishop of Cashel, the Lord Chief Justice, the Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, and "the member chosen to serve in Parliament for the said Trinity College in Dublin now and hereafter for the time being;" and ten Commissioners to be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, and removable at his pleasure, viz.:—four of the Bishops of Ireland, one for each province, and six other "proper and discreet persons," of whom two should be usually resident in the city of Dublin. Three Commissioners, of whom the Lord Primate, the Lord Chancellor, or any of the Archbishops of Dublin, Tuam, or Cashel, the Chief Justice, the Provost, or the Chief Secretary should be one, formed a quorum.

After the number of representatives of the University of Dublin in Parliament was increased to two, there being some doubt as to whether both were entitled to act as Commissioners of Education, neither was summoned, and upon the reduction of the Archbishops of Cashel and Tuam to Bishops the ex-officio members were further reduced to six, as the Bishops of those sees have not been summoned to the Board.

Upon the reduction in the number of ecclesiastical provinces, the number of Bishops appointed by the Lord Lieutenant also appears to have been reduced to two. Upon the passing of the Irish Church Act, the appointment of Bishops to be Commissioners appears to have been discontinued, and under the same statute, on the determination of the offices existing at its commencement, two of the ex-officio Commissioners, the Lord Primate and the Archbishop of Dublin, will cease to belong to the Board, except, possibly, for the management of private endowments; it will thus be reduced to four ex-officio, and six appointed members, but the presence of one ex-officio member will still remain necessary to the constitution of a quorum.

In 1869 the Board was composed of the six ex-officio members, together with the Most Rev. Samuel Butcher, D.D., Bishop of Meath; the Right Rev. Charles Graves, D.D., Bishop of Limerick; the Right Hon. Mr. Justice FitzGerald; Sir Robert Shaw, bart.; William Brooke, Esq., Master in Chancery; the Rev. John Gray Porter; Acheson Lyle, Esq., and the Rev. Lowry E. Berkeley. The Rev. W. B. Kirkpatrick was soon afterwards appointed in the place of Sir Robert Shaw, deceased, and the number of Commissioners was in 1876 reduced by the death of the Bishop of Meath, to whom no successor was appointed.

It was proved before us that the attendance of the members of the Board has been very irregular, that difficulty has been experienced in securing the presence of a quorum even at the stated monthly meetings, and that irregularities in the mode of transacting the business have arisen in consequence. These evils which, though in a lesser degree, had existed and been pointed out at the time of the former Commission, seem to have been since aggravated by the omission to fill vacancies which have arisen on the Board.

Acheson Lyle, Esq., having died in 1870, the vacancy thus caused was not filled up; and when a second vacancy arose upon the death of the Rev. J. G. Porter the Secretary, Dr. Kyle, by letter dated 29th September, 1873, called the attention of the Under Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant to the fact, and also mentioned that no appointment had ever been made to the vacancy caused by the death of Mr Lyle.

Evid.,
1204-5.

No appointment has been made to either vacancy, and it does not even appear that any reply was received to the letter of Dr. Kyle, but on 5th April, 1875, a letter was sent by the Under Secretary to Dr. Kyle informing him of the resignation of the Right Hon. William Brooke, which caused a third vacancy.

Evid.,
1206, 903.

On 31st May, 1875, the Rev. John H. Jellett, D.D., Senior Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, was appointed, as "a person usually resident in Dublin," to be a Commissioner in the room of the Right Hon. William Brooke, but no other appointment has since been made, and, therefore, for upwards of seven years two vacancies have been permitted to exist, reducing the number of appointed members on the Board to five, and the total number of members to eleven. By examining the Secretary's Minute Book we ascertained that twenty-eight meetings of the Board were summoned during the two years 1877-8 (taken as the two complete years next preceding our inquiry), and that the attendances were recorded as follows:—

999.

The Lord Primate attended once (29th November, 1877).

The Lord Chancellor attended once (1st April, 1878).

The Archbishop of Dublin did not attend, and Mr. Fleming did not remember any attendance of any Archbishop of Dublin.

The Lord Chief Justice attended three times in 1877, and did not attend in 1878.

The Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant did not attend, and Sir William Somerville was the last holder of that office who had attended.

The Provost of Trinity College attended twenty-four times. He is the only ex-officio member who has usually attended, and, therefore, the possibility of forming a quorum practically depends upon his presence.

Of the appointed members the Bishop of Limerick attended once in 1877 and twice in 1878.

Mr. Justice FitzGerald attended ten times.

The Rev. W. B. Kirkpatrick attended twenty-four times.

The Rev. Lowry E. Berkeley attended seventeen times. He does not reside in Dublin, and his travelling expenses are paid as part of the incidental expenses of the Board, out of the moneys voted by Parliament.

The Rev. J. H. Jellett attended twice in 1877, and six times in 1878.

Letter, Dr.
p. 11.

Many of the Commissioners, especially the ex-officio members, have other avocations of great importance, and cannot give much attention to the business of the Board: several are also members of other Boards mentioned in our Report.

Evid.,
1001-8.
1002-9.

During the year 1877, on six days fixed for meetings of the Board, viz.:—18th January, 29th March, 28th June, 26th July, 27th September, 25th October, no quorum attended, and in that year the annual report to Parliament was signed and sealed by five members of the Board separately, without having been laid before or considered by any legal meeting.

During the year 1878, on 9th May, 26th September, and 21st November, no quorum attended.

On several occasions the cheques necessary to pay quarterly salaries and stipends and other payments of large amount were signed by two Commissioners, and, in accordance with a practice adopted on occasions of that kind, Dr. Kyle subsequently sent the cheque-book to a third Commissioner for signature at his own house. Other important business was similarly transacted; thus the vouchers for payments were compared by one Commissioner while in vain "waiting the arrival of other Commissioners," and "the case of a Royal Scholar" was considered by two Commissioners, but a third who arrived shortly after their departure "fully went into it and approved the decision of the other members."

It abundantly appeared that the members of the Board, as at present constituted, did not attend with sufficient regularity to ensure the due despatch of their business; that the ex-officio members (except the Provost of Trinity College) could not be relied on to attend at all, and that though the attendance of almost all the appointed members was also irregular, and had been made the subject of observation in 1858, no effort was made on the part of the Government, by filling up the number, exercising the power of removal, substituting persons able and willing to act for those who failed to attend, or otherwise, to secure the due performance of the functions of the Board.

Dr. Kyle was, in February, 1855, appointed Secretary of the Commissioners, and continued to hold that office until his death, which took place suddenly in March, 1879. He had been requested to attend and give evidence before us, and had signified his willingness to do so, but his death, which occurred very shortly before the day fixed for his examination, deprived us of the assistance of his long experience and intimate knowledge in our investigation of the conduct of the business of his Board.

At the commencement of our inquiries we had received from Dr. Kyle a prompt offer to supply us with all information in his possession, and he had permitted our Secretary to attend at his office, and had produced and explained to him all the books and other documents which were called for.

After the death of Dr. Kyle, Mr. Thomas H. Fleming, who has for upwards of forty years acted as clerk and accountant for the Commissioners, attended before us, produced the books of the Board, and any other documents which were required, and gave evidence of much importance as to the working of the Board during the long period of his connexion with it. In the course of his examination, which extended over three days, many serious matters of observation transpired, indicating difficulties, defects, and irregularities in the performance of the functions of the Board, and, during our inquiry, many witnesses examined as to particular schools and endowments made grave allegations of inaction, neglect, inefficiency, and mismanagement, against the Commissioners. We caused prints of all evidence relating to the Commissioners to be from time to time sent to Mr. Arnold F. Graves, their present Secretary, and, before closing our public inquiry, we addressed the following letter to him:—

'Endowed Schools Commission; Office, Four Courts,
Dublin, 23rd day of January, 1880.

SIR,—I am directed by the Endowed Schools Commissioners to call the attention of the Commissioners of Education to the evidence which has been given before this Commission with reference to schools under the management and control of your Commissioners, and to inquire whether any of your Commissioners desire to appear before this Commission to give evidence in reply to, or in explanation of, such former evidence.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES CREED MERRITT, Secretary."

Our Secretary received the following reply from Mr. Graves:—

DEAR SIR,—I have been directed by the Commissioners of Education to beg that you will point out to them the particular matters of school management and control, upon which evidence has been given before your Commissioners, requiring reply or explanation from the Commissioners of Education.

"The Commissioners of Education in Ireland."

To this letter we sent the following reply:—

"Endowed Schools Commission, Four Courts, Dublin, 28th February, 1880.

DEAR SIR,—In reply to your letter of 14th February, 1880, requesting me to point out to the Commissioners of Education, the particular matters of school management and control, upon which evidence has been given before this Commission, requiring reply or explanation from the Commissioners of Education, I am directed by the Commissioners to say that they do not think they can with propriety or advantage authorize me to make the selection you ask from the evidence taken before them.

I have already furnished you with the evidence so far as it was then printed; I send you herewith the continuation; I shall forward the remainder as soon as it can be procured; and I shall be glad, at any time, to send you any additional copies of the evidence, which your Commissioners may require.

I am directed to annex a list of the names of the several witnesses, who have given evidence relating to the Commissioners of Education, and to the schools and estates under their management, with references to the pages of the printed Appendix, at which the evidence of each such witness may be found, so far as it has been printed. You will observe that this evidence, throughout, contains important testimony upon many subjects affecting the Commissioners of Education, which may seem to them to require reply or explanation.

My Commissioners feel that they ought not, in justice to the witnesses or to the Commissioners themselves, to attempt to specify any particular matters in the evidence, on which their Report must be based, as exceptionally calling for notice on the part of the Commissioners of Education, but I am to add that my Commissioners will be glad to receive from the Commissioners of Education the fullest information which they may be good enough to supply, as well upon their general system of management as upon the particular matters to which individual witnesses have already directed attention.

The Commissioners propose to hold public courts during the first fortnight of April, and would be then prepared to receive any evidence which your Commissioners may desire to give. If you can send me timely notice, every exertion shall be made to consult the wishes and conveniences of your Board in making the necessary arrangements.

I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,

J. C. MURKITT, Secretary.

A. F. Graves, Esq., Secretary to the Commissioners of Education,

Our Secretary was subsequently informed that a further communication to us was in course of preparation, and we delayed closing our inquiry till we should have received it. At length we received the following letter:—

"The Commissioners of Education in Ireland, 17th day of May, 1880
28, Clare-street, Dublin.

SIR,—In answer to your letter, I am directed by the Commissioners of Education to inform you that it is not the intention of any of the members of this Board to present themselves for examination before your Commissioners.

The Board have, in the first instance, to refer you to the Report of 1878-79, in which they pointed out that, owing to recent legislation, several ex-officio Commissionerships cannot be filled up.

Since the Irish Church Act, there are no successors in law to the present holders of the offices of Archbishop of Armagh, and Archbishop of Dublin. For the same reason the Bishop of Meath is no longer a member of the Board. They also called attention to a legal difficulty which prevents either member for the University of Dublin attending the Board. The Board is composed entirely of persons having other avocations of great public importance, and this especially applies to the ex-officio members. Much time and attention being required for the discharge of those other duties, the members of the Board cannot be expected to be all present upon every occasion, or to have that intimate acquaintance with every detail of the proceedings of the Board, which would enable any individual member to be in a position to answer all which your Commission may desire to be informed upon. But the Commissioners have desired me, as their Secretary, to reply to any special inquiries made by your Commission, and to give whatever information our records afford.

The Endowed Schools Commissioners of 1857 in their Report pointed out the following as the chief defects in the management of the schools in connexion with this Board:—

1. The want of efficient visitation and inspection.
2. The inadequate provision for the admission of free scholars.
3. The non-promulgation of rules for the guidance of masters.
4. The non-adaptation of the course of instruction to the educational wants of the middle classes.
5. The want of properly trained masters, animated in the discharge of their duties by the prospect of promotion, and of retiring pensions as the reward of faithful services.

With regard to the management of their estates, the following evils are pointed out:—

1. The non-inspection of estates by the Commissioners.
2. The want of uniformity in the management of their estates.
3. The accumulation of arrears.
4. The want of tenantry schools.
5. The custom which existed on some of the Commissioners' estates of serving notices to quit on tenants who were not in arrear.
6. The unnecessary attendance and exorbitant charges of the solicitor to the Board.

These evils of school and estate management may be divided into—
1st. Those which could only be remedied by legislation;
2nd. Those which it was in the power of the Commissioners to remedy.

With regard to the former, the Commissioners of 1857 use these words:—

"The system of supervision and control over educational endowments requires to be placed on a broader basis, and modified in such a manner as to admit of advantage being taken of the experience gained within the last forty years."

They then make, amongst others, the following recommendations, with a view to legislation:—

1. That it was essential to establish a system of efficient periodical inspection by a well-trained and adequately-paid inspector, or, if necessary, several inspectors.
2. That the Board should have power to redistribute the revenues, to consolidate or divide the schools, and to remove them to different localities.
3. That the Commissioners should, so far as it is consistent with the existing rights of private patronage, have the appointment of head masters of schools vested in them, and should, in addition to this, possess a large measure of control over, and a power of dismissing, the teachers in such schools for inefficiency or other sufficient cause shown, although no actual misconduct might exist or could be proved.
4. That they should be empowered to regulate the salaries of the teachers and assistant masters in such schools, to promote them, and in case of faithful service, to grant retiring pensions.
5. That the Commissioners should have authority to regulate the course of instruction in all schools within their jurisdiction.
6. That the Commissioners should be empowered to make regulations as to the admission of free pupils into Endowed Schools vested in them.
7. That the Board should have power to make agricultural leases for twenty-one years, and building leases for long terms; and,
8. That the accounts of the Board should be audited at least once a year by a proposed Board of Audit in Dublin.

In reference to the management of the Diocesan Schools by the Commissioners of Education, they use the following words:

"We have noticed the evil effects produced in Diocesan Schools by the system of divided responsibility, under which the Commissioners, though nominally charged with the care of them, neither have the right of appointing, promoting, or superannuating the masters, nor possess adequate powers of providing for the due maintenance of the teachers, and the repairs of the school-houses. To a considerable extent, therefore, the gradual decline and present inefficient state of most of these schools, the diminution in the attendance at some of them, and the total cessation of others, may be attributed to causes for the operation of which the Commissioners of Education were not directly responsible."

It will be seen from these extracts that the defects in school management pointed out by the Commissioners of 1857 are admitted by them to have arisen from defects in legislation. The one grave exception they make is the non-inspection of schools by this Board, which they attribute to loaches on their part. In this view, however, neither the late Mr. Archibald John Stephens, q.c., one of the Commissioners, an English barrister of great experience and extensive practice, nor counsel consulted by the Commissioners of Education, concurred. In his letter to Sir George Grey Mr. Stephens expressed his reasons for dissenting from the Report of the Commissioners, and at page 8 he writes as follows:—

"I can find no power given over any school but visitatorial powers, or powers to regulate the management of the school funds, or powers to fill up vacant masterships, if trustees neglect to make appointments thereto.

"The majority of the Commissioners do not seem to be aware that visitation is for the exercise of jurisdiction, not for 'directly superintending education.' Thus, the visitors of Trinity College, Dublin, have no power to go in and 'directly superintend' the education. In statute 3 Geo IV., c. 79, s. 8, power is given to the Commissioners of Education 'to hold visitation of any school in Ireland, at such place in the city of Dublin as they shall respectively appoint, and at such visitation to use and exercise all and every the rights, powers, authorities, and privileges, which they are respectively empowered by the said Act to use and exercise at any visitation.' These powers were for the exercise of jurisdiction, not for 'directly superintending education.'

"But statutes 33 Geo. III., c. 107, and 3 Geo. IV., c. 79, do not give the Commissioners any power of inspection; and consequently inspectors appointed by them would not have any right or power to inspect; and expenses so incurred could not be paid out of the Consolidated Fund. While I concur in the opinion that the powers of the Commissioners have not in all respects been exercised as they should have been, I cannot concur in the censure passed upon them in the Report for not having exercised 'large educational powers' which they did not possess, such powers not being included in the powers of visitors; or in the powers to regulate the management of the school funds; or in the power to fill up vacant masterships, if trustees neglect to make appointments thereto."

The weight due to the recommendations of the Royal Commissioners naturally led to the general expectation, both on the part of the Commissioners and also of the public, that legislation to carry them into effect, both as regards the power and constitution of the Board, would take place. In such legislation the other matters, respecting which the disagreement of opinion existed as to the construction of the statutes, it was expected would be dealt with, and any questions on the subject terminated by express words defining the position of the Board.

The disadvantageous position in which the Commissioners were placed, and the doubts raised as to their authority, have induced them from time to time to express, in their Reports to successive Lords Lieutenants, opinions in favour of legislation in connection with this Commission. They refer in particular to the Reports for the years 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, and 1877. In the Report for 1869-70, they submitted propositions to facilitate the proceedings of the Board at their meetings. They recommended that, except in cases of private patronage, the Commissioners should have power to appoint, remove, and superannuate masters and teachers of the schools, and appoint and pay Inspectors of schools; that University Exhibitions should not be confined to particular schools, and that the Board should have power to apply the funds of all public schools for Exhibitions in connexion with any schools they might select; also power to apply the funds of the largely endowed Royal Schools to assist other Royal Schools, to remove schools of public endowment to whatever localities seemed most advantageous to the public; and, lastly, that the Board ought to have authority to determine the course of instruction, the periods at which it should be given, the times of vacation, the fees to be paid for instruction, and, at their discretion, to compel gratuitous teaching to free pupils. For all these matters they pointed out that legislation was requisite. In the Report for 1870-71 they called attention to their former Report, and, in addition to the recommendations contained in it, advised that the Board should have power given to it to appoint and pay Inspectors and visitors. In the Report for 1874-75 they called attention to the fact that their suggestions had produced no results, and that matters remained in the same unsatisfactory state as heretofore.

In the Report for 1877-8 the Board again recapitulated their former recommendations and called attention to the effect of the Irish Church Act upon Diocesan schools, and the necessity of legislation to determine what was to be done with the moneys arising from the sale of the houses when they could legally be sold, and as to the houses themselves in cases where the nature of the trusts under which they are held prevent a sale by the Board.

In the Report of 1878-9 the Commissioners called attention to their previous Reports and recommendations, and added further observations; they stated that at present they had no effectual means of ascertaining the general efficiency of a school, recommended that power should be given them to employ, at a proper salary, an inspector, whose duty should comprise the periodical examination of the pupils in the several schools, and a report of the result to the Commissioners. They further stated that, under existing arrangements, the Commissioners can have no effectual control over the masters of the schools under their charge, that they had no voice in the original selection of these gentlemen, and although, under certain circumstances, they do possess the power of removing a master, this power would appear to be limited to cases of proved misconduct, which are, of course, very rare. With the case of inefficiency, which is likely to be much more common, they considered that they would not be enabled to deal, and that they could neither prevent the appointment of an inefficient master, nor remove him when appointed. They consequently recommended that they should have a power of recommendation to all appointments of masters and teachers, with an absolute power of removal in case of proved inefficiency. They next advert to the want of power to pension aged, infirm, and consequently incapable masters, and recommended that such power of pensioning masters, in cases where their funds enable them to do so, should be given by legislation.

With respect to the number of free scholars to be educated in the Royal Schools they pointed out that this appears to be left to the discretion of the master, and has varied considerably from time to time, and that this also should be placed under the control of the Commissioners. They also recommended that they should also have the power of arranging the conditions on which free pupils are to be admitted, whether by competitive examination or otherwise.

The Commissioners also, in the said Report, called attention to the omission in existing legislation to provide, after his death, for the exercise of the right now vested in the Lord Primate, of appointing the masters of Armagh and Dungannon Schools, to which, in consequence of the provisions of the Irish Church Act, 1849, the next Archbishop of Armagh would not succeed. And, as to the constitution of the Board, they called attention to matters deserving observation, some of which are also alluded to in the commencement of this letter.

Notwithstanding all these representations no attention was paid to the matter, and whatever admitted or suggested defects existed in 1858 still continue to exist.

With respect to the management of their estates, the fact that the estates of the Commissioners are situated in different parts of Ireland, whose usages and customs of estate management vary greatly, of itself renders uniformity of management impracticable, even if advisable. The Commissioners consider that, by appointing as their local agents men of the highest respectability and experience, to whom of necessity considerable discretion must be confided, to whom they communicate their wishes on all matters of importance, and from whom they receive reports and advice, the interests of their estates and of their tenants are best served. Some of the estates were formerly difficult to manage, especially that at Raphoe, except in this instance, arrears have not accumulated since the Report of the Commission in 1837.

At the present time the population on the Raphoe estate is slightly in excess of what it was when the Report of 1837 was made. The Commissioners of Education do not consider that it would be expedient for a department in connexion with the State to enforce a system of compulsory emigration, without which they can never expect to receive from this property a rent equivalent to its full letting value, or even prevent the small tenants from falling into arrear during a succession of bad harvests.

The insufficient grant for travelling expenses has made it impossible for the Commissioners to inspect their estates.

The Commissioners' agents, with one exception, report that there is proper school accommodation for the tenants on all their estates. Since the Report of the Endowed Schools Commission, published in 1838, a tenantry school has been built on the Dungannon estate, and is now largely attended. At Carran, there is no tenantry school, but our agent reports that there is ample school accommodation in the neighbourhood. At Keshkilleen, the Commissioners were anxious to provide their tenantry with improved school accommodation. They proposed to remove the present non-vested National School (as Carran, on this property), which is badly situated, and too small, to a better site, and there to build and subsidise a school to be placed under the National Board as a vested school. This proposition received such opposition in the neighbourhood, that the Commissioners have deemed it prudent for the present to abandon it.

The custom of serving notices to quit on tenants has long ceased to exist on any of the Commissioners' estates.

The Selector to the Board does not attend its meetings, except when specially summoned. His charges are moderate and uniform.

With respect to an audit of accounts, the Commissioners beg to refer to the proposal of the Endowed Schools Commissioners of 1837, "that the accounts of the Commissioners of Education should be audited by the proposed Board of Audit in Dublin." This recommendation the Legislature have not thought fit to carry out.

In conclusion, the Commissioners desire to express their adherence to the recommendations made in the Report of 1838-9.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

To J. C. Meredith, Esq., LL.D., Secretary,
Endowed Schools Commission, Four Courts

ARNOLD F. GRAVER, Secretary."

One of the Commissioners, the Rev. Lowry E. Berkeley, having been appointed, with the Rev. W. Todd Martin, to appear before us on behalf of "The General Assembly's Committee," we had appointed May 19th, 1880, to receive his evidence, and we hoped to have had then an opportunity of obtaining from him some further information, but on the day named, our Secretary received the following letter from him:—

"Belfast, 18th May, 1880.

SIR,—Owing to the state of my health, I cannot be in Dublin to-morrow. Besides, for various reasons, I am not now disposed to give evidence before the Commissioners. Thanking you for your attention,

I am, your obedient servant,

J. C. Meredith, Esq.

L. E. BERKELEY."

It is, therefore, to be remembered that in preparing our Report upon "the Commissioners of Education," we have not had the advantage of hearing any evidence on the part of the Board, except that given by their Accountant, but we take their letter of 17th May, 1880, as containing a reference to the most important matters concerning the Board to which they have deemed it necessary to direct attention.

The proceedings of the Board are recorded in a Book which was kept by the Secretary, but not read or signed at the meetings of the Board. The attention of the Commissioners was, therefore, not directed to the terms in which the Secretary recorded their proceedings, and though the Secretary's Book took the place of a Minute Book its contents are not authenticated in the manner usually adopted. No chairman was formally appointed, or recorded as presiding, at the meetings.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, drew attention to the disregard to the preservation of foundation deeds and other documents of the same nature, relating to properties vested in the Commissioners of Education, or placed under their supervision. Since the date of that Report nothing was done to remedy this defect beyond getting a list from Mr. Fotherston, their solicitor, on his retirement, of a number of leases and other documents which he then handed over. The accountant did not know whether they had got the title deeds of all the properties; such deeds and documents as they had were, at the date of our inquiry, in a tin box at 8, Clare-street, which house belonged to Dr. Kyle's representatives. The key was in the lock, where it was usually kept during Dr. Kyle's lifetime; there was no strong room or safe; there had been no checking of the muniments of title since Mr. Fotherston gave up the papers, and there was no list by which the documents of title could be checked except the voucher for those which he gave up, and which did not include all the title deeds.

For some years past the annual estimate for the expenses of the Board was uniformly £540, viz.:—Secretary's salary, £450; travelling expenses (being those of Mr. Berkeley), £15; and incidental expenses, £175. The Commissioners did not appoint any subordinate officer, and did not certify any sum to defray the expense of such officers: of the sum voted for incidental expenses, £20 was appropriated to law costs, and £5 to postage; the residue, £150, was paid to the Secretary, who, in return, provided an office and board-room in his own house, employed an accountant (Mr. Fleming), and a messenger, and supplied stationery and other requisites. Mr. Fleming was appointed nearly forty years ago at £50 a year by Dr. Kyle, who, by degrees, voluntarily raised his salary without any increase of the public grant, and he ultimately received from Dr. Kyle £120 per annum.

In 1870 Mr. Fleming petitioned the Board to take his position into consideration. On 25th November, 1870, it was resolved—

"That this Board has no power to comply with the prayer of Mr Fleming's memorial for an increase of his salary, he being simply the clerk of the Secretary, and no officer of the Board."

It was about the same time ordered—

"That the Secretary do write to the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant stating that the members of this Board, having on several occasions had under their consideration the amount of the allowance (£150 per annum) made thirty-five years ago for the incidental expenses of this Board, are unanimously of opinion that this sum is now wholly inadequate for that purpose, and that the Chief Secretary be informed that the necessity for bringing this matter before the attention of the Government arises from the fact that this Board has no power to apply any of the funds under its control for such a purpose; that the recommendation of the Board is that the sum of £150 should be increased to £300 per annum, and its application should be placed wholly under the management and at the disposition of this Board."

This resolution was transmitted to the Chief Secretary by Dr. Kyle with the following letter, dated 28th December, 1870—

"Sir,—I have the honour to transmit by order of the Commissioners, a copy of a resolution adopted at a recent meeting of their Board; and I was directed to express their hope that you would use your best influence to have their recommendation therein contained carried into effect. And I was further ordered to state to you the readiness of the Commissioners individually to wait upon and to give to you personally any information in their power in reference to the subject, in case you should think fit to direct any of them to do so."

The reply received from T. H. Burke, Esq., the Under Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, was as follows—

"Dublin Castle, 4th January, 1871.

Gentlemen,—In reference to your letter of the 28th ult., forwarding a copy of a resolution adopted by the Commissioners of Education in Ireland on the subject of the allowance for incidental expenses of the Board, I have to request that I may be furnished, for the information of the Lord Lieutenant, with an explanatory statement in writing on the subject, such as can be forwarded to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury."

Evid.

The statement asked for was never sent, there was no further correspondence with the Government on the subject, and the letter of the Under Secretary was not even acknowledged.

This was the only instance appearing in evidence before us in which an application was made for increased resources with which to carry on the business or extend the efficiency of the Board, and it fell to the ground from the omission of the Commissioners to furnish to the Lord Lieutenant the explanatory statement required for the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, or to certify, as the Statute provided, that the sum demanded was necessary "for the carrying into execution the purposes of the Acts."

The Commissioners therefore appear never to have tested the sufficiency of their existing means of obtaining adequate funds, though the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, had suggested that they ought long ago to have done so.

"The Commissioners of Education in Ireland."

Notwithstanding the above-quoted resolution that the Board had no power so to apply any of the funds under its control, the property of the schools has since 1872 been annually charged with sums, amounting in 1878-9 to £170, for the same purpose which an increase of the Parliamentary Grant would have met. The proceedings leading to this result are recorded in the Secretary's Book.

Rep., p. 263.

On 13th January, 1871, the Secretary declined to prepare a reply to the letter of the Under Secretary, stating that the application for an increase of the sum granted militated against his own interests, and it was ordered—

Evid. 1064.

"That the Board be specially summoned for Friday, 20th January, 1871, especially to consider a statement to be made by the Commissioners in reply to Mr. Burke's letter, statement not to be prepared by the Secretary, but by Commissioners themselves."

Dr. Kirkpatrick undertook to prepare a draft answer, and, after adjournments, on 28th April, 1871—

Evid. 1069.

"Dr. Kirkpatrick read the draft letter which he had prepared as an answer to the letter of the Under Secretary. A long discussion ensued as to the reply to the Government letter and the powers of this Board. The Lord Chief Justice stated that he would fully consider the matter before the next meeting of the Commissioners, with a view to framing a reply to the letter of Mr. Burke, and for this purpose took away with him the Acts of Parliament."

At the subsequent meeting on 26th May, 1871—

Evid. 1070.

"The memorial of the Secretary's clerk and the former proceedings thereon were read by the Secretary. Dr. Kirkpatrick produced a paper which he had, as suggested, prepared as an answer to the letter of the Under Secretary. A long discussion arose, in which the Chief Justice, Judge FitzGerald, Master Brooke, and others, took part. The Chief Justice expressed a strong opinion that the Commissioners could, as in connexion with the management of the estates, and the troublesome and voluminous accounts connected therewith, make a grant as against each estate in proportion to its value, and thus augment the salary that the Secretary thought fit to grant to his clerk. Judge FitzGerald looked to the Acts of Parliament applying to this Board, and expressed considerable doubt on the matter. And it was ordered, notwithstanding a strong remonstrance from the Secretary, that the Secretary do himself, and not through the solicitor of the Board, prepare a case setting out the views of the Chief Justice, to be submitted to the Attorney-General for his opinion and advice. The Secretary urged that this course was not quite professional, nor within the course of his duties. Ultimately, it was ordered that the Secretary should draft a case, and send it to the Lord Chief Justice to revise, and subsequently to Judge FitzGerald, and then to the Attorney-General, with a proper fee for his opinion and advice."

On 27th October, 1871—

Evid. 1048-51.

"The Secretary read the case which, in obedience to the order of the Board, he had prepared and submitted to the Lord Chief Justice and Judge FitzGerald, and the opinion of the Attorney-General, which stated that he was of opinion that this Board could not apply their funds in remunerating the Secretary's clerk for additional work."

Nothing further was done until 26th January, 1872, when—

"Dr. Kirkpatrick brought forward the case of the Secretary's clerk with a view to some action being taken as to it. Much discussion arose. Former minutes and the opinion of the late Attorney-General was again read. The Lord Chief Justice urged that that opinion was most unsatisfactory, &c., &c. The Secretary was ordered to prepare a new case for the new Attorney-General as soon as possible, and in it to press the case as strongly in favour of the views of this Board as he could, as to the extra work in connexion with the estates; to send the case and opinion of the late Attorney-General along with the new case, hinting that it appeared that, perhaps, the late Attorney-General had not perfectly understood the case as put. The Secretary stated that he would use his best endeavours and diligence to carry out the orders of the Board."

On 23rd February, 1872—

Evid. 1052.

"The Secretary read the case and opinion of the late Attorney-General; also the opinion of the present Attorney-General, the Right Honourable Richard Dowse, on a new case submitted to him by the Secretary along with the case and opinion of the late Attorney-General, and an explanatory letter of the Secretary in reply to one from the present Attorney-General in reference to the case."

'QUEST.—In reference to this case, as stated, you are requested to state whether or not the Commissioners are precluded from making from time to time such casual and temporary allowances, not salary, as are herein suggested by them, and which they consider will be but equitable as regards the additional work imposed on the office, by their orders.'

'ANSWER.—I am of opinion that the Commissioners may, from time to time, make such payments to their clerk, not by way of salary, for any extra work done by him beyond that he is called upon to do as clerk, such work to be work with respect to the agency and management of their estates, and what would have to be done by some person, and paid for accordingly.'

(Signed). R. Dowse."

"The Commissioners of Education in Ireland"

"A very long discussion arose upon these documents and on the former minutes, &c., on this subject, and it was resolved, That in conformity with the opinion of the Attorney-General given upon the case submitted to him by directions of this Board, a grant of a sum of £100 be now made to the Secretary's clerk, in consequence of the extra labour thrown upon him and the office by the orders of the Board, in connection with the accounts and management of their estates, said grant to be charged rateably on the accounts of the estates, respectively, the grant being for the period intervening between the presentation of the clerk's memorial and the present date, the grant to be retrospective and for the time past."

From that date forward the accountant has received grants from the Commissioners which varied from time to time, and at the time of Dr. Kyle's death amounted to £170 a year. Dr. Kyle, on the first grant from the Commissioners, reduced his payments to the clerk out of the Parliamentary grant from £120 to £75 per annum, but no alteration was made in the amount annually voted by Parliament. The school funds were hardened with £170, Dr. Kyle was relieved by £43, and the accountant received an increase of £125. There was not at the time any change in the nature or amount of the accountant's duties, or any separation of either his time or occupation distinguishing the duties performed at the expense of the school estates from his other functions. The allowances made to him, and also the costs of the cases and opinions, were charged over the school accounts against the several estates in varying and broken sums, and were not certified to the Lord Lieutenant or Treasury.

The Secretary had informed the Board of his intention to reduce his payments to Mr. Fleming, and so long as he was held bound to pay for the other services and accommodation which he provided for the Commissioners, in return for the sum of £150 per annum granted for "incidental expenses," he could scarcely be expected to pay so much as £120 to the accountant, and, therefore, may have been justified in reducing that payment; but the "peculiar position" in which the Secretary was placed, being charged with the incidental expenses, including subordinate officers' salaries, in return for an annual sum of uniform amount, appears objectionable. In other instances also, expenses of the Board, including even the costs of the "Government Account Sheets," were thrown upon the property of the schools, and no rule was laid down as to what expenses should be charged to the Treasury, though the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, had adverted to the illegality of the payment, out of the endowments, of sums which ought to have been charged on the Consolidated Fund.

The Parliamentary grant was quite inadequate to defray the cost of carrying the Acts into efficient execution, but when the Commissioners refer to its insufficiency, it must be remembered that they never took the steps necessary to obtain any increase, but had recourse to the funds under their control for the sums required.

The Commissioners' books of account, which we examined, are regularly and neatly kept by Mr. Fleming, who since Dr. Kyle's death has been appointed accountant by the Commissioners. The books show separately the transactions affecting each school, with the assets and liabilities. The expenditure is vouched at the stated meetings of the Board, and this has occasionally been done by one or two Commissioners in the absence of a quorum. Down to the date of our inquiry there had been no regular or independent audit, and in some instances, for example in the remuneration of the accountant and the miscellaneous expenditure, sums had been charged against the estates by a rateable division calculated by the accountant and not otherwise checked. No reason appeared for the omission to employ a qualified auditor to examine the accounts at stated intervals, and the cost of such an examination would appear to be an incidental expense which might have been included in the application for the Parliamentary Grant.

From the accounts we found that it was the practice of the Board to allow very large sums of money to lie during long periods unproductive, in the Bank of Ireland, upon current account, and that the statutory trust for investment had been to a serious degree neglected. Thus, during the year 1878 (taken as the year next preceding our examination), the balance to the credit of the Commissioners never fell below £7,290, yet no interest was received, and no investment was made. This wasteful system was not explained, except by the secretary's answers to the inquiries of the Rev. Mr. Hutchinson as to the money in bank to the credit of the Clonmel school, from which it would appear that Dr. Kyle seemed to like to have a sum always lying by—to have a balance in reserve, as it were—and that the Commissioners could not take interest into consideration, as it would confuse their accounts.

With one remarkable and important exception, nothing was done by the Commissioners since 1857, in the way of inspection or visitation of the schools under their control. They annually forwarded from their office certain blank forms of return to be filled up by the masters of the schools to which they were sent. When these forms were returned they were filed, but we found no instance of any further action being taken upon them, or of any correspondence in reference to their contents. Even where the forms were returned by the post office nothing was done.

On 3rd June, 1875

"The necessity for regular inspection of the schools under the Board by persons competent to do so and to be paid by the Board, for inspection, having been brought under consideration, the Commissioners present were strongly of opinion that if possible paid competent inspectors should be appointed,

CHAIR, GARDNER and Co., Auditors.

The Secretary stated that hitherto it had always been considered that this Board had not the power to pay for inspection; that Government Commissioners had so reported; and that in several of the annual reports of this Board, it had called upon the Government to grant them power to appoint and pay inspectors. Ultimately, after a long discussion, Dr. Kirkpatrick gave notice that at the next meeting of the Board (on the 25th inst) he would move that an inspector be appointed who shall visit the schools under the superintendence of this Board, and whose remuneration shall be given from the funds of the school which shall be inspected."

A case was laid before the Attorney-General, and on 25th June, 1875:—

"The Secretary read the case and opinion which, pursuant to order had been obtained from the Right Honorable the Attorney-General as to the power of this Board to pay inspectors for inspecting 1160."

"The Commissioners of Education in Ireland."

the various schools under its charge. Copy opinion.—I have read the patent and the Acts above referred to, and my opinion is that the Commissioners have no power or authority to apply any portion of their funds for the purpose of remunerating persons deputed by them to inspect and report upon their schools. On the opinion of the Attorney-General having been read considerable discussion ensued, and it was ultimately resolved that, if appearing desirable that a visitation of the Armagh, Cavan, Dungannon, Enniskillen, and Raphoe Royal schools should take place, a visitor should, pursuant to the powers given by the Acts of Parliament to this Board, be appointed to visit the schools at the latter part of this year, if possible; and that, if the Rev. T. T. Gray, F.R.C.D., will undertake the duties of visitor (deputy), warrants, &c., be hereafter prepared for him, the secretary, in the meantime, to put himself in communication with Mr. Gray on this subject, and report the result to this Board.

App. E, p. 328.

The result was that Mr. Gray was employed to inspect the five Royal schools above mentioned, but apparently without any regular instrument of deputation. He, in 1876, furnished the Commissioners with a full report upon each school, which was produced to us (printed in Appendix E.), detailing the results of a careful examination of the scholars, describing the condition of the buildings, giving every particular necessary to ascertain the state of the schools, and containing suggestions for improvements and changes. For this service Mr. Gray was paid £100, which, notwithstanding the opinion of the Attorney-General, was charged rateably against the schools visited. No application was made to include the amount in the Parliamentary grant, nor up to the date of our enquiry was there any farther inspection or visitation.

Evid. 18, 19, 374, 696-7, 1784.

Although Mr. Gray's visit was welcomed by the masters, and was regarded by them as likely to be useful to themselves, and of advantage to the schools, his report and the results of his examination were never communicated by the Commissioners to those concerned, nor was their attention called to his recommendations.

Evid., 1034.

Evid., 1043, 1154-7.

The travelling expenses of one Commissioner (Rev. Mr. Berkeley) in attending the meetings of the Board, have been regularly included, without objection, in the Parliamentary grant; in 1857 an opinion was expressed that the expenses of visiting schools might be similarly defrayed, and in 1872 some preliminary costs incurred for an intended visitation of Banagher school were paid by the Treasury, yet no application has been ever made for the Lord Lieutenant's sanction of any expenditure upon visiting or inspecting schools or estates.

App. B, p. 366.

As to the primary schools, nominally under the control of the Board, our inspector, Mr. Moore, reports "I examined some schools nominally under the control of the Commissioners, but as they had no features in common, the only general remark I can make about them is, that they are much neglected by that Board, whose connexion with them is limited to the sending of circulars to be filled by the teachers."

Rep., p. 130.

We could not ascertain that any step had been taken by "The Commissioners of Education" to remedy the neglect (pointed out by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8), to provide protection for the endowments and to preserve the documents, formerly belonging to the "Commissioners of the Lord Lieutenant's School Building Fund."

As to the condition of the buildings vested in or under the control of the Commissioners, no provision had, at the time of our inquiry, been made for periodical inspection; the Board had since October, 1857, employed Messrs. McCurdy and Mitchell (at the expense of the estates), as architects to superintend alterations and additions, and large repairs, but only in the cases of the five larger Royal schools, and at Navan. They considered that the buildings should be periodically inspected, and so informed the secretary, but without effect. The ordinary repairs and maintenance of the buildings of such schools as were repaired at all were practically left in the hands of the head masters, who obtained estimates from local tradesmen, and forwarded them to the secretary. He generally asked the opinion of Mr. McCurdy, "on the documents," but the Commissioners took no steps either to ascertain that the buildings were kept in repair, or that the repairs which they sanctioned on the head masters' applications were necessary or were properly executed. Practically the masters were at liberty to do what they liked with the schools.

We found the management of the estates vested in the Commissioners, of which those of the Royal Schools are the largest and most important, to be very unsatisfactory. Agents had been appointed over the several estates. They collected the rents, and transmitted them to the Commissioners, but, beyond the receipt of rent, few of the usual functions of a landlord towards his tenants were performed on the estates. Mr. Murphy states that he formed a very strong impression of the mismanagement of the estates of the Royal Schools. The fault, in his opinion, did not rest with the agents, whom he found, as a rule, to be active, intelligent, and competent; they were fully alive to the deficiencies of their management, but they complained that their recommendations were not attended to. They had been supplied with no suitable or sufficient records of the estates. The maps were obsolete and utterly useless. There had been no personal supervision of the estates on the part of the Board, and the agents had thus had no support in carrying out rules and regulations which they were quite aware should have been enforced. Large sums had been expended in improvements, and generally speaking no return had been received for the outlay. The tenantry were holding their lands at very much below the average rents of the districts in which the estates were situated.

The evidence given before us pointed to the conclusion that the estates, under their present system of management, do not produce their real value. Among the principal causes of their unproductiveness have been the absence of proper control over the treatment of the land, and the excessive subdivision which, for many years, and notwithstanding the observations of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, had been permitted to proceed practically unchecked. Upon the principal estates vested in the Commissioners, although the average extent, taking into account the arable land only, of the holdings is about 15½ statute acres each, the great majority of the farms are very much smaller; the average rent is less than ten shillings per statute acre; the gross rental exceeds the poor law valuation of the lands by nearly 2½ per cent., but is 4½ per cent. below the aggregate valuation of the lands and buildings. Mr. Murphy is of opinion, however, that the Poor Law valuation affords no basis whatever on which to estimate the letting value of the lands in the South, West, and midland counties of Ireland, and he states that throughout his inquiry he found many instances in which it was utterly at variance with the letting value and most uneven as concerning lands of the same quality.

We found that no revision of the rentals had taken place for many years; that the rents were very unequal, and, except in the case of the Armagh estate, that no survey of the holdings had been made for upwards of forty years. We found serious discrepancies to exist between the acreage of several of the estates as returned by the Royal Commissioners 1854-8, and as appearing in the books of the Valuation Office, from which Mr. Murphy took his figures. We were unable to reconcile the differences, and the actual extent of the estates vested in "The Commissioners of Education" could therefore only be approximately ascertained.

The tenants of the Raphoe and Cavan estates were, at the time of our inquiry, still burdened with the old arrears which existed in 1857, preventing them from improving or disposing of their holdings. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, recommended that some steps should be taken for getting rid of these arrears, yet the amount retained in the accounts of Mr. Benison, the agent of the Cavan estate, as due on 1st November, 1877, was £1,680 16s. 8½d., being more than three years' rent, and £1 9s. 6½d. more than the sum reported as due in 1857. The agent of the Raphoe estate, Mr. Stewart, had been for some time in bad health, but his brother, Captain A. M. Stewart, who had been acting for him for three years preceding the date of our inquiry, was examined before us. He stated that he had every year requested that steps should be taken to relieve the tenantry of the arrears, which amounted in 1878 to more than £1,900, nearly four years' rent. Though he had informed the Commissioners that the estates would never prosper, or the rents be regularly paid till these arrears were done away with, and had written several letters to the Secretary upon the subject, he had received no answer, and nothing had been done.

No supervision or control had been exercised over the estates by anyone representing the Commissioners, with the exception of the agents and their bailiffs, and these had received but little assistance in managing the property. On the Raphoe estate roads were wanted, some of the tenants having no way of egress from their farms, but Captain Stewart stated that it was very difficult to get the Commissioners to allow anything for improvements. He tried to get £4 to make a road, which would have accommodated seventeen families, but he could not get an answer from the Commissioners about it. The want diminished the value of farm produce, which most of the tenants had to carry on their backs to the roads.

The Commissioners' powers of leasing had been exercised only in the case of one tenement, in the town of Enniskillen, and the tenants, almost without exception, held from year to year. They had never asked for leases, which Mr. Fleming accounted for by saying "they hold under a public body, and think that is as good as a lease."

In making new lettings the agents appeared generally to have acted without valuations, and on their own judgment, merely noting the changes of tenancy in their rentals. Upon sales of farms on the Raphoe estate the agent put on a small increase of rent.

On the Dunganon estate Mr. Wann, who had recently ceased to be agent, had advanced money to the tenants from time to time to aid them in improving their holdings, but the system was discontinued under the present agent, Mr. Moore, who was appointed in September, 1877; the reason assigned by Mr. Fleming being that "the new agent perhaps might not be as clever at it as the former one, and the Commissioners thought it as well that it should be put an end to." Mr. Moore merely sent up his monthly account, and his rental at the end of the year, he had never had any communication with the Commissioners as to his lettings or any valuation or alteration in the rental. Where any change of tenants had taken place, before accepting the new tenant, he made the rent "what he considered fair." He had two maps of the estate, both made in 1835, but, on comparing them with the Government survey, he found a discrepancy of almost 100 acres, for which he had not been able to account.

Mr. Owen, the agent of the Banagher, Cloemal, and Ballyroan or Cappaghoughlin estates, saw them but once a year, when he collected the rents. About sixteen years previous to the date of our inquiry a slight increase of rent on the Banagher estate was proposed to the Commissioners by his father, who was then the agent, but the tenants sent in a memorial against it, and the Commissioners let the matter drop.

Messrs. Guinness and Mahon, who reside in Dublin, were the agents over the estate belonging to Carysfort school, situate in the county of Wicklow. The estate was visited twice a year, when Mr. H. Guinness, who was examined before us, collected the rents, "either by himself or an assistant." He thought the land was worth more than the rental, but stated that he had never suggested to the Commissioners that a revaluation should be made, though in the case of an individual landlord he would have considered it his duty to suggest a revaluation, if the rental were as low as it was on the Carysfort estate. He did not consider the property so much underlet as to render it necessary for him to direct the attention of the Commissioners to the subject.

Mr. James Benison had been agent for about twenty-eight years over the Cavan estate, and for thirty-five years over the Enniskillen estate; Mr. J. J. Benison, his son, who acted for him, was examined before us. The rental of the Enniskillen estate in 1879 was £2,157 8s. 3d., the Government valuation being £2,653 15s. The ordinary rate of payment for "tenant-right" in the county of Fermanagh, where the estate is situate, was about £5 per acre, while on the school estate it had been in some cases as high as £20, or an average of from £10 to £12. Notwithstanding the very low rents, the tenantry have been "poor for generations," which Mr. J. J. Benison attributed to subdivision. This was not checked, as "Dr. Kyle would never allow a notice to quit to be served, or any harsh proceeding to be taken, though notices were served" on the tenants not to subdivide. They did subdivide notwithstanding the notices, and no proceedings were taken. Mr. J. J. Benison had himself known of twenty or thirty instances in which he had served such notices without following them up. Though on all properly managed estates subject, as this estate is, to tenant-right, there were regularly established rules and practices with regard to subdivision, there were no such rules on this estate.

Evid.,

On the Enniskillen estate, in 1863, arrears amounting to nearly four and a half years' rent were, on the agent's suggestion, forgiven to all the tenants except some few "very poor people," in consideration of their paying an extra half-year's rent, and expending a further half-year's rent on improving the holdings. Mr. J. J. Benison thought a similar arrangement might have been carried out with benefit to both landlord and tenants on the Cavan estates if taken up within the past ten years, but his father had not suggested it to the Commissioners, nor did he think it judicious to attempt it at the time, because the Cavan tenants were poorer than those in Fermanagh. He had not latterly made any suggestions for improvements or with regard to the management, and no steps were taken on the suggestions which he had made as to preventing subdivision. Mr. J. J. Benison thought an increase of £500 a year might have been put on the rental without pressing the tenants, or charging them any rent for their own improvements, but he did not think the present a favorable time to raise the rent; some of the tenants were very poor, and had felt the late depression very much. He knew no other instance in which a whole estate in Fermanagh was let below the Government valuation, where there was power to raise the rents, and he said that a private person would not allow the process of subdivision to go on. There was no restriction as to the treatment or cropping of the land. Nothing was done to prevent wasteful husbandry, nor were there any estate rules, and there was the greatest inequality in the relative proportion of the rents and valuation of different holdings.

The gross rental of the Cavan estate (containing 571 Irish plantation acres) was £562 7s. 1d., the Government valuation being £542. Mr. Benison thought the valuation higher in Fermanagh than in Cavan, and though he thought the rent "a fair reasonable rent having regard to the present depressed times," he said that, without pressing the tenants unduly, the rental might be raised from 10 to 20 per cent., which would bring it up to the ordinary letting value, and, making full allowance for the fact that the Cavan tenants had improved their land wonderfully, he unquestionably thought the rental might be raised 10 per cent. Several of the holdings were injuriously intermixed in consequence of "want of control." There had been no survey since 1816, and except by visiting the estate, and from his own personal knowledge, Mr. J. J. Benison was not aware of any means of ascertaining the various holdings. There had been a good deal of litigation in consequence, but Mr. Benison "generally managed to settle it." His evidence as to the want of rules, and the absence of any restrictions as to cropping, on the Benishillen estate, applied equally to the Cavan estate.

In consequence of Mr. Wann's illness, we were not able to obtain his evidence as to the Armagh estate.

Shortly before Mr. Murphy's inspection, the present Secretary of the Commissioners App. D, p. 390, had visited the estates and issued rules for the guidance of the agents which will be found in Mr. Murphy's Report, App. D, supra p. 390.

Some further references to the condition of the estates will be found in the paragraphs relating to particular schools.

Fluoridation KIT 36 – beschreibung des systems

Except in the introduction of a better system of accounts, no practical effect was given, nor was any attention apparently paid by "The Commissioners of Education" to the observations or recommendations of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, and as regards the absence of "free pupils" from the Royal Schools, and other matters of importance referred to in the report of that Commission, the condition of affairs remained unchanged, up to the time of our inquiry.

Other matters to which we deem it necessary to refer, but which especially affect particular schools, or classes of schools, under the control of the Commissioners, will be found mentioned in the following portions of our report. As a general statement we must observe that the evidence given before us, as to "The Commissioners of Education," pointed clearly to the conclusion that there has been a marked and most injurious absence of system, vigour and efficiency in the discharge of the functions committed to the Board, but there is also no doubt that the powers which the Commissioners possess, and the means at their disposal, are in many important respects inadequate to provide for the proper management and development of the schools and endowments placed under their charge.

Dr. Kyle, on 13th January, 1879, furnished to us a list of thirty-seven schools of different classes, as being those which were under the management and control of "The Commissioners of Education." Three of these, viz., the schools at Clonakilty, Kinsale, and New Ross, were, however, specified as having ceased to exist since 1857. To the schools upon this list the Secretary had been in the habit of annually forwarding blank forms, which the masters were requested to fill up and return to the Commissioners, stating the number of pupils, the course of education, the condition of the school, and other particulars. If the forms were returned they were filed; if they were not returned duplicates were sent; if these also were unnoticed nothing more was done, except in one or two instances where the Secretary wrote ineffectually to the agent or patron to try to ascertain something about the schools. There was no course of directing local inquiries, and, except in the single instance of a threatened visitation of Banagher Royal School, averted by the resignation of the master, recourse had not been had, since 1857, either to the power of visitation or to that of initiating proceedings in Chancery. Though the Act 3 Geo. IV., cap. 79, had extended the jurisdiction of "The Commissioners of Education" to schools thereafter to be endowed, no inquiry after such schools had been made, and, except in the instance of Kilworth school, as to which the Earl of Mount-Cashell, a great many years ago, suggested that it should be vested in the Board, and to which forms were afterwards for a long time sent, it did not appear that any step was taken to enlarge the number of schools with which the Commissioners had originally placed themselves in communication. Though in the case of Clonakilty school, the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, had reported that it was not endowed, and had thought it "somewhat remarkable" that "The Commissioners of Education" should for several years have returned the school to Parliament as an Endowed School under their charge, and also have included it amongst those returned to the Royal Commission, the school was still retained in the list given to us in 1879. Many schools, on the other hand, in all respects similar to those upon the list, were not included in it, and had never been in any way dealt with by the Commissioners, and we were not able to discover any principle upon which the thirty-seven schools upon the list to which we have referred had been selected. They included, however, all those with which "The Commissioners of Education" were, at the date of our inquiry, in any way connected, besides several which had ceased to exist since 1857, and all with which, so far as we could ascertain, they had at any time been in communication, except the discontinued Diocesan Schools.

We have included among the "Schools under 'The Commissioners of Education'" those only which possessed lands or funds vested in the Commissioners, or were found mentioned in their books or proceedings, or to which forms of return had been sent from their office, and with which they reported themselves to have communicated. Their list (vide Vol. II., p. 617), comprised all these, except the discontinued Diocesan Schools, and was thus made up:—

Seven Royal Schools, viz., Armagh, Banagher, Carysfort, Cavan, Dungannon, Enniskillen, and Raphoe.

Three Diocesan Schools, viz., Ballymena, Sligo (Elphin), and Tuam.

Evid., 1324.

Fifteen Grammar Schools of private foundation, viz., Ballyroan, Bandon, Benbawn, Carrickmacross, Charleville, Clonakilty, Clonmel, Dundalk, Eyrecourt, Kilkenny, Kinsale, Lismore, Middleton, Navan, and New Ross.

Eight English Schools of private foundation, viz., Athlone, Betaghstown, Bishop Crow's School (Cloyne), Kilworth, Lifford, Rathvilly, Tullyvin, and Youghal.

Four Primary "Tenantry Schools," established upon the estates vested in "The Commissioners of Education," of which three were on the Royal School estates, viz., Mullaghmore School on the Armagh estate, King's Island School on the Dungannon estate, and Townawilly School on the Raphoe estate. The fourth, Kilbricken School, was on the Cappaloughlin estate, the Navan and Ballyroan private endowment.

These thirty-seven schools are dealt with in our Report in the foregoing order, and in connexion with the three Diocesan Schools still in operation we have also mentioned those which have been discontinued.

ROYAL FREE SCHOOLS.

An account of these schools from their foundation to the year 1857 will be found at page 47 and following pages of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8.

The Royal Free School endowments in operation then and at the date of our inquiry were seven in number. Six of these were Grammar schools, viz., the schools at Armagh, Banagher, Cavan, Dungannon, Enniskillen, and Raphoe, and one was an English school, viz., the school at Carysfort.

Royal Free
Schools.

The evidence given before us showed that no regular or systematic control or supervision had been exercised by "The Commissioners of Education" over the Royal Schools or their buildings. The Commissioners required from each Head-master an annual report, containing particulars as to the date of the appointment of masters, the salaries paid, the number of pupils, the books studied, scale of proficiency, &c., but the Rev. Wm. Prior Moore, the Head-master of Cavan Royal School stated that, though he had been in the habit of forwarding his annual reports since his appointment in 1833, no action had ever been, to his knowledge, taken on any one of them, and no greater activity was shown in the case of the other schools.

Practically the entire management and control of each school were left in the hands of its Head-master, with whose arrangements "The Commissioners of Education" have seldom, or never, interfered. Thus the Rev. Dr. Steele, the present Head-master of the Portora Royal School, Enniskillen, and late Head-master of the Raphoe Royal School, stated that he received no communication whatever from the Commissioners either on his appointment to Raphoe or on his appointment to Enniskillen, defining the duties and rights of his office. He also stated that practically he had been at liberty to do what he liked with the school in the way of altering and repairing, and, in fact, to treat the fabric as if it were his own. The Reverend James Bell, speaking from his own experience as a former head-master of Banagher School (which position he had occupied for eighteen years), as well as from what he had heard of other Royal Schools, stated that the Commissioners' principle was "to leave the master to himself," and that they "did nothing to assist or aid him to obtain success, but if the master succeeded they were ready at any time to help him."

Mr. Fleming stated that the question of the state of repair of any of the schools never came before the Board except when the master forwarded an estimate or applied for repayment of sums expended, and that the making of any expenditure for repairs and the ascertaining whether there was any necessity to repair at all depended on the voluntary action of the schoolmasters. A notable instance occurred in the case of the Enniskillen School; Dr. Steele, for more than ten years after his appointment as head-master, remained in ignorance of the fact that it was the duty of the Commissioners to keep the school buildings in repair, and expended during that time a very considerable sum of his own money in executing necessary and ordinary repairs. During those ten years no step had been taken by "The Commissioners of Education" to ascertain whether the school buildings were or were not in repair. The furniture of all the Royal Schools, with the exception of some desks, had been supplied by the Head-masters, and was their private property. The statutory power of furnishing the school houses under their management had never been exercised by the Commissioners.

Though the accounts of each Royal School were kept separate, the Commissioners have sometimes exercised their power of applying the surplus funds of one school for the benefit of another; for instance, in 1874, when there were balances against Banagher and Raphoe Schools, a sum of £295 2s. 1d. was transferred from the account of the Cavan School to the Banagher account, and £542 1s. 10d. to the account of Raphoe, and in 1878 the Enniskillen estate contributed £100 and the Cavan estate £119 8s. towards the cost of repairs for Banagher School, which during that year was attended by fourteen scholars.

The necessity for a regular and efficient inspection of the Schools has been felt by the Commissioners themselves, and in their annual Reports to the Lord Lieutenant from 1869 to the present time, they have urged the necessity for empowering them to appoint Inspectors, and to pay them such sums as should be fixed by resolution of the Board.

Though there are no religious restrictions upon admission to the Royal Schools, at the date of our inquiry, they were, without exception, practically denominational institutions. At Armagh, Cragfsfort, Cavan, and Dangannon, all the pupils were Protestants, the great majority being members of the Church of Ireland; at Enniskillen all the boarders were members of the Church of Ireland, but four of the day boys were Roman Catholics; at Raphoe there was one Roman Catholic day boy out of 46 pupils on the roll, the others being Protestants, and the majority members of the Church of Ireland. Banagher School, on the contrary, was attended by Roman Catholic pupils only. The Head-master there was a Roman Catholic layman. In the other Royal Grammar Schools the Head-masters were, without exception, clergymen of the Church of Ireland.

Though the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, had remarked upon the necessity for defining the rights of admission to free places at the Royal schools, matters remained, in 1879, in this respect, as they were in 1857. "The Commissioners of Education" still required the masters to give annual returns showing the number of free pupils at each school, but the number and mode of election of these pupils were left entirely to the discretion of the head-master. At Armagh regulations had been made in the year 1849, fixing the minimum number of free places at ten; but the obligation to receive free pupils was not communicated to the present head-master, the Rev. Dr. Moore-Morgan, on his

At the date of our inquiry there were only twenty-eight free day boys at the Royal Schools—viz., ten at Armagh, four at Dungannon, ten at Enniskillen, and four at Raphoe; at Banagher and Cavan there were none. There was no free boarder at any of the schools.

Rep., p. 62. The Royal Commissioners 1854-8 reported that school Exhibitions, as distinguished from free places, had been established at Enniskillen. Similar Exhibitions were established at Armagh and Dungannon in 1875. The number in each of the three schools was the same, viz., five of £25, and five of £15. These Exhibitions were competed for by boys from all parts of Ireland, and it was stated that some of the boys who had obtained them could not without this assistance have paid the school charges. The Exhibitions were awarded by competitive examination, and it was not necessary for those competing to have previously been pupils at the school. Some witnesses advocated, in addition to these Exhibitions, the application by "The Commissioners of Education" of a portion of the endowments to the maintenance and education of free boarders.

Evid., 794-81. There were, at the date of our inquiry, thirty-five "Royal Scholarships," founded by "The Commissioners of Education," for Students who enter Trinity College from the Royal Schools of Armagh, Dungannon, Enniskillen, or Cavan, viz., five of £40 per annum, and five of £30 per annum for each of the schools of Armagh, Dungannon, and Enniskillen; and five of £25 per annum, for Cavan. These were tenable for five years, subject to certain conditions as to the holder obtaining a certain number of University distinctions during his College course. The Scholarships in connexion with Armagh, Dungannon, and Enniskillen had been generally full and well competed for; but on no occasion since their foundation had the five in connexion with Cavan been filled—three or four had been usually vacant.

The subjects of examination for these Scholarships were Classics, English, Modern Languages, and Mathematics, and they were conferred solely as the reward of successful competition in these subjects without religious distinction.

Evid., 365-7. In addition to these School Exhibitions and Royal Scholarships, "The Commissioners of Education" had established in each of the schools of Armagh, Dungannon, and Enniskillen four prizes of £10 each and four of £5 each, called "December Prizes," awarded annually for proficiency in English and other subjects a knowledge of which is required for commercial life. At Raphoe (which had neither School Exhibitions nor Royal Scholarships) the Commissioners of Education awarded £30 annually in prizes.

Evid., 773-4. It appears to have been the intention of the Commissioners of Education on first establishing the Royal Scholarships that they should be open to candidates from all the Royal Schools indiscriminately, but they thought themselves compelled by the terms of the statutes to limit the Scholarships provided by the Estates belonging to each school to candidates who had been educated therein. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, recommended that these Scholarships should be so regulated as to be open to pupils educated at the Royal schools without distinction, and the necessity for such a course had been constantly urged by the Commissioners of Education in their annual reports from the year 1869 down to the time of our inquiry, but no steps had been taken to carry into effect the proposed alteration.

Rep., p. 63. The appointment, advancement, and dismissal of assistant masters have been left to the discretion of the Head Masters of the various Royal schools, except at Cavan, where the appointment of the first assistant master by the Head Master has been made subject to the approval of the Government. The amounts allowed by "The Commissioners of Education" for assistant masters have varied very much in the different schools, and large sums have been paid in addition by the Head Masters at the more flourishing schools to provide a competent staff of masters. The sum allowed by the Commissioners for assistant masters at Enniskillen was £500 a year, and at Armagh only £150, in addition to which the Head Master paid to his assistants between £1,400 and £1,500 a year.

Evid., 218. The schools are mainly preparatory to the University, the professions, and the higher branches of the Civil Service. In May, 1870, "The Commissioners of Education" addressed a circular to the different masters, informing them that ten guineas (the ordinary charge at that time for day pupils at these schools) was too high a charge, and should be reduced. Mr. Fleming thought all the masters replied to this circular, stating their willingness to comply with the wishes of the Board, but we found that at Dungannon "the regular terms" for day boys were still ten pounds per annum, though, in some cases, the Head Master had reduced his charges, occasionally as low as £2 per annum. At Armagh the Head Master reduced the terms for day boys to six guineas per annum, but, as he thenceforth charged extra for Latin and Greek, and

French, subjects which every boy learned, the average charge continued as before, ten guineas per annum. The charges for day boys at Enniskillen ranged from four guineas to £10 per annum, at Raphoe from £4 to £8, at Cavan from £6 to £8, and at Banagher from £4 to £6 per annum.

The boarders attending these schools came from all parts of Ireland, and they, as well as the day pupils, required a classical education, fitted to qualify them to enter professions or compete for the higher branches of the Civil Service. The course of instruction was arranged to suit each pupils, and was generally of too high a standard for those requiring a merely English or commercial education.

The following Table shows the comparative numbers of pupils attending the six Royal Grammar Schools in 1857 and 1879; while the attendance at each school, except at Armagh and Enniskillen, had decreased, the total number had increased by thirty-six, and was, in 1879, 347:—

We endeavoured to ascertain the causes of the smallness of the number of pupils availing themselves of the advantages offered by the Royal Schools, and of the great fluctuations which have occurred, from time to time, in the numbers on the roll of each school. Very many boys who might take advantage of a Royal School education are sent to schools in England; but whether a change in the management of the Royal Schools would diminish the number of boys sent abroad, or attract a sufficient number of pupils to fill all the Royal Schools at the same time, was a matter upon which the witnesses differed in opinion. The Rev. Dr. Ringwood, Head Master of Dungannon School, thought that it would not be possible to fill all the Royal Schools at the same time, as "the number of parents who will pay the terms of the Royal Schools and at the same time accept education in Ireland is limited, as all the nobility and the great majority of the gentry send their sons to English or foreign schools. In consequence of the supply of pupils being so much reduced by this educational absenteeism, when one school becomes popular other schools fall off in point of numbers." On the other hand Dr. Moore-Morgan, while agreeing with Dr. Ringwood that the reason why the aggregate number of the scholars was so small was that so many go to England, stated his belief that all the Royal Schools might be as flourishing as that at Armagh, and that the gentry of Ireland would not send their sons to England in such numbers as they now do, if there was a better staff of masters at the principal Endowed Schools in Ireland.

The existence of successful private schools in Ireland, and the circumstance that an immediate increase in the number of pupils has invariably followed the appointment of a young and efficient Head Master, while the numbers fall away where the Head Master has been long engaged in teaching, appear to show that there are, in Ireland, a sufficient number of pupils to avail themselves of the Royal School Endowments, and that a more vigorous and efficient system of teaching and of administration would increase the attendance. At the same time it would be impossible to expect the Royal schools successfully to compete, in the endeavour to attract the richer class of pupils, with the larger English institutions which have at their disposal more ample funds, derived from public or private endowments, or from higher fees paid for much greater numbers of students, and which, by their position, offer what many parents regard as a great advantage—a wider field of association and experience during the period of education.

Though there was a difference of opinion among the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, upon the question whether the Royal Free School endowments were legally to be regarded as exclusively Protestant, they undoubtedly are of public origin, and it has been generally conceded that their benefits ought to be open to all denominations. The Roman Catholics, however, do not take advantage of them, as they object to avail themselves of mixed education.

At Banagher, upon the appointment of a Roman Catholic master, Mr. Joyce, the Protestants ceased to take advantage of the school, feeling "aggrieved that it should be converted into a denominational school," and regarding themselves as "virtually excluded" from the benefit of the endowment when placed under Roman Catholic management. At the same time the Roman Catholics were not satisfied by the mere appointment of a master of their own denomination. Mr. Joyce stated that he had incurred the displeasure of the clergy in consequence of a supposed connexion of the school under his management with the Queen's University, of which he was a graduate. His school was consequently exposed to "a kind of passive resistance," and the attendance of Roman Catholics was discontinued.

Evidence as to the views held amongst Roman Catholics about the endowments of the Royal Schools was given by several witnesses examined in Belfast, Enniskillen, Londonderry, Cavan, and Armagh. They claimed for Roman Catholics a right to share with Protestants in the enjoyment of the educational endowments proceeding from the State. The Rev. Mr. Henry, President of St. Malachy's Roman Catholic College, Belfast, said of the Royal Schools:—

Evid.,

"They are substantially Episcopalian Denominational Schools. The Catholics of Ulster are entitled to a share of the property and the income of these schools, upon the principle of equality, and because they are, in the eyes of the law, intended for all denominations. If the Catholics of Ulster do not get the exclusive control of any of these schools, or a fair proportion, they have a right to demand that these schools should cease to exist as denominational schools; and that the income or revenue should be utilised in some scheme, such as the Intermediate Education scheme, under which all could gain an advantage; and I think that as the property of these schools is situated in Ulster, Ulster alone should have the advantage of it."

In Enniskillen, the Rev. F. Hackett, C.C. said:—

12352-9.

"There is a strong feeling among the Catholics of Enniskillen with regard to intermediate education. They feel the want of it very much, and that no means have been afforded or facilities given them to obtain it. They will not avail themselves of Portora; but if they had a school of their own in Enniskillen, there would be a very large attendance. When the Government are disposed to equalise every person, they should give us something to enable us to run in the race with those that are largely endowed, or, if not, put all on an equal footing, and let the existing endowment go to the promotion of education under the intermediate system. The Catholics feel very much that a school like Portora should be supported from large endowments, and that they should have to pay for building their own school, and to pay their own masters. If we had an intermediate school, or any facilities afforded for intermediate education, the respectable section among the Catholics would certainly increase. It would increase the social status of the community." He also stated that the Catholics did not wish to have any mixed control over schools in which Catholics were taught, but that they should be under the supervision and direct control of their own clergy.

16181.

Mr. Cassidy, a Roman Catholic inhabitant of Enniskillen, stated that Portora was an establishment to which he, as a Catholic, could not send his son; he had sent him to be educated at St. Stanislaus' College, at an expense of about £300. He maintained that Roman Catholics in Enniskillen laboured under a considerable disadvantage in not having an establishment similar or equal to Portora, to which they could send their children with safety to their own conscientious convictions.

Mr. Francis O'Neill, in Londonderry, said:—

Evid.,
12273.

"In the North of Ireland there are several Royal Schools, about which the feeling is so strong that, generally speaking, the Catholics will not send their children to them. Catholics consider, of course, that they labour under a grievance in the matter of education from the want of endowments."

In Cavan, Mr. James Brady, C.E., said:—

Evid.,
13391-2.

"That the money expended for education was not fairly divided, for example, there was a great deal of money given towards the Royal Schools. Only one class of the population attended those schools, and the other class ought to have facilities as well. The Catholics, being the great body of the population, ought to be facilitated, to some extent, out of the Royal School endowments, as the Royal Schools were attended chiefly by the sons of gentlemen, who were well able to pay for their education, while the poorer class derived little benefit from them."

In Armagh, the Rev. Mr. Rice, P.P., said:—

"I would not be anxious to interfere with any existing endowments at all. I would not like to pull down. . . . I wish for levelling up. Catholics most certainly regard the Royal Schools as purely denominational in this way, that Catholics do not go to them. . . . All denominations, outside Catholics, can and do attend; but Catholics could not avail themselves of them. Some assistance such as the Royal Schools get would be of benefit to us, and we would avail ourselves of it—besides we have a right to it."

It appeared from the statements of three witnesses that there was a considerable number of Roman Catholic boys in the neighbourhood of several of the Royal Schools who required intermediate education, and that the want was a growing one. The Intermediate Education Act was regarded as likely to stimulate the demand for such education. While the Roman Catholics thus urged their claim, either to a share of the existing endowments, or to other public endowments to be provided for themselves, they, in either case, would require that the education offered should be denominational and religious, and that it should be approved by their own clergy.

Schools.*

The Presbyterians, on the other hand, who were represented before us by the Rev. W. Todd Martin, Convener of the Committee of the General Assembly, object "that the existing endowments are commonly regarded as connected with the Protestant Episcopal Church, and that the Royal and Diocesan schools, though open to pupils of all denominations, are not on that account free from a distinctly denominational character in the eyes of members of the Presbyterian Church." They contend "that to effect any change which will be of real value in promoting the success of the endowed schools, it is indispensable that they be placed under an efficient management which will command the confidence of all sections of the community." They think that under such government, severed from all denominational connexion, and no longer attached exclusively to one university, these schools might be made to serve the interests of education in a much larger measure than heretofore. Mr. Todd Martin was, however, unable to point to any institution successfully conducted upon the principles which he advocated, and thought that "both Catholics and Church people" would object to such an arrangement as he proposed. He also contemplated the application of the existing Royal School endowments to day schools, and did not approve of mixed boarding schools, but advocated the establishment and public endowment of large mixed day schools, with separate denominational boarding-houses attached, to be conducted by the different masters, as additions of a voluntary character. He said the General Assembly would apply all the Irish endowments directly to day schools, and objected to the maintenance out of public funds even of denominational boarding-houses. He was unable to refer us to any existing system of management of any school or university that did command the confidence of all denominations, and acknowledged that the General Assembly had not practically considered the mode of forming such a government as they suggested for the management of the public endowments. He did not think, moreover, that the members of the Church of Ireland would approve of the proposed system, and he admitted that it had been objected to decidedly by the Roman Catholics.

The Rev. Jackson Smyth, D.D., a leading Presbyterian minister, now moderator of the General Assembly, stated, in Armagh, that it was understood among the Presbyterian community there that the boys in the Royal School were generally prepared for Trinity College, and the Presbyterians did not generally wish to send their sons to Trinity College, so that the Royal School was not available in many instances. He said the general feeling was that the great object in the Royal School was to prepare boys for Trinity College, not for the Queen's Colleges; and one element in the complaint of the Presbyterians was that the Royal School exhibitions were available only for students entering Trinity College, and though the pathway for distinction was open to all comers there, yet "it was understood that the tendency was, without any direct effort, to proselytize." There was nothing of that kind at the Queen's Colleges. Mr. Todd Martin stated that the constitution and management of Trinity College and the Queen's University were not disapproved of by the Presbyterians; he could not say that there was, on the part of the General Assembly, any preference for the system of the one over the other, and no proposal had been made to alter either.

William Nesbitt, Esq., M.A., a professor in the Queen's College, Belfast, and one of the visitors of the Belfast Academical Institution, said that a number of the students of the Institution, who were going into the Presbyterian Church, naturally looked to the Queen's College, Belfast, as their place of education, and it appeared hard that they should not be able to hold the Royal Scholarships in the State Colleges instituted for their especial benefit. He did not, however, wish to trench on the funds of the Royal Schools; he had the highest opinion of their efficiency, and should not wish to diminish it in any way. He did not think that any one of them was too amply endowed.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, recommended that provision should be made for the removal of inefficient masters, and for granting superannuation allowances. In the annual reports of "The Commissioners of Education" from 1859 to the time of our inquiry the absence of such powers had been urgently dwelt upon, but without any result. In reference to this question the following memorial, recently presented by the Head Masters of the six Royal Free Grammar Schools to the late Lord Lieutenant, and by His Grace's direction forwarded to us, is of importance. We print it here, as containing the opinions of the majority of the Head Masters upon matters of interest and importance in connexion with the Royal Grammar Schools.

"That the attention of the State has been of late much directed to the improvement of the Educational condition of Ireland, as appears in the introduction of the Intermediate Education system, the preliminary programme of a new University, and the granting of Pensions to the National Schoolmasters.

"That, consequently, the hour seems favourable for the suggestion of an amelioration in the position and prospects directly of the Head-Masters, and indirectly of the Assistant-Masters of the Royal Schools, and as by natural consequence in the position and well-being of all persons connected with Intermediate Education in the country.

"That the measure which we would suggest is that, in accordance with the precedent recently established and approved by all thinking men in the case of National Schools, provision should be made by the Government for the payment of Retiring Allowances to Head-Masters of Royal Schools after an appointed Term of Service, and that said Pensions should be proportioned to the general value of each Head-Mastership, and to the length of each Master's service.

"A measure of this kind was emphatically and repeatedly recommended by the Commission of Enquiry in 1857, and your Memorialists believe that such an arrangement would have a tendency to introduce new life and vigour into the Upper Schools of this country, as well otherwise, as by the hope of promotion excited among the junior members of the Scholastic profession, and by the prospect of secure repose after labour done, afforded to Schoolmasters more advanced in life.

"Your Memorialists would submit that Irish Schools of the higher class are very peculiarly circumstanced, owing to the prevalence of what has been called "Educational Absenteeism"—a practice which makes it impossible for Schoolmasters in Ireland to imitate their professional brethren in England by amassing in twelve or fifteen years of Scholastic labour a sufficiency on which to retire to more congenial and less toilsome pursuits.

"Reasons of various kinds lead parents to prefer having their children brought up in England, or in Foreign Countries, rather than in Ireland. It is not generally supposed that the English or Foreign education is superior intellectually, morally, or religiously; and the remaining considerations which cause the preference—of whatever nature they may be—can hardly be overcome by Irish Schoolmasters, or, as experience has proved, by English Schoolmasters holding Scholastic appointments in Ireland. Moreover, it may be questioned by Statesmen of Imperial views, whether it is desirable that this preference should be altogether removed.

"Meanwhile, the case of the Masters of Royal Schools—the only Intermediate Schools in Ireland which are immediately under the control of the State—merits some consideration and sympathy. More than one of the Royal Schoolmasters have advanced considerable sums of money for the enlargement and improvement of School-buildings, &c., in the adventurous hope of successfully combating this "Educational Absenteeism." One Head-Master, in particular, has sunk a very large sum of money—not yet repaid—in improvements of this nature. And although such efforts have produced a temporary effect from time to time, they have never realised permanent success.

"Still, your Memorialists respectfully submit that it is desirable that good Schools should continue to be maintained in Ireland for the use of persons belonging to the upper and middle classes of society who cannot afford to send their children to English Schools; and with the view of inducing men of superior attainments and position to enter the Scholastic profession generally, it would be of much advantage that the best Scholastic appointments in the country should be open to competition more frequently than they can be, if vacancies be produced, not by the advancing years or failing energies, but solely by the death of the occupants.

"Nor should it be omitted that a Royal Schoolmaster is, in some important respects, in a position inferior to that of the proprietor of a private School. For instance, the latter, if from any cause he wishes at any time to retire from his laborious employment, has it in his power to sell his interest in the Buildings which he may have erected or improved, and to dispose of his good-will in recommending pupils to his successor. Nothing of this kind is open to the Royal Schoolmaster. Neither is it possible for him to transfer his appointment to his son, or to become a sleeping partner in the Institution on which he has spent the best energies of his earlier life.

"It may be added, that the disestablishment of the Episcopalian Church has put an end to the prospects of Head-Masters in that direction; and a certain small amount of the Church Surplus Fund might possibly be allocated—not without justice, and even with a peculiar propriety—to the purpose of founding the Retiring Allowances, for which your Memorialists humbly pray.

"Although not concurring in all the statements of the above Memorial, I still agree with the other Head-Masters of Royal Schools in desiring the establishment of a system of Retiring Allowances.

* Twenty-one of these 30 boarders resided not at the school but in the private houses of two of the Assistant Masters.

Armagh Royal Free School.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported most favourably of the Armagh Royal School so far as regarded the proficiency of the pupils, the state of instruction, and the condition of the school-house. There were then 56 pupils on the roll; 30 boarders, and 26 day boys, of whom 14 were free. After that date the school passed through a period of great depression—two boarders and ten day-boys being the numbers attending in June, 1869, when Dr. Moore-Morgan was appointed by the Primate to be Head-Master; but it was at the date of our inquiry the most flourishing of the Royal Schools.

Rep. p. 54.

The power of appointing the head-master is vested in the Primate; but, as the school is not of private foundation, it would seem that the power will expire on the next vacancy in the Archbishopric of Armagh, unless legislative provision be made to the contrary in the meantime.

22 & 33 Vis., cap. 42, s. 30.

There were at the date of our inquiry 137 pupils on the roll, 97 boarders and 40 day-scholars. Of the 97 boarders, 29 resided, not at the school, but in the private houses of two of the assistant masters. These pupils attended the Royal School as day-scholars merely, and the head-master received the same payment for them as for ordinary day scholars. In 1876, 88 boarders had resided at the school, which was the largest number it could accommodate under existing arrangements.

Return. Enid, 1619. App. A, p. 234. Enid, 1778-32.

Of the 97 boarders 96 were members of the Church of Ireland and one was a Presbyterian. Of the 40 day-scholars 33 were members of the Church of Ireland and 7 were Presbyterians. Dr. Moore-Morgan stated that, though some Roman Catholic boys had been at the school before his time, none had attended or applied for admission since he became master. He feared in Ireland it would be virtually impossible to keep Roman Catholic boarders under the same roof with Protestant boarders without the association, more or less, influencing their religious feelings; but he knew no reason why parents should not send their sons as day boys; he was sure it was known in Armagh that the Royal School was not exclusively for Protestants, and though he had never advertised to that effect, it was known that he would educate a Roman Catholic boy on the same terms as any other without in any way interfering with his religion, and that secular instruction only was imparted in the school during the attendance of the day boys. He, however, stated that it was "a well-

- Royal Free Schools.* known fact that the Roman Catholics in Armagh as well as in other parts of Ireland object to mixed education." Very few of the boarders were from the neighbourhood; of the paying day-boys about 6 or 7 came from the shop-keeping and farming classes, the vast majority of whom did not send their sons to the Royal School.
- At the date of our inquiry ten day pupils were received by the Head Master as free pupils, in accordance with regulations made by "The Commissioners of Education" in 1849, to the effect that ten boys, children of parents residing in Armagh, who inhabit houses rated at not less than £10 Poor Law valuation, or children of tenants on the Armagh School Estate paying not less than £20 per annum rent, should be educated as free daily pupils at the Armagh Royal School, the master to examine and select for vacancies such as he should think most eligible and likely to benefit by the course of education given in the school. Dr. Moore-Morgan had, however, been allowed an absolute discretion, not only as regarded the mode of examination and selection, but also as to the number of free pupils to be admitted, and the class from which they were chosen.
- Rep. Com., 1854-8, p. 55.* The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, took exception to the restriction of the free places to the children of residents in Armagh or tenants on the School Estates, and these restrictions do not now appear to be enforced, as at the date of our inquiry the free pupils were selected by competitive examination; but Dr. Moore-Morgan stated that he generally ascertained, as far as he could, whether the parents of the applicants for free places had small means. The competition was not very keen: for two free places vacant in September, 1878, only four boys competed.
- Evid., 1878, 1872.* The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that some of the inhabitants of Armagh had preferred a complaint that the course of instruction in the Royal School was exclusively for the higher classes of society, and that the mercantile and middle classes were virtually excluded, book-keeping and other courses of instruction suited to them not being pursued. Dr. Moore-Morgan stated that this cause of complaint no longer existed, every facility being given to such of the pupils as required a commercial education, as distinguished from a professional one, to obtain it: but that very few of his pupils were content with a mere English and commercial education, almost all the boys requiring such an education as would prepare them for the University, or the higher class examinations of the Civil Service. Some five or six years before our inquiry, he had made a suggestion to "The Commissioners of Education," with reference to the establishment of a purely mercantile section in the school, but they had never taken any action in reference thereto.
- Evid., 14458-70.* At our Public Courts in Armagh all the witnesses bore testimony to the high state of efficiency to which the present Head Master had brought the school. Some of them, however, stated that an impression existed in the town that the boys of the locality who would attend the school as day scholars, were not so much encouraged as boarders; that, in fact, the prevailing tone of the school was more favourable to boarders than to day boys, and tended to prevent parents from sending their sons to the school as day pupils. Dr. Moore-Morgan informed us that he had done everything in his power to discourage any prejudice against day boys, and that it was much less now than it had been. All the witnesses bore testimony to his strict impartiality and desire to do even-handed justice; but the general impression amongst the inhabitants of the town appeared to be that the middle class population of Armagh did not derive as much benefit from the endowment as they were entitled to, and that this arose to some extent from unpleasant relations between the two classes of pupils.
- Evid., 1698-1710.* We asked Dr. Moore-Morgan to define the benefits, in addition to the use of the school-buildings, accruing from the endowment. He said that were it not for the endowment he would be obliged to raise his charges for boarders from sixty guineas (the present uniform charge) to from seventy to seventy-five guineas a year; and for day boys from ten guineas (the present average charge) to from fifteen to twenty guineas per annum. The benefits attributable to the endowment therefore are—ten free places, a yearly reduction of from five to ten guineas in the fees for each day scholar, and from ten to fifteen guineas in the fees for each boarder. With respect to the charges for day boys, we have already mentioned the course adopted at Armagh School in consequence of the circular issued by "The Commissioners of Education," in May, 1870; Dr. Moore-Morgan stated that the Commissioners were aware of the course pursued by him, in making extra charges for Latin and Greek, and for French, and had not objected to it.
- Supra p. 28.* Mr. Mahaffy found ten assistant teachers at the school, sixty-seven boarders at the schoolhouse, twenty-nine boarders in the assistant masters' houses, and thirty-six day boys; 133 pupils in all. He reports that the ventilation of the schoolroom and of two of the dormitories was deficient, and that there was a want of proper bookshelves in the library. Though the classes were larger than in his opinion they should be, he found evidence of careful teaching in the good answering of the junior classes, but he did not find equally good answering in the senior classes, which he attributes, to some extent, to the system of examination adopted by the Commissioners of Intermediate Education. As regards discipline there was still something to be desired; but he considers this school "the best and most successful in the north of Ireland."

Mr. McCurdy, the architect to "The Commissioners of Education," was of opinion that from £120 to £140 a year would be a reasonable amount of expenditure for ordinary works of maintenance and repairs at Armagh school, if the works were reasonably superintended and kept up from time to time. During the period of seven years, from 1872 to 1878, a total outlay of £1,962 11s. 2d. had been made at Armagh for repairs which the architect was not asked by the Commissioners professionally to supervise, but which were executed upon estimates obtained by the Head Master from local tradesmen, and sent up by him annually to "The Commissioners of Education." The works were executed upon the directions and under the inspection of the Head Master only, upon whom the duty was thrown of certifying the completion of the work and the correctness of the accounts. During the same period a further sum of £3,788 18s. 2d. was expended upon new works executed under the supervision of Mr. McCurdy. There was some difficulty in distinguishing repairs from improvements, but the amount of expenditure appeared to indicate the necessity for closer supervision, especially as Mr. McCurdy stated that it was very difficult even for an architect to secure the Commissioners from overcharge, and much more so for one in the position of the Head Master.

App. D, p.

Mr. Murphy reports that the estate, which is situated about half way between the towns of Newry and Armagh and on the main road connecting them, consists of six townlands, containing 1,502a. 2s. 11p. statute measure, and the rental amounts to £1,453 3s., being 1·4 per cent. over the Poor Law Valuation, excluding the buildings, and 18½ per cent. under the valuation, if the buildings be included. The average outgoings amount to £266 3s. 2d. In the rental to November 1st, 1878, furnished in March, 1879, there was an arrear of £10 2s. only; in 1857, the arrears amounted to £2,601. About seventy acres of land of a deep, alluvial character were flooded by the Cushier River, and rendered almost useless, which would amply repay a considerable expenditure; at present only about £32 yearly, is realized by sales of the semi-aquatic grass which grows there. This marsh land is let by auction in small lots, which are held practically by the same parties each year, and the sum paid is "the very smallest that decency will permit them to offer." Strenuous efforts should be made to reclaim these meadows, and if this cannot be effected they should be added to the farms of the tenants at a fair annual rent. Tenant-right appears to prevail to a very full extent, the lands being sold by auction. In a recent case the sum of £150 was paid for 5a. 1a. 20r., the rent being about 20s. per acre. There can be no doubt that the lands are most moderately let, and this accounts in a great measure for the excessive price. In the same townland, another tenant, whose rent is £13 15s. 6d., has sublet her farm, containing about 16 acres, at a profit rent of £20, retaining the house and a garden rent free in addition. The Poor Law Valuation of this farm, including the house, is £28 10s.; without the house £17. Some of the land is good value for 30s. per statute acre.

"The Commissioners of Education" at an early date gave the tenants assistance to build good slated houses, indeed in some parts of the estate the tenants appeared to be "over housed," and all to be thriving and industrious.

The estate has evidently improved much since 1857.

Banagher Royal Free School, King's County.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that from the absence of exhibitions, and the poverty and small size of the town (the population of which was then 1,846, and in 1871 was only 1,206) Banagher was one of the worst circumstanced among the Royal Schools; the state of instruction was not satisfactory, and the buildings were in bad repair. It does not appear to have improved since. The tenure of the school-house was in 1857 uncertain, and the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, were of opinion that steps should be taken to provide out of the funds of the other Royal Schools a suitable schoolhouse permanently secured for the trust. A new lease was obtained in 1878, for seven years from 24th June, 1878, at the yearly rent of £50. The landlord wished the Commissioners to take a longer lease, but "they preferred having a short one for the present," apparently because the locality was not approved of, but the Commissioners seemed to consider that they had not power to remove the school. The shortness of the tenure must prevent expenditure upon improvements. Mr. Joyce, the head master, stated that the school was kept in repair by "The Commissioners of Education." After a fire which occurred in 1875 £384 14s. 4d. was expended on the buildings, £256

Messrs. McCurdy and Mitchell had advised more extensive repairs to the amount of between £400 and £500, but the Commissioners on account of the shortness of the lease confined them to a limit of £200. Mr. Mitchell visited and made a report upon the school in April, 1878, and again visited it in October, 1878, to see that the works had been properly carried out; he stated that the works actually executed left the building "in a pretty fair state of repair for a few years to come," but the agent, Mr. Owen, who was also directed to visit the school, said that he could not see that much had been done; some of the slating was deficient, the rain was coming in through the roof, and he thought the expenditure was money thrown away. Mr. Mahaffy reports that he found the buildings "dirty and in decay."

At the date of our inquiry there were only sixteen pupils on the roll, of whom five were boarders and eleven day scholars. On the occasion of Mr. Owen's visit he found seven boys present, three day boys and four boarders. Mr. Mahaffy found "only eight or nine boys preparing for special competitions, such as Civil service or bank appointments; in fact rather private pupils over the ordinary school age than ordinary scholars." He describes the school as "a complete failure," nor does he think the appointment of a Protestant head master or any other internal change will make it recover, but if the school were removed but a few miles to Parsonstown, a town of a similar character to Armagh, and always the residence of gentry, it would doubtless become a large school.

Mr. Joyce, the only Roman Catholic ever appointed to be Head Master of a Royal School, was appointed by the Lord Lieutenant in January, 1874. The school had been vacant for about two years previously. The Rev. Thomas MacNally, Mr. Joyce's predecessor, had been head master from 1868 to 1872, and before his appointment there had also been a break for two or three years. Within two years after the appointment of Mr. Joyce, the number of pupils rose to forty-one. The fire in 1875 had caused some inconvenience. Afterwards Mr. Joyce incurred the displeasure of the Roman Catholic Bishop and clergy, in consequence of some of his pupils having been prepared for the Queen's University, and his own attendance at the Queen's College, Galway. It also appeared from his own evidence that he had on several occasions absented himself for considerable periods from the school, leaving it in charge of assistants. From 1875 the number of pupils declined. The greatest number of boarders he had at any time was twelve, but the school would accommodate between thirty and forty.

Evid., 590-4.

At the date of our inquiry there was no assistant, and there were no free pupils at the school, but up to the previous year Mr. Joyce had generally taken two free pupils.

Evid., 569.

All the boys attending the school at the date of our inquiry were Roman Catholics, but Mr. Joyce had at one time three or four Protestant day pupils; he had been asked to receive a Protestant boarder, but said that he would rather not take him, as "it would upset the place to have two different religions boarding at the school, and he did not think he could conscientiously look after the religious education of a Protestant; but there was no objection to receiving Protestant day boys."

Evid., 509-65.

There were, at the date of our inquiry, no Exhibitions attached to this school. "The Commissioners of Education" once gave £10 for prizes to the school on condition that Greek and Latin should form two of the subjects of examination, and that the boys should be examined "by an outsider." The examination was conducted by a Roman Catholic clergyman on the invitation of Mr. Joyce. The grant of a similar sum was refused in 1879, as was also Mr. Joyce's application for the instruments necessary to teach physical science, and in consequence he was compelled to give up the idea of teaching that subject effectively. Considerable sums of money have been, since Mr. Joyce's appointment, transferred by the Commissioners from the funds of Cavan and Enniskillen, and expended upon Banagher school.

App. D, p. 259.

The school-house is an old building in need of constant repairs, and unfurnished, and ordinary repairs were for a very long time neglected.

Mr. Murphy reports that the estate consists of three townlands in the King's County, containing 555a. 0n. 23r. statute measure, of which 166a. are bog retained in the Commissioners control. The rental is £179 4s. 2d.; the Poor Law Valuation of the tenanted lands is £168 10s.; and of the buildings, £11 5s. In addition to the rents received from tenants, an income of about £11 per annum was received from sales of bog. The outgoings amounted on an average to £35 per annum. In 1879, the agent charged £5 10s. for his expenses in visiting the school, and £1 10s. for stamps, stationery, and postage, though there were only ten tenants on the rental. In 1857 the rental was £164 10s. 7d.; in 1842 it was £260 3s. 5½d.; in 1816 the estate had been valued at £283 16s. 7d. per annum. The tenancies were all yearly; the rent was reduced in the depressed times of 1847, and had never since been raised. The arable land was generally of a good sound fertile character, the farms were well fenced, and the houses moderately comfortable. Thirty-three acres of the best part of the land were held by a merchant residing in Parsonstown, at a rent of £14 10s. the Poor Law Valuation being £17 15s. A tenant holding 20 acres at a rent of £6 12s. with the agent's consent agreed to sell his interest to the adjoining tenant for £40, but before the transaction could be completed, a stranger to the estate offered the tenant £47 10s., which he accepted, and the purchaser, though warned that he should not be acknowledged as tenant, went into possession, and "defies the agent." The tenants considered themselves harshly treated in the mode which was adopted of dealing with the bog.

On part of the estate considerable tracts of bog, as they were cut out, were partially reclaimed by the tenants, and are not rented. One tenant holds about 15a. taken in this way, and a cottier who holds 2a. 2s. 25c. of cut out bog land pays no rent, and repudiates liability to anyone.

Cavan Royal Free School.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-6, reported very unfavourably as to the course of instruction, the proficiency of the scholars, and the general state of the Cavan Royal School. They considered that a prima facie case was made out for a visitation being at once held by "The Commissioners of Education," to ascertain how far the unsatisfactory state of the School arose from misconduct or neglect on the part of the master. No visitation was, however, held; and the condition of the school has not since improved.

There were at the date of our inquiry twenty-six pupils on the roll, of whom fourteen were boarders. None of these were free pupils, nor did any of the day boys receive pecuniary aid towards their education. In the case of some of the boarders, whose parents were unable to pay the usual fees, the master made reductions. The ordinary charge was forty-eight guineas per annum.

The Rev. William Prior Moore, who had been Head Master since 1833, stated that he did not consider it obligatory on him to take free boys; but that he had never refused to do so, and on the contrary had made every effort to obtain such pupils, but had never been able to get more than two or three at a time. In 1878 he was educating one pupil gratuitously, and three was the largest number of free pupils he had ever had at the same time. Mr. Moore further stated that he had had Roman Catholic pupils from time to time previous to the opening of a Roman Catholic Seminary at Cavan, but since that time no Roman Catholic boy had been sent to him.

There were, at the date of our inquiry, five Royal Scholarships of £25 per annum each in connexion with the Cavan Royal School. During the previous ten years "about four" of these had been filled, and three was the largest number ever full at the same time. At the last examination held before the date of our inquiry there were three candidates, none of whom succeeded in obtaining a scholarship.

Mr. Moore stated that when "The Commissioners of Education" were founding school exhibitions at the other Royal schools, they wrote to him saying that they would establish five or six school exhibitions at Cavan, and that he at their request published in the town that the exhibitions would be given; but that they subsequently informed him that "on further consideration funds would not permit," and the exhibitions were not granted. There was at the time a large sum of cash and stock to the credit of the school, and Mr. Fleming stated that he believed that it was in consequence of the want of success of his school that Mr. Moore was left out, when the circular establishing exhibitions and prizes was sent to the masters of the other schools. Since this evidence was given Mr. Mahaffy reports that the exhibitions have been granted.

The whole income of the endowment has not for many years been applied to the purposes of the school. At the date of our inquiry there were to the credit of the school, sums of £2,143 9s. 5d. cash (lying for years unproductive), and £3,362 16s. 9d. stock, representing accumulations of unused income. Considerable portions of the "surplus funds" of Cavan have been paid over to the Schools of Banagher and Raphoe.

The Head Master many years ago altered the approach to the school premises by closing the entrance on the land belonging to "The Commissioners of Education," and opening another on land purchased by himself and still his property. This alteration was effected without the permission of the Commissioners, who refused to purchase the plot of ground referred to. They were however made aware of the alteration having been made, and contributed £50 towards the erection of a new gate-houses, which is on Mr. Moore's ground.

Mr. Mahaffy reports that he found two assistant masters, fifteen boarders, and ten day boys at the school. Many of the boys were very young, and had not been long at the school, but nevertheless he got good answering from them in accidence (Latin).

He did not think the classical answering in the higher class good; in science, geography and dictation, the answering was decidedly bad. The head master had been too long in office, and the assistant masters were newly appointed.

The building would accommodate perhaps forty boarders and about fifty day scholars. The number at the school during Mr. Moore's head mastership had never exceeded thirty-three or thirty-four altogether. Mr. Mahaffy reports that the buildings are commodious and well situated, but that the playground is too narrow, and that an adjoining field, which now belongs to the head master, should be secured for the school. Cavan did not seem to him a good centre for a school, as it can never command a large number of day boys, but if it were changed into a preparatory school, admitting boys from nine to fourteen only, it might enter upon a new sphere of usefulness, the want of such schools being much felt in Ireland.

Mr. Moore complained that his income had been reduced by "The Commissioners of Education" from £300, first to £200, and then in 1846 to £100 per annum, the reason, as he assigned it, being because he had not a larger school—because he could not do impossibilities. He appeared willing to retire if a suitable retiring allowance were provided, but at present he "had nothing to retire upon, and could not retire into beggary."

App. D, p. 261.
Mr. Murphy reports that the estate is situated close to the town of Cavan, and contains 917a. 2s. 38r., statute measure, held by sixty-six tenants at a rental of £562 7s. 1d.; which, excluding the buildings, is 3 per cent. over the Poor Law Valuation; including them it is 10 per cent. under it. The outgoings have on the average annually amounted to about £82 10s., but in 1879 amounted to £152 9s. 7d., including a sum of £58 10s., the cost of seeds distributed to the tenantry. This sum was to be refunded. The arrears due on the rental of 1878 amounted to £1,676 8s. 7d., in 1857 they amounted to £1,679 7s. 2d., and had accrued in the four years from 1845 to 1849.

App. to Rep., p. 28.
The Inspector of Estates for the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, had reported:—

"Before any improvement can be expected on this estate some arrangement must be made for reducing the large arrears hanging over so many of the tenants. I would suggest that the same plan should be adopted which I have pointed out in my report on the Enniskillen school estate; but whether that plan or some other be adopted, nothing, I think, can be clearer than that while a tenant feels himself liable to be called on at any moment for a large arrear of rent, he will neither improve his land nor pay any rent he can avoid."

Evid. 2582.
Mr. J. J. Benison informed us that "The Commissioners of Education" had never made any communication to his father, the former agent, as to carrying out the suggestions of the Royal Commission.

App. D, p. 291.
At the date of Mr. Murphy's report the old arrears were still retained, though many of the holdings had changed hands or been subdivided, and in fact the arrears had been dealt with by both agent and tenant as if they scarcely existed. For example, one tenant subdivided his farm—on which there was an old arrear of about four years' rent—between his two sons; one of them got into new arrear, and sold his interest for £395. The purchaser was instructed by the agent to retain one year of the old arrear from the outgoing tenant. The recent arrears were of course deducted also from the purchase-money. The balance of the old arrear was retained on the books, but Mr. Murphy could not see how it could be recovered after the arrangement referred to. The whole farm contained 22½ acres statute measure, and the yearly rent was £12 2s. 10d. Mr. Murphy considered that "The Commissioners of Education" had dealt most generously in not deducting the full amount of the old arrear from the outgoing tenant, but by permitting this transaction they had certainly "confiscated all prospective interest in this portion of the estate." Subdivision prevails on this estate, but not nearly to so great an extent as on the Fermanagh property. The houses are tolerably comfortable, and the greater number of the tenants appeared to be industrious; they hold their land at a very low rent over the greater portion of the estate; the rent paid for two townlands is under 13s. and 14s. per statute acre; they would be cheap, situated as they are, at double that rent. "The Commissioners of Education" have undertaken, in conjunction with the adjoining proprietor, to open an arterial drain from one townland, which will reclaim over six acres and afford facility for the drainage of a considerable tract of land. The total expenditure is estimated at over £900, of which the Commissioners are to pay a share in proportion to the land unwatered, but when the improvement is completed steps should be taken to prevent the tenantry from again cutting away the moory surface of the land for firing, a course of proceeding which has rendered the present outlay necessary. A road is much required into one townland. The maps, which were excellent when drawn (1816), are now nearly useless, and in no wise give a true representation of the holdings, many of which have got intermixed. There appears to be no official record of these interchanges; in the instance of a tenant now under eviction, a portion of his holding had been sold sixty years ago; and the schoolmaster of the estate, as successor of a tenant who occupied this portion, has gone into forcible possession of it despite the agent.

This estate, as well as the Enniskillen estate, has deeply suffered for want of more active and intelligent supervision.

Dungannon Royal Free School, County Tyrone.

In 1857 there were sixty-five pupils on the roll of Dungannon School, thirty-two boarders, and thirty-three day boys, of whom thirteen were free pupils, and the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, found the state of instruction to be very satisfactory. The present Head Master, Rev. F. H. Ringwood, M.A., was appointed by the late Primate and had held his office since 1850. He stated to us that at one time, some years ago, he had 160 boarders. At the date of our inquiry there were but thirty-nine pupils on the roll, twenty-one boarders and eighteen day boys, of whom four were free pupils.

Rep., p. 52.

Evid.,
602-3.

Dr. Ringwood attributed the decline in the number of pupils among other reasons to the high party feeling existing in Tyrone, and to the unpopularity of his own political opinions among the local gentry. He stated that there had been no falling off in the quality of the teaching or the number of University distinctions obtained by his pupils, but he intimated an opinion that a new master recently distinguished in the University has advantages over older men in attracting pupils. He believed he had every suitable day boy to be found in the neighbourhood. The great majority of his pupils were Protestant Episcopalians; some of the day boys and one or two boarders were Presbyterians.

Though he was anxious to get Roman Catholic day boys, and would subject no person to any disadvantage on account of his religion, he had reason "to know the Roman Catholic clergy would object to a boy being with him lest he should catch infection from association with other boys," and during his experience he had had but one Roman Catholic pupil, a day scholar.

There were no schools in Dungannon to compete with the Royal School, there being only an Erasmus Smith's school giving a fair English education, and two National schools, which Dr. Ringwood described as "quite denominational."

Dr. Ringwood considered himself under no obligation to receive free pupils, but had distinctly understood from the Primate that it would be agreeable to the wishes of "The Commissioners of Education" that he should receive free boys. Though he got as many as he could that had abilities, and though the free boys were quite as well treated as the others, the supply of candidates was limited from the smallness of the town of Dungannon, and the objection of some parents to their sons being educated gratuitously.

Dr. Ringwood often had pupils paying various amounts, even as low as £2 per annum, where the parents were poor, but objected to their sons being free, but the regular terms for a day boy, including classics, were £10 a year; the fees for boarders were sixty guineas a year, but he had been informed by "The Commissioners of Education" that he could charge what he pleased for boarders, though he understood that he could not charge more than £10 for day pupils. The course of education was classical and mathematical. It did not include natural sciences. No provision was made for giving a commercial education.

Dr. Ringwood, when the school was full, had paid from £800 to £900 a year to assistant masters. At the date of our inquiry he had as assistants two Masters of Arts teaching mathematics and classics, and a foreign master teaching French, German, and drawing; their salaries amounted in all to about £300 per annum.

Evid., 634.

Dr. Ringwood, soon after his appointment, had advanced £3,000 to £4,000 in improving the school buildings under Mr. McCarty's direction and with the consent of "The Commissioners of Education," who repaid the money advanced, but without interest. The late Primate had also contributed to the cost of some of the improvements. The buildings are a great deal more than sufficient for the present requirements of the school, but the extent of ground is insufficient.

the buildings admirably planned, compactly put together, kept neatly painted and whitewashed, and all in good order except the boys' playroom. He remarks the want of a library. He found the senior classes exceedingly well taught in Classics, and they also answered well in Euclid and French, but he found the junior classes backward in all subjects, and in dictation there were very few, either senior or junior, who did not make mistakes. He did not feel confident that all the assistants stood high enough in qualifications, and thought there was a great contrast between Dr. Ringwood's teaching and theirs. The conditions of the town of Dungannon being unfavourable to a large supply of day boys, the school could only succeed as a boarding school, but Mr. Mahaffy had no doubt that a young head master would cause it to revive considerably.

*Evid.,

Dr. Ringwood himself considered that a provision for superannuation would be a very great advantage indeed, introducing fresh energies, and also encouraging the assistant masters, but if he resigned his appointment under present circumstances he would have nothing whatever to fall back upon after his thirty years' service.

The right of appointment of the head master at Dungannon, as at Armagh, is vested in the Primate, and unless legislative provision be made to meet the difficulty, the power to appoint to the office may expire on the occurrence of the next vacancy in the Archbishopric of Armagh.

Mr. Murphy reports that the estate consists of six townlands situated about four to six miles from Dungannon. The area is 3,993a. 1x. 5r. statute measure, of which there are of arable land 1,340 acres; meadow and pasture, 1,380 acres; and of bog, 1,273 acres. The rental is £1,752 3s. 9d., being 13 per cent. over the Poor Law Valuation, exclusive of the houses, and slightly under it if the houses be included.

Up to the year 1851 the lands were held by middlemen, and when the lease under which they held expired the Commissioners got back the lands in an impoverished condition, densely populated, "as is usual under the baneful sway of the middleman." The then agent appears to have gone to work most energetically; the farms were re-adjusted, the fences straightened, and considerable sums expended on improvements.

Three townlands consist of excellent arable land, quite equal in quality to lands on the adjoining property let in most instances at double the rent. The houses on these townlands are comfortable, and the fields well fenced and nicely arranged; and, with a little more attention to the fences in having the thorns cut occasionally, these townlands would present quite a model aspect. In the rental ending November, 1877, there was no arrear on these three townlands, "and indeed there could be no excuse for arrears being due, the tenants having such capital bargains of their farms." All the tenants received on last year's rental an abatement varying from 10 to 15 per cent.

The other three townlands consist of large tracts of bog, with arable land of very fertile character dispersed through it. The holdings upon them are very small. As a consequence, the competition for land is very keen, and the agent has no difficulty in letting the "cut-out" bog at 10s. an acre, its present value being about 1s. per acre; but the densely populated district has no employment for labour, and the tenants are only too anxious to seize upon any outlet where they may employ their time, and add to the size of their farms. Mr. Murphy says there can be no doubt that the sum now charged is too high; but it only serves to equalize the rent of the arable land, which is held below its value. There is an immense tract of bog, in its present state perfectly useless, a large proportion of which with a small outlay might be made available for the production of crops, and for enlarging the existing holdings. The present population are scarcely able to grow enough for their own support, owing to the smallness of their holdings, and it is impossible for them to live with any degree of comfort on their present farms.

The annual outgoings, including a drainage charge of £127 3s. 9d. about to terminate, appear to amount to about £500, leaving a net income of £1,252. Nearly £200 per annum is derived from the letting of turbary to tenants who pay 8s., and "outsiders" who pay 16s., per half acre, and cut the turf for sale. The accounts appeared to be well vouched and carefully audited, but the agent should debit himself with the full rent each year, and not, as his custom is, with only the amount received.

At the date of our inquiry there were 83 pupils on the roll, 49 boarders, and 34 day scholars. Of the day scholars 10 were free pupils, admitted by the head master in the exercise of his own discretion, on the application of the parents, being residents of Binnishillen.

killen and stating their inability to pay the school terms. Dr. Steele had never refused to admit any eligible pupil free on such an application.

The number of pupils, in Dr. Steele's time, had fluctuated greatly, and had ranged from 150 to as few as 60. The largest number of boarders had been 120, and the smallest 34. He thought these fluctuations due, in a great measure, to the migration of boys to England, but knew "no good reason why the number should have fallen, nor any why it had recovered itself." He thought success in University distinctions had no effect, his pupils having been most successful in college at the very time the school was declining, and there had been no change in the teaching, nor any alteration in the terms to explain the variations. An unhappy accident, in which two boys were drowned, had prevented pupils from coming, and was referred to by Dr. Steele as one cause of the decline.

The terms for boarders for the first three years after Dr. Steele's appointment had been fifty guineas per annum, he then raised them to sixty guineas, but this rise did not coincide with the falling off in numbers. He had never had a Roman Catholic boarder, and was of opinion that no conscientious Roman Catholic would send his son as a boarder to Portora. He had hardly ever been without some Roman Catholic day boys, but had not had more than four or five at the same time. He thought that there had never been "the slightest reluctance directly or indirectly to send them to Portora," and that there were no Roman Catholic boys in the vicinity of the class that required such higher education as Portora afforded. It was stated, however, on the part of the Roman Catholic inhabitants of Enniskillen that they would not avail themselves of Portora, but that if they had a school of their own, there would be a very large attendance.

Dr. Steele has received from "The Commissioners of Education" since his appointment a fixed annual stipend of £500. Until January, 1864, he received also an allowance of £350 per annum for assistants, which was then increased to £500. For upwards of ten years after his appointment, as well as during the two previous years while he was at Raphoe, Dr. Steele remained unaware that the Commissioners were charged with any duty of repairing the school buildings. Between 1857 and January, 1860, the Commissioners expended about £2,000 upon additions and improvements executed under the supervision of their architect, and Dr. Steele without their authority, finding himself "practically at liberty to do what he liked," also during the same period laid out on his own account £3,962 3s. 2d. in repairs, alterations, and permanent improvements, some of which the architect thought unnecessary. In February, 1860, the Commissioners, upon his memorial, consented to pay him £1,666 9s. 11d., the sum certified by their architect to be the value of his "permanent substantial repairs," but declined to pay the balance of his expenditure. In January, 1864, he presented a further memorial asking an increase of £150 in the annual grant for assistants, mentioning his own outlay in "permanent improvements" as then amounting to upwards of £3,000, and he offered further to contribute half the sum necessary to erect a hospital and schoolroom, if the Board would vote him the other half. The allowance of £350 was upon that occasion increased to £500, and between February, 1860, and May, 1868, the Board expended £2,567 13s. 11d. upon further works at Portora. During the whole period from 1857 to 1868 the ordinary repairs were executed at Dr. Steele's expense; the Commissioners' architect considered them "outside his province;" Dr. Steele "thought he was to keep the place in repair," and "believed the money the Commissioners gave had nothing to say to the repairs." In 1868, having learned that the Commissioners made liberal allowances for all repairs at Armagh, he made an attempt to obtain repayment of his outlay. The amount of his claim as first put forward was £4,901 9s. 4d., and it included his expenditure upon extensions and improvements as well as upon repairs. He vouched his expenditure by a surveyor's report and otherwise. He also renewed a claim, originally put forward in 1864, for the additional allowance of £150 for assistant masters for the period from 1857 to 1864. A long controversy followed, and the Commissioners, on 26th May, 1871—

"As an equitable case, resolved to recomp Dr. Steele for the annual expenditure of £150 per annum, for the six and a half years from the date of his appointment up to the time when the extra £150 had been granted (1st January, 1866), and a draft for £975 was accordingly drawn; and it was ordered that the Secretary do intimate distinctly to Dr. Steele that the Board had unanimously decided that it will not, on any future occasion, permit any part of these claims, which have been so frequently and fully considered and decided, to be re-opened or re-agitated, and that he must consider these questions as now finally and wholly closed."

Dr. Steele pressed his claim, notwithstanding, for the cost of the repairs, which he separated from the claim for buildings, and on 1st February, 1872, Dr. Kyle informed him by letter that his claims had been brought before the Commissioners, and that—

"They felt they would not be justified in granting the prayer of his memorial for a large sum of money, the particulars and items of which were in no degree specifically stated or set forth in such claim; and the Secretary was ordered to notify that, should Dr. Steele again bring forward a claim, it must be supported by items of particulars and dates, and vouched by documents showing that payment had been in each case made by him."

Dr. Steele had never kept a particular account of the repairs, but he handed his receipts to an accountant, who prepared a schedule, which Dr. Steele forwarded with the vouchers to the Board, saying he had conformed to what they had told him. The vouchers were examined, and the account was investigated by Mr. Fleming; and Dr. Kyle, on 27th April, 1872, wrote to Dr. Steele:—

"DEAR SIR,—In the summons for yesterday's Board the case of your present claim was specially noted, and I fully brought under the consideration of the Board your printed memorial and letter, and I reported that the schedules for expenditure which you forwarded to this office were fully supported (with the exception of an error, in extraction, of £2 14s. 8d., and which I had, therefore, deducted from your claim, reducing it to £1,426 7s. 8d.), by the vouchers and receipts that you had transmitted, and which had been carefully investigated in this office."

Payment was, however, ultimately refused, because Dr. Steele had expended the money without previously receiving authority; and also, because "The Commissioners felt that he had been very liberally treated in having been repaid a great deal of money which he expended without their sanction, and he was also paid up the back money for the salary of the assistant master."

Dr. Steele stated that the Commissioners had been very liberal to him in the way of repairs since 1868, and during that time had never refused anything he applied for; but they had paid nothing for the ordinary annual repairs during the ten and a half years after his appointment, and all the cost of these, which Mr. McCurdy estimated at £200 per annum, had been left upon Dr. Steele. The absence of any systematic supervision of works and repairs by the Commissioners resulted, in this instance, in injudicious if not wasteful expenditure, and led to the controversy with Dr. Steele.

App. A, p.

Though the expenditure upon Portora since 1857 has been very large, Mr. Mahaffy reports the buildings to be rather extensive and handsome than really commodious; the school had at the time of his visit internally a somewhat neglected appearance, whitewashing, painting, scouring of floors, and general cleaning being urgently needed. He considers that a yearly inspection by the Secretary of the Commissioners or other competent officer would have obviated this evil which he thinks sure to arise after a head master has been many years in office.

Mr. Mahaffy reports the highest class to be admirably taught in classics, and that there is not any sounder or more patient scholar in Ireland engaged in teaching than the chief classical master. He found the same good teaching in French and German by a really competent gentleman from Göttingen. In mathematics the answering was indifferent, and in history, geography, dictation, and classics, he found the junior classes deficient, and much improvement required. The discipline of the school left something to be desired, and instances of want of order and regularity were noticed. These defects appeared to Mr. Mahaffy to result mainly from the weariness of thirty years unbroken school work on the part of the head master, and could hardly be obviated by any precaution except the establishment of retiring pensions. He states that the town of Baniskillen is not so well suited as Armagh to produce a good class of day boys, but that there is a large number of rich Protestants in the neighbourhood, and some boys, whose parents cannot afford boarding fees, come to live in the town and attend as day boys.

p. 296.

Mr. Murphy reports that the estate consists of thirty-nine townlands and two townements, in the county of Fermanagh. The area is 5,333a. 3a. 21r. statute measure, and the rental is £2,157 8s. 2d., being 8½ per cent. under the Poor Law Valuation, excluding the buildings, and 39½ per cent. under it if the buildings be included. There are 336 tenancies. The average annual outgoings amounted to £263 12s. The soil of the estate varies considerably in quality and in elevation. The estate was valued in 1816 at £2,714 4s. 2d., which would be 12½ per cent. over the present Poor Law Valuation. There has been practically no change in the rental since 1857. In 1816 large tracts of land now under crop were valued at a nominal figure, as at that period they were used as turbary, and held by the tenantry as appurtenant to their farms.

The portion of the estate nearest Enniskillen may be classed as medium lands. Four townlands are of rather a superior character, and the tenantry on them appear to be comparatively comfortable, on the remainder of the estate the tenants are poor and indifferently housed, and the soil is thin, wet, and utterly unsuited to support the number of people who are located on it. The lands, as compared with the Poor Law Valuation, are most unequally let, thus one townland is let at 10½ per cent. over the valuation, though the rent is only 13s. 6d. per statute acre for land of excellent quality, while another, much of which consists of deep rich moorland, is let at 11½ per cent. under the valuation, the acreable rent being 12s. Some lands adjoining were let 75 per cent. over the Poor Law Valuation, but the tenant had given them up, the landlord refusing a rent of 25 per cent. over that valuation. If the farms were of a suitable size and judiciously arranged, the tenantry could better afford to pay a rent of 25 per cent. over the valuation, than they can now pay a rent of 8½ per cent. under it. On various parts of the estate the tenantry, heretofore, without let or hindrance, have been in the habit of making bricks for sale, no regard being had as to how the clay was taken up, or to the levelling of the ground afterwards; as a consequence considerable damage has been done. This waste will be prevented in future by new regulations on which the agent now insists. In the year 1855, the arrear on the estate amounted to £9,281 9s. 0½d.; the arrear on the rental of 1878, was £738. Between 1840 and 1863, £11,645, or thereabouts, was remitted, in the shape of arrears and abatements of rent, and nearly £1,000 was allowed for drainage and roads. Tenant-right prevails to a considerable extent. The agent endeavours to limit the price within reasonable bounds, but his efforts appear to be disregarded. Thus a tenant holding five acres, Irish measure, at £6 4s. rent, being about to dispose of his interest, the agent fixed the value at £80, and decided that the adjoining tenant should have the farm, but the outgoing tenant sold it, without reference to the agent, at £110, to a tenant of a distant townland. There are many instances on the estate where the tenants are paupers, only live by letting their land, and do not pay their rent. Subdivision has prevailed to a most disastrous extent, and appears to have proceeded without let or hindrance, and notwithstanding the vigilance of the present agent still proceeds; one farm is subdivided into three parts and three houses have been built upon it. A holding which only contains 7½ Irish acres, the whole rent being only £3 10s., has been divided into two parts, containing 5 and 2½ acres respectively, and "this kind of thing has been the rule, and not the exception, on this unfortunate estate." As the tithery on the estate became exhausted, the tenants held on to the soil, and have partially reclaimed about 170 acres for which they are not rented. No effort was made to restrain this action on the part of the tenantry, and now they assert their right to retain these lands free of rent. The agent had the reclaimed bogs measured, and gave notice to the tenants that they would be charged from 15s. to 25s. an acre for them. The tenants appeared very dissatisfied, and were disposed to resist. Altogether a most unsatisfactory spirit seemed to exist, a sure consequence of the laxity or want of rule which has prevailed on this estate.

There are five National schools on the estate, viz. :—Three under male, and two under female teachers. None of these schools receive any assistance from "The Commissioners of Education," nor are they under their patronage; they consist of thatched cottages, generally much out of repair, and totally devoid of the appliances necessary to inculcate decent habits; one of them has a damp, earthen floor. Mr. Murphy was informed that the Board offered to improve the schools, but their assistance was declined, as they wished to have the patronage transferred to them.

Raphoe Royal Free School, County Donegal.

The Rev. James A. Weir, M.D., the present Head Master of Raphoe Royal School, was appointed in 1857, on the removal of the Rev. Dr. Steele from Raphoe to Enniskillen. Dr. Steele's boarders having migrated with him, Dr. Weir, on his appointment, found only a few day boys at the school. At the date of our inquiry, forty-six pupils were on the roll, twenty of whom were boarders.

There were four free pupils at the school. Dr. Weir stated that he had never refused a free boy; he required only that he should come fairly dressed, be regular in his attendance, and of good character.

The great majority of the day boys were Presbyterians. One was a Roman Catholic. Of the boarders, about one-half were Presbyterians and one-half members of the Church of Ireland. The Head Master stated that Roman Catholic boys were afforded every facility for attending the school as day scholars, but that he would not care to have a Roman Catholic boarder, though he would take any boy. He thought that there was no appreciable number of boys in the neighbourhood, of the class which ought to be at the school, who did not attend it.

Evid., 772.

At the date of our inquiry there were no Royal Scholarships in Trinity College connected with the school, and no school Exhibitions. The master had frequently made application to "The Commissioners of Education" to allow his boys to compete for the Royal Scholarships with those from the other Royal schools, but had always been told by the Secretary that the Act of Parliament barred the way. He further stated that had this difficulty been removed, many of his boys would have been able to obtain these Scholarships. The want of Exhibitions at the school itself seems to have been much felt. The master had solicited "The Commissioners of Education" repeatedly to found such, and they had since given £20 a year for prizes. Six boys, selected by the master, were examined, and the prizes were awarded by an examiner appointed by the Commissioners.

The buildings were stated by the master to be in good repair, requiring only some improvement in the arrangement of apartments for masters and servants. The repairs executed since Dr. Weir's appointment had been paid for partly out of his own pocket: "The Commissioners of Education," he stated, "have all along given about half the amount expended." The previous master, Dr. Steele, not only paid the whole of the expense of the repairs during the two years of his Head Mastership, but also £200 for improvements. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that "The Commissioners of Education" should exercise their powers by defraying the expenses of the repairs of Raphoe school-house out of the funds of the other Royal schools." Some of the funds of Cavan and Enniskillen have, since 1857, been applied in payment of balances standing in the books of the Commissioners against Raphoe school. For instance, in 1874, £543 1s. 10d. was transferred from the Cavan account. The total amount of the annual grant made by the Commissioners towards the maintenance and advancement of this school (exclusive of the sum allowed for repairs) was, at the date of our inquiry, £220, made up as follows:—£100 for the head master, £60 for the classical assistant, £40 for the mathematical assistant, and £20 for prizes.

Mr. Mahaffy visited this school; he found two assistant masters, fifteen boarders and thirty day boys at the school, and reports favourably as to the state of education. The school is doing quietly and without making any display a considerable amount of work; the Head Master, in spite of his deafness, is a sound and careful teacher, and his assistant in science is, Mr. Mahaffy states, perhaps the best he has met in Ireland. Mr. Mahaffy calls attention to the dirty condition of the school-room floors in all the Royal Schools.

App. D, p.

Mr. Murphy reports that the estate, which is known as the Townawilly Estate, comprises twelve townlands, and is situated about five miles north-east of the town of Donegal. It contains 7,914 acres, of which 6,018 are mountain land held as a commonage, leaving 1,896 acres farmed by 163 tenants. The rental amounts to £523 12s. 9d., including £15 as a game rent. The lands are let under the Poor Law Valuation. The tenantry are poor, the greater number having been recipients of relief during the past spring and early summer. There are good maps of the estate made in 1846, at which period the lands were carefully valued, and estimated to be worth £543 15s. 8d. per annum. The estate was valued in 1816 at £384 13s. The farms have been well laid out, and the greater number are well fenced. The tenantry appear, from an early date, to have been difficult to manage; in 1820 the Commissioners reported that they were unable to collect the rents by reason of the refractory disposition of the tenants. In 1831 the management of the estate was handed over to the masters of the school, but subsequently taken out of their hands, the estate being in a state of "utter insubordination." In 1844 the late Mr. G. C. G. Wray was appointed agent, and appears to have made vigorous efforts to reduce the estate into regularity and order. The farms were squared, and "randale" was abolished; between the years 1844 and 1855 the improvements carried out, with the permanent outgoings, exhausted almost all the receipts, the whole amount lodged to credit of the Commissioners for these eleven years being £570 8s. Mr. Wray resigned in 1851, previous to which an attempt was made to blow up his house; the estate was, however, in a fair way of becoming manageable under him. The two succeeding agents did nothing, and, when they appeared on the estate, were "hunted off." It is only surprising that the present agent has been able to control the tenantry or to succeed in performing his duty with even the moderate success which has attended his efforts. In 1837 the arrears due amounted to about £1,500; at November, 1878, the arrears due amounted to £1,995 12s. 10d. Since 1875 the tenants appear to have been falling back. The annual outgoings of the estate appeared to be about £150, leaving for the four years 1875 to 1878 a net income of £374 per annum, but the sums lodged to the credit of the Commissioners only amounted in all to £1,055 15s. 1d., showing an annual expenditure of £189 15s. on permanent outgoings, improvements, salary to the master of tenantry school, law costs, &c. The allowances for improvements are now discontinued. There is a large tract of turbary on the estate, but a road to the bog is much required. The estate is a most difficult one to manage, the arrears, many of them carried over since 1847, are an incumbrance that can never be removed by the tenants, but until they are removed all attempts, on the part either of the tenantry or of the agent, to introduce a more regular system will be futile. The agent is of opinion that a sum of £1,420 18s. 1d. should be now wiped off the books, retaining the balance of £574 14s. 9d. which has accumulated in late years. Mr. Murphy has no doubt that the agent's view is correct in this matter. The arrears remitted, a strict band should be kept on the estate. There is no reason why the tenants should not pay their rents as punctually as those on the adjoining property; their rents are very moderate, their houses are moderately comfortable, and they have plenty of fuel. Intrinsically the lands are worth close on double the rent paid for them, but occupied as they are in such small holdings, the rent can bear but little proportion to the value of the land. The accounts appear to be accurately kept and carefully audited; but the agent should debit himself with the whole rent and arrears due each year, his custom now being only to debit himself with the rent received. The maps and valuation books should also be revised, so that the records of the property may accurately represent the holdings of the tenants.

For many years the agency fees upon this estate have been paid at the rate of 10 per cent. upon the amount received, being double the usual sum.

Carysfort Royal Free English School, County of Wicklow.

This is an English day school, attended by children of the poorer inhabitants of the district.

At the date of our inquiry there were thirty-three pupils on the roll, all of whom were Protestants. Four were children maintained by the Protestant Orphan Society, and for the tuition of each of these the master received from the Society a sum of 5s. per annum, with results fees. All the other pupils were free. The teacher's salary was £55 per annum. App. P.,
p. 388.

The master stated in his return that the school premises were in good order, having been thoroughly repaired a few years ago at the expense of the Commissioners, but that they required painting, &c., and that the privy was too near the schoolroom door.

Mr. Moore reports that the school seemed in every respect neglected. It had not been professionally inspected, until his visit, since 1857. The premises, being built of stone, looked well on the outside, but even there signs of neglect might be noticed. Inside, the walls were in a miserable state, and one of the two schoolrooms was occupied with coal and lumber. Just outside the schoolroom door was an open privy with no outlet whatever, and the master stated that in summer the schoolroom was almost unbearable. Mr. Moore found eighteen little boys and girls at the school, who answered fairly in spelling and arithmetic, but their writing was not so good as it ought to have been. The master seemed intelligent and well informed, and Mr. Moore had no doubt that if he was directed by proper inspection, he would raise the school to a state of efficiency and usefulness. App. C. p.

The Sheens estate, containing 590a. 0a. 10r., statute measure, belongs to Carysfort school. The present rental is £132 1s. 6d. per annum, and the average net income of the property, according to the agent, was about £90 a year. Exhib.
2583-94.

Mr. Murphy reports that the estate is situated about eight miles from Rathdrum and two from Aughrim, in the county of Wicklow. Twenty tenancies are shown on the rental; but in reality there are only nine tenants of farms, and one of a house and garden. Of the 590a. 0a. 10r., contained in the townland, 284a. 3a., are mountain, which the tenants hold in common. The remaining 305a. 1r., are arable and pasture land, varying in quality and in elevation. The school teacher holds 5a. 3a. 4r., free of rent, "as a perquisite," and occupies the school as a residence, one small apartment being set apart as a schoolroom. The rent received is slightly more than 6 per cent. higher than the Poor Law valuation. The yearly outgoings averaged £46 7s. 10d., of which £25 1s. 7d. was allowed to the tenants for lime, to be applied to the land. The Roman Catholic children of the estate received instruction in a National school adjoining the estate. The tenants appeared to be comfortable; they hold their farms very much under the rent which they might fairly be asked to pay, and receive, in the shape of App. D., p.

lime, an abatement equal to 19 per cent. of the rent each year. They supply themselves with fuel by cutting away the surface of the mountain, which has already too little vegetable surface, and will soon be utterly denuded. The bailiff lives some four miles away; he did not appear to know the holdings of any of the tenants, and, in fact, knew little or nothing about the estate; his salary was only £4 a year. The tenants appeared thankful for the leniency with which they had been treated, and paid their rents regularly. The shooting over the estate was let for £2 per annum.

DIOCESAN FREE SCHOOLS.

Com., 1854-
5, Rep., pp.

These schools were founded in 1570 by the Act of 12 Elizabeth, c. 1, by which it was provided that from thenceforth there should be a free school within every diocese of Ireland. Their history, down to 1857, will be found at pages 24 to 46 of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8.

In 1857 there were in operation Fourteen Diocesan Free Schools, namely: Ballymena, for the dioceses of Armagh and Connor; Carlow, for the dioceses of Ossery and Leighlin; Cork, for the diocese of Cork; Downpatrick, for the dioceses of Down and Dromore; Elphin, for the diocese of Elphin; Limerick, for the dioceses of Limerick, Killaloe, and Kilfenora; Londonderry (called Foyle College), for the diocese of Derry; Mallow, for the diocese of Cloyne; Monaghan, for the dioceses of Clogher, Kilmore, and Raphoe; Mullingar, for the dioceses of Meath and Ardagh; Naas, for the diocese of Kildare; Rosserberry, for the diocese of Ross; Tuam, for the diocese of Tuam; and Wexford, for the diocese of Ferns.

Five Diocesan Schools were not then in operation, and had for some years been in abeyance, namely:—Dungarvan, for the dioceses of Waterford and Lismore; Loughrea, for the dioceses of Clonfert and Kilmaedungh; Thurles, for the dioceses of Cashel and Emly; Tralee, for the dioceses of Ardfert and Agaboe; and Wicklow, for the dioceses of Dublin and Clondelagh.

In 1862 a number of the inhabitants of Waterford presented a memorial to the Lord Lieutenant praying for the establishment of a diocesan school at Waterford, upon which the Commissioners of Education united the endowments of the Dungarvan and Thurles Schools, and established a school at Waterford for the united dioceses of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore: in the same year the Lord Lieutenant appointed Mr. William J. Valentine to be Head Master.

p. 52.

In 1866 the Rev. E. Geoghagan, Head Master of the Mullingar Diocesan School, died, and as no successor to him was appointed, the endowment then fell into abeyance.

c. 42.

Fourteen diocesan schools were, therefore, still in existence on the 1st January, 1871, when the Irish Church Act, 1869, came into operation. Apart from buildings and adjacent land, the endowment of the diocesan schools consisted of a perpetual tax upon the incomes of the clergy of the dioceses in which they were situated, or with which they were connected. The Act preserved the life interests of those who, at the time of its passing, were Masters of diocesan schools in operation, so long as they should continue to perform the duties of their offices; but made no provision for the future support of the schools after the determination of those life interests, and merged the endowment in the general property of the Church. The Church Temporalities Commissioners were not enabled by the Act of 1869 to commute the life annuities of the diocesan school Masters; but by the Amending Act of 1873, the power of commutation was extended to these annuities, and the Masters were thereby enabled, on commutation, to deal with the Representative Church Body for the composition of their annuities, and for their release from the obligation to continue the performance of duties. Eleven of the fourteen gentlemen who, in 1869, had been in receipt of salaries as Masters of diocesan schools, availed themselves of the opportunity thus afforded, and commuted their life interests. They at the same time compounded with the Representative Church Body, and received two-thirds of the capitalised value of their life interests, being freed from the obligation to continue duty, while the Representative Church Body retained the remaining third. The other three Masters did not commute, but continued to receive their annuities from the Commissioners of Church Temporalities, subject to the obligation to perform the duties of their offices. Ten of the eleven schools whose Masters commuted and compounded have been closed, while the Naas school, the Master of which is in receipt of an annuity from the Church Temporalities Commissioners, is not in operation; and thus at the date of our inquiry but three diocesan schools remained in operation, namely, Ballymena, for the dioceses of Armagh and Connor; Sligo, formerly Elphin, for the dioceses of Elphin, Clonfert, and Kilmaedungh; and Tuam, for the dioceses of Tuam, Killaloe, and Achonry. The Masters of the Diocesan Schools of Ballymena and Sligo are in receipt of annuities paid by the Commissioners of

c. 99.

Church Temporalities; and the Master of the Tuam school, though he had compounded his annuity, still carried on the school. It does not appear that on the occasion of the passing of either of the statutes referred to above, "The Commissioners of Education," in whom the Diocesan schools were vested, or any other person interested in education, made any effort to preserve the endowments of these schools, or to continue the obligation of the existing Masters to perform their duty. Practically, the result was that the Commissioners of Church Temporalities became, by virtue of the Irish Church Act, the owners of the perpetual endowments, subject only to the payment of the existing salaries, or their capital value if commuted, while the existing Schoolmasters were enabled, by the Act of 1872, to divide the then capital value of the existing life interests with the Representative Church Body, and to obtain a release from the obligation to teach. The Irish Church Act, 1869, and the Amending Act, 1872, have thus in effect put an end to the Diocesan Schools.

The property in the school buildings and lands was not dealt with by the Legislature, and no provision was made, on the determination of the existing Masters' interests, to regulate or permanently secure their use for purposes of education, or to dispose of the proceeds of their letting or sale in the cases where they remained vested in "The Commissioners of Education."

Ballymena Diocesan Free School, County of Antrim, for the Diocese of Armagh and Connor.

This is one of the three diocesan schools still in existence. The Master, Rev. Robert King, did not commute his life interest, and was at the date of our enquiry in receipt of an annual salary of £131 8s., paid by the Commissioners of Church Temporalities, terminable on his death or resignation. The school buildings were erected by Grand Jury presentment in 1827, at the cost of £1,000, and stand upon an acre of land, granted rent free for the purpose by the proprietor of the soil.

The Master informed us that he had added to and improved the buildings at a cost of between £900 and £1,000, and that they were in tolerable repair. He stated that for some years previous to 1879 the school had been in a very unsatisfactory condition. The number of scholars was too small to admit of assistant masters being employed, and the education of the pupils was entirely in the hands of the Master, who "with some aid from a French gentleman, taught all English and classical subjects himself." In 1878 only twelve scholars attended the school. Six of these were boarders and six day boys. Of the six boarders five were sons of the Master. Mr. King stated that the admission of free pupils was a matter in his own absolute discretion, and that he had occasionally admitted free day pupils. He further stated that "for boarders, in case of meritorious boys (i.e., of poor parents), reductions were made, which might vary from £10 to £90, and religious restrictions did not influence him to reject any from such benefit."

Mr. Mahaffy reports that difficulties in the school management had arisen from religious jealousies among the Protestant denominations of Ballymena, but that these had been overcome, and the school had lately undergone an amalgamation with another school in the town. Within the past two years the inhabitants of Ballymena subscribed a large sum for the support of the school, having confidence in the present Master. The business of the school had been recently interrupted by illness; many of the boys had scattered and had not yet re-assembled, and Mr. Mahaffy found the children present mostly new scholars, who had as yet made small advance. He has no doubt that, in a few years, Ballymena will become, like Coleraine and Lurgan, the focus of a very good and well attended day school, though it is not likely to attract many boarders. He considers that the old diocesan school-house is not well fitted for its purpose; but no provision appears to have been made to secure its use permanently for a school.

Carlow Diocesan Free School, County of Carlow, for the Dioceses of Ossory and Leighlin.

Rep. p. 33.
Evil.,

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, found the Diocesan School-house at Carlow roofless, and in a state of complete dilapidation. In 1857, "The Commissioners of Education" sold and conveyed the school premises to the Carlow Town Commissioners in consideration of £200. This sum "The Commissioners of Education" invested on the 12th October, 1857, in the purchase of £223 9s. 10d. Government new £3 per cent. stock, the dividends upon which were paid to the Master, Rev. D. H. Scott, until 1873. In the minutes of "The Commissioners of Education" of 23rd February, 1858, it is stated that "a letter was read from Archbishop Stopford forwarding resolutions of certain clergymen, stating their opinion that the ruins of the old school-house in Carlow ought not to have been sold by this board, and calling attention to the unsatisfactory state of the diocesan school." No action was taken upon this letter.

After the sale of the old school-house the school was carried on by Mr. Scott, in a house rented by him for the purposes of the school. It continued in operation until 1873, when Mr. Scott commuted, compounded (receiving a sum of £792 5s. 4d.), and retired. The balance of Mr. Scott's commutation money, amounting to £396 2s. 9d. (being one-third of the entire sum), was retained by the Representative Church Body.

Since Mr. Scott's retirement the school has been closed. The accruing dividends of the £223 9s. 10d. before-mentioned Government new £3 per cent. stock are, from time to time, invested in the Government funds, and added to the original stock, the whole of which is placed by "The Commissioners of Education" to the credit of "Carlow Diocesan School."

This school ceased to exist in January, 1873, when the Master, the Rev. Dr. O'Brien, commuted, compounded, and retired. The school-house, which was built by Grand Jury presentment at a cost of £1,000, was handed over by the Master on his retirement to a caretaker for the Grand Jury.

In a return dated March 8, 1879, furnished to us by Dr. Kyle, the school buildings are described as in a very bad state of repair when given up by the Master.

By the terms of the lease under which the school premises were held they reverted to the lord of the soil as soon as the school ceased to be a Diocesan School. At the date of our inquiry Mr. Mulholland, as owner in fee, had given the use of the buildings, free of rent, to the Committee of an Intermediate School which had recently been established by private enterprise, and was then in operation; but this school could not be regarded as a Diocesan Free School, and did not appear to possess any endowment.

Limerick Diocesan Free School, for the Dioceses of Limerick, Killaloe, and Kilfenora.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that in 1857 the Limerick Diocesan School was in a very unsatisfactory state, there was then but one pupil under instruction, and the Master was in infirm health. He resigned in the same year. The Rev. Dr. Hall was the Master for ten years before 1875, and during that period had no pupils; he commuted and compounded in 1872, when he received the sum of £1,405 0s. 0d., two-thirds of his commutation money, the remainder, £702 10s., being retained by the Representative Church Body. He remained in occupation of the schoolhouse, which is a commodious and substantial building, situate at Roxborough-road, Limerick, erected at a cost of £1,640, derived from Grand Jury presentments. It occupies a site containing 1A. 2B. 19P. of land, in the vicinity of the city. The annual value of the premises was estimated at £62 3s. 8d. by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8. In 1875 they had become so dilapidated as to be worth only about £30 per annum, but having been since repaired and improved might in 1879 have been worth about £60 per annum.

At the date of our inquiry the premises were occupied as a Free Primary School for destitute female children, chiefly boarders, sustained by voluntary contributions, and managed by the Rev. James P. Gregg, the Protestant incumbent of the parish, as a strictly Protestant institution. This complete change in the destination of the school took place under the management of "The Commissioners of Education," in the manner stated by Mr. Gregg at our public court held in Limerick, and in the evidence of Mr. Fleming.

Dr. Hall, having compounded, was in 1873 anxious to go away from the schoolhouse. He applied to "The Commissioners of Education," who took the opinion of the Solicitor-General "as to the Limerick Diocesan School and the Diocesan Schools in general," which the Secretary laid on the table at a meeting held on the 28th July, 1873, when—

"As many important legal questions were involved, it was ordered that this matter do stand over until some of the legal members of the Board are present."

Mr. Fleming could not find "that it ever ceased to stand over," and Dr. Hall remained in possession until his death.

Early in 1874, Dr. Hall offered the buildings to Mr. Gregg, as rector of the parish; Mr. Gregg called on Dr. Kyle on 23rd April, 1874, and soon afterwards sent in an application to become tenant, or to purchase the place.

11474-5.*

For some six months he got no answer from the Commissioners, but having sent the Rev. Mr. Hackett, a clergyman in Dublin, to see Dr. Kyle, he ultimately received a reply to his proposal, dated 13th October, 1874, asking him to put in writing a formal proposition to become tenant or purchaser of the schoolhouse, stating the rent or amount of purchase-money which he was prepared to give.

In the meantime Dr. Hall had died and the premises were in the possession of his widow. Mr. Gregg found a great number of people seeking to become possessed of the place—some offering money to Mrs. Hall—and trying to get the key, "because there was a general impression that there was a want of title to the place."

*Evid.,

Mrs. Hall asked Mr. Gregg to give her some money, and offered to give him the possession, and let him deal with the Commissioners then. Mr. Gregg had not made any formal proposition, as requested by Dr. Kyle, as the buildings were in a very dilapidated state, but, on receiving Mrs. Hall's proposal, he asked Mr. Hackett again to call on Dr. Kyle to ascertain what course he should take. Dr. Kyle "did not say anything decided," but by a letter, dated 4th November, 1874, Mr. Hackett intimated to Mr. Gregg that if he got into possession of the premises, and "in that position had to deal with the Commissioners, all would be right." He at once paid Mrs. Hall £30, paid £7 10s. rates due, and got possession under a deed, dated 5th November, 1874, granting him all Mrs. Hall's "estate" in the premises.

At a meeting of the Commissioners on 20th November, 1874:—

"The Secretary having reported the death of the Rev. Mr. Hall, late diocesan schoolmaster of Limerick, and the very many legal questions that might arise in reference to the school premises, in consequence of the abolition of diocesan schools; and having stated that several parties were desirous to purchase or to rent the school premises.—It was ordered that a fully stated case as to the rights, &c., &c., of the Commissioners as to the school premises be laid before Council by the solicitors, and that as a case in reference to this school had been heretofore submitted to the Right Hon. Hugh Law, when Solicitor-General to the late Government, this case be also sent to him."

On 25th November Mr. Gregg called on Dr. Kyle and told him he was in possession. He said "I know you are in possession, I don't want to hear anything about it," and at the same time he said he did not know what the Commissioners could do with the rent if they got it. The matter next came before the Commissioners on 29th January, 1875, when—

Reid,

"The Secretary laid on the table the various documents in connexion with the school premises held from Messrs. Watson, &c., by the Commissioners, and the cases as to the powers of the Commissioners in reference thereto, the late diocesan schoolmaster having recently died, and Mr. Law's opinion on said cases, together with several letters from the Rev. Mr. Gregg (now in possession of the school premises), rector of the parish in which the school premises are situated, stating his anxiety to purchase or to take a lease of them for the purpose of opening a school there. Considerable discussion took place on the subject, and the opinions of Mr. Law having been carefully considered.—It was resolved that Mr. Gregg should be permitted to remain in possession as caretaker for this Board for a period of two years, without being charged any rent during that period.—Mr. Gregg undertaking to give up quiet possession to this Board if called upon to do so—on condition of his putting the house into fair repair. After the expiration of the said two years this Board will accept Mr. Gregg as their tenant at a moderate and fair rent, such rent to be from time to time invested in public securities, and dividends thereon also to be invested to the credit of this endowment, and made to accumulate for that purpose."

This resolution was conveyed to Mr. Gregg by the following letter:—

"8, Clare-street, Dublin,
1st February, 1875.

DEAR SIR,—The entire case of the Limerick Diocesan school, and your proposals in connexion therewith, as well as the powers of the Commissioners, were fully taken into consideration by the Commissioners, the Bishop of Limerick being present, and I was directed to state to you that the Commissioners are willing to allow you to remain in possession of the school premises for two years, from March 25th, 1875, you giving a stated undertaking that you will at any time during that period of two years, if called upon by this Board, give up possession to it. During said period no charge will be made against you for occupation rent, on condition that you put the premises into a fair state of repair, and that you will act in the capacity of caretaker for this Commission. As the expiration of the aforesaid two years the school premises will be permitted to be held by you at a fair yearly rent payable to this Board. You will have the goodness to fully consider this letter, and let me have your formal reply to this letter and its propositions. As the Bishop told me he would not be unwilling to talk to you on this subject, I think it would be advisable that you should see his lordship before writing to

Yours truly,
W. O. KYLE, Secretary.

The Rev. James F. Gregg."

Reid,

Mr. Gregg wrote in reply on 5th February, 1875, objecting to the terms proposed, on the ground that in addition to the expenses already incurred by him, amounting to nearly £75, he was required, although only a caretaker, to lay out a considerable sum of money in repairs, and to remain for two years liable to be called on at any time to surrender the premises, no rent being fixed for any subsequent tenancy. He stated that he expected to have become at once a tenant, so that he could immediately go to work, and that he wanted "simply to be tenant." To that letter he received no reply, and had no further communication with the Commissioners for upwards of four years,—so he came to the conclusion that they had not got any title, and he "went on and expended £400 on the premises." We could find no entry in the Secretary's book of any further proceeding of the Commissioners in reference to the matter. After Mr. Fleming's examination, and shortly before our inquiry at Limerick, Mr. Gregg received the following letter:—

"8, Clare-street, Dublin,
29th August, 1879.

DEAR SIR,—You will remember that when, in the year 1875, you were put into possession as caretaker of the Limerick Diocesan school-house, it was agreed that an acknowledgment was to be entered into that you should give a distinct undertaking that you would at any time during the period of two years, if called upon by this Board, give up possession to it. That acknowledgment, if it was ever given, must have expired two years ago, and the Board now direct me to obtain from you a fresh acknowledgment of a similar character. The Commissioners would willingly accept you as their tenant, but they have been advised that they have no power to do so.

Yours faithfully,
ARNOLD F. GRAVES, Secretary.

Rev J. F. Gregg."

Mr. Gregg did not reply until he got the following farther letter, dated 20th September, 1879:—

"DEAR SIR,—I beg you will send a reply to mine of the 29th ultimo. The object of the Board in asking you to sign the acknowledgment referred to is simply to preserve their title to the property; it is not their intention to dispute your possession.

Yours faithfully,

ARNOLD GRAVES, Secretary.

Rev. J. F. Gregg."

To this letter Mr. Gregg replied, in substance stating that he had been led to lay out money on the place, which he had found in a state of great dilapidation, and that he had put the premises in repair, but that he had never been a caretaker, and had never made the agreement alleged by the Secretary in his first letter.

The matter stood in this position at the date of our inquiry (Oct. 1, 1879). Our report upon the institution established by Mr. Gregg in the diocesan school-house will be found infra, p. 212.

Londonderry Diocesan Free School, for the Diocese of Derry (commonly called Foyle College).

The history of this institution down to 1857 may be found in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8.

The school buildings were situate upon a portion of the See lands granted for the purpose by the Bishop, and were erected in 1814 at a cost of £13,000, contributed by the Bishop, the London Companies, the Irish Society, and the Grand Jury of the County of Londonderry. The endowments in 1857 consisted of those buildings, the Diocesan Schoolmaster's endowment of £92 6s. 2d. per annum, an annual grant from the Mercers Company of £50, and annual payments from the Irish Society amounting in 1852, including Exhibitions, to £140.

In 1872, the Rev. W. P. Robinson, the then master, commuted, compounded, and retired, receiving £1,035 10s. 4d., being two-thirds of the commutation money—the balance, amounting to £317 16s., being retained by the Representative Church Body.

Upon the retirement of Mr. Robinson the endowment of Foyle College as a Diocesan Free School ceased. The College, however, is still in active operation, and in receipt of a large annual grant from the Irish Society. Our report upon it will be found infra, p. 167.

From the return made to us by "The Commissioners of Education," it appears that they do not claim any interest in the school buildings, which the present Master of Foyle College states the Irish Society look upon as their own property.

There was no diocesan school-house at Mallow, and we could not trace the acre of land mentioned by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, as being the school premises, and valued at £1 per annum.

Monaghan Diocesan Free School, for the Diocese of Clogher, Kilmore, and Raphoe.

In the year 1866, Mr. Maurice C. Hime (now Master of Foyle College) was appointed by the Lord Lieutenant to be Master of the Monaghan Diocesan School. In the year 1872, he commuted and compounded, receiving a sum of £1,449 13s. 5d., being two-thirds of the commutation money—the balance, amounting to £719 18s. 8d., being retained by the Representative Church Body. He continued to carry on the school until 1878, when he was appointed Master of Foyle College, and removed to Londonderry.

Mr. Hime stated that thinking that the Commissioners of Education had nothing further to do with the Monaghan School after the passing of the Irish Church Act, 1869, he informed them that he should decline to fill up the forms which they used to send him annually; and he did not send them any further returns after 1869. At the time of his removal to Londonderry he was advised by counsel that during his lifetime he had a right to carry on the Diocesan School at Monaghan by himself or by deputy. He advertised for a Master to carry on the school at Monaghan, and agreed with a gentleman to do so, who was to pay £1 per annum rent for the school-house, "for fear he might look on it as a freehold." Mr. Hime said that he had previously asked "The Commissioners of Education" whether the school was in their gift, or in the gift of the Church Temporalities Commissioners, to whom he also wrote, and "both bodies said they had nothing to say to it." After Mr. Hime had arranged for the continuance of the school, he got a letter from Dr. Kyle, asking him if it was true that he had appointed a successor in the Monaghan Diocesan School. He replied that it was perfectly true, and Dr. Kyle then wrote that the Commissioners desired to inform him that he had been guilty of a highly illegal act. Mr. Hime thereupon broke off the arrangement, and "sent back the key to the Lord Lieutenant through a solicitor in Monaghan."

The school buildings were erected in 1825, at a cost of £1,500 (the recovered arrears of a private bequest, aided by a grand jury presentment), and Mr. Hime expended some £1,400 or £1,500 of his own money in improving them. These with the lands attached were, at the date of our inquiry, unoccupied, and in charge of a caretaker for the Commissioners. The grass was sold, and the proceeds went to pay the caretaker. The lands were stated by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8 to contain 32. Or. 38r., and Mr. Hime described them as "splendid grass land, which he left in excellent order." The school premises were, in 1857, valued at £48 4s. 9d. per annum.

The endowment for this school fell into abeyance in 1866, on the death of the Rev. K. There being then no existing life interest, the endowment, amounting to £120 per annum, passed immediately to the Commissioners of Church Temporalities. In his return dated March 8, 1879, Dr. Kyle reported to us that the school had ceased long since, that the old school premises had been sold, and were then represented by £547 1s. 11d. Government New £3 per cent. Stock, in the hands of "The Commissioners of Education." The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the proceeds of the sale of the former Diocesan school houses at Longford and Trim then amounted to £415 15s. 11d., producing £12 9s. 5d. per annum.

Mr. Lane is now a very old man, and the school has not been in operation for a long time.

Sligo Diocesan Free School, for the Dioceses of Elphin, Clonfert, and Kilmacdonagh.

Rep., p. 38.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, recommended that the endowments of the Elphin and Loughrea Diocesan Free Schools should be united. This was done in 1862, when "The Commissioners of Education" united the endowments for the dioceses of Elphin, Clonfert, and Kilmacdonagh, and established a Diocesan Free School at Sligo, which, at the date of our inquiry, was still in operation.

The endowment consisted of an annuity of £163 3s. 6d., payable by the Commissioners of Church Temporalities to the Master, Mr. W. C. Eades, M.A. This sum included the annual interest produced by a sale of the land attached to the former Diocesan School.

house at Elphin, the capital of which was appropriated by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for Ireland, and passed to the Commissioners of Church Temporalities, as the land had been part of the See Estate.

Diocesan Free Schools.

After its removal from Elphin the Diocesan School was held in a house belonging to the trustees of a school which before the transfer had been established in Sligo by private enterprise. Mr. Eades, as Master of the Diocesan School, was appointed Master of the Sligo school by these trustees, but the school premises formed no portion of the endowment, and were private property.

In 1879 there were twenty-six pupils on the roll, four boarders, and twenty-two day pupils. The Master stated that he was not aware that anyone had the right to say a boy should be admitted free, or at a reduced rate. The admission of free pupils was a matter entirely in his own discretion. At the date of our inquiry there were two free pupils at the school, both members of the Church of Ireland. Since the appointment of Mr. Eades there had not been any visitation of his school by "The Commissioners of Education": in fact he had received no communications whatever from them, with the exception of half-yearly returns which they required him to fill up. He stated that the Diocesan School was transferred to Sligo to supply an actual want felt by the inhabitants of the district; that the existence of the school was dependant upon the maintenance of the endowment, and that, even if the present endowment were continued, he did not think it would be possible to keep up the school unless the Master appointed was a person possessed of private means. Evid. 893.

Mr. Mahaffy found two assistants, two boarders, and twenty-five day boys in attendance. He reports that when the present Master dies the school must collapse, if not reconstructed by the people of Sligo; and that at the date of his visit it was conducted principally by a deputy Master, who was an able and competent man, but had no material interest in the school. The state of the Head Master's health compelled him frequently to absent himself. App. A, p. 244.

Tuam Diocesan Free School, County of Galway, for the Dioceses of Tuam, Killala, and Achoury.

This school was at the date of our inquiry still in operation, although in 1874 the Master, the Rev. Henry C. Murphy, commuted and compounded, receiving £1,205 2s. 5d., being two-thirds of the commutation money—the balance, £602 11s. 11d., being retained by the Representative Church Body.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the school-house had been pulled down and the site sold, and that the funds, amounting to £558 18s. 8d. Government Stock, remained vested in "The Commissioners of Education" for the purpose of building a new house. This sum was, at the date of our inquiry, represented by £620 4s. 6d. Government New 3 per cent. stock, the dividends upon which were remitted by the Commissioners to the Master. The present school premises were held upon long lease by the Master. Rep., p. 41. Evid., 2674.

Mr. Mahaffy found two resident assistants, one visiting assistant, nineteen boarders, and one day boy at the school. He reports that he found the boys very carefully and kindly kept, and the comforts of the school well attended to, but he was not impressed with the teaching or answering in the various classes. The school was decaying, the Master having been twenty-two years at work, and the rise of the Erasmus Smith's school at Galway having affected its prosperity. App. A, p. 244.

It did not appear that there were in this school any pupils either free or receiving pecuniary aid towards their education.

Waterford Diocesan Free School, for the Dioceses of Cashel, Emly, Lismore, and Waterford.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the then dormant endowments for the Dioceses of Waterford, Lismore, Cashel, and Emly, ought to be united to form an efficient school at Waterford. In 1863, upon a memorial from Waterford and a letter from the Lord Bishop of Cashel, the Lord Lieutenant and "The Commissioners of Education" united the endowments, and a diocesan free school was established at Waterford, of which Mr. William J. Valentine was, in 1863, appointed Master. He commuted and compounded in 1872, receiving £1,985 6s. 4d., two-thirds of the commutation money, the balance, £993 13s., being retained by the Representative Church Body. Mr. Valentine continued the school until January, 1876. The number of pupils varied from 25 to 45, and in 1875 declined to 29. The school premises were rented for short terms by Mr. Valentine who, in January 1876, gave up the school, accepting the position of an assistant-master Rep. pp. 35-40. Evid., 2639. 4371. 2939-40.

The Bishop stated that, without such a school, the Protestants in Waterford would be left utterly without any means of education suited for gentlemen's sons. GRAMMAR SCHOOLS OF PRIVATE ENDOWMENT UNDER "THE COMMISSIONERS OF EDUCATION."

The Schools belonging to this class were, in 1837, seventeen in number, viz.:—those of Ballyroan, Bandon, Carrickmacross, Charleville, Clonakilty, Clonmel, Dandalk, Eyrecourt, Kilkenny, Kinsale, Lifford, Lismore, Middleton, Navan, New Ross, Waterford, and Youghal. In the return made to us in 1879 by "The Commissioners of Education" Waterford School did not appear, Clonakilty was stated to have been discontinued since 1873, Kinsale since 1876, and New Ross since 1875.

We found that the schools at Lifford and Youghal had become primary, that Waterford Grammar School still existed, and New Ross school had again come into operation. Our list of the schools belonging to this class therefore includes fifteen, of which however those at Charleville, Clonakilty, Eyrecourt, and Kinsale were not in operation at the date of our inquiry.

53 Geo. III.,
sec. 14.

The endowment of these schools consists of the Cappaloughlin estate, granted by Alderman Preston, in 1686 and vested in "The Commissioners of Education," by statute, in 1813. The objects of the endowment, as stated in the Act 53 Geo. III., cap. 107, sec. 14, were to pay a schoolmaster of the Protestant religion, resident in the town of Navan, the yearly sum of £85, and to pay a like schoolmaster, resident in the town of Ballyroan, the yearly sum of £25, the nomination of the schoolmasters to be in certain trustees: also to pay the sum of £20 yearly to the Hospital of Charles II., in Oxmantown, Dublin, and in case of any increase in the rents, the overplus to be disposed of for the convenience of the said schools, or such other pious uses as the trustees should appoint. The Royal Commissioners 1854-8, reported that this endowment (the annual value of which was then about £340), presented one of the most remarkable instances of an abused trust. The Ballyroan schoolhouse was then in a disgraceful condition, attended by only two day pupils, out of three on the roll, and their education was very much neglected. No benefit appeared to arise from the endowment, so far as the public were concerned, and the school had not been inspected by the Commissioners of Education since 1838. At Navan school there were, in 1857, no boarders, and but three day boys present out of five on the roll, of whom four were free.

Rep., p. 167.

Mr Fleming informed us in 1879 that, in addition to the estate, the Commissioners held to the credit of the endowments of both schools, £6,402 6s. 3d. Government stock, and in cash £723 8s. 6d. to the credit of Navan, and £1,058 10s. 3d. to the credit of Ballyroan. The sum of £903 19s. 2d. portion of the stock, represented the purchase money of part of the estate taken by the Great Southern and Western Railway Company, the remainder being accumulations of income. No inspection had been made or directed since 1857, and the Commissioners had not taken the educational condition of the schools into their particular consideration, or taken any steps with regard to them upon the publication of the report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-5.

Mr. Mahaffy found at Ballyroan one assistant teacher, no boarders, and eleven day boys; the position of the school was unsuitable, the place in bad repair and not properly furnished, the condition of the latrine simply disgraceful, and the out-offices in a state of ruin or decay. The master complained that he had applied frequently to the agent of the estate, and to the secretary of the Commissioners, to have these matters repaired, but in vain. He also complained that he was obliged to pay rent for the land round the schoolhouse, and that the best part of the school farm had been taken from his father (his predecessor as schoolmaster), by the late agent, and let to a distant farmer. The boys were of various ages and degrees of advancement, and could only be properly taught in separate classes, the head-master seemed well qualified to take the higher and collegiate teaching, and the more advanced boys were soundly and well educated. The assistant master was so dull with age that he was unable to teach anything. The master received a salary of £100 (Irish), and the assistant £50 (Irish) per annum. There was no professional or other supervision of any repair of Ballyroan schoolhouse since 1857, and neither Mr. McCurdy nor Mr. Mitchell had ever heard of it.

The Rev. H. Wilson White, was, in October, 1873, appointed by the trustees to be master of Navan school. He was also the curate of the parish. From his appointment down to the date of our inquiry (April 1879), he had had in all forty-eight pupils, of whom eleven were then in attendance. He soon afterwards left, and when Mr. Mahaffy visited the school (April 1880), the Rev. James Keene had just been appointed master. He was also Rector of the parish, and his curate was about to be appointed assistant master. There were ten boys then at the school. The buildings were clean and in good repair; the school furniture simple and in very good condition, but there was no play-ground whatever, the adjacent field being farmed by the head master.

Of the forty-eight pupils educated by Mr. White twelve had been free, but he considered himself under no obligation to take free pupils. All were members of the Church of Ireland, though he had no objection to receive Roman Catholic pupils if they came. He stated that there was an excellent Roman Catholic School in Navan, and that he could not expect to get any boys except those of his own religion. He received a salary of £100 Irish per annum from the Commissioners, and his assistant, his brother, who taught mathematics, English, and junior classics, received a salary from them of £60 Irish. They made no allowance to the master for heating, cleaning, &c.

In April 1874, Mr. Mitchell visited Navan school, and repairs were executed there under his supervision at a cost of £399 1s. 5d.; he was sent by "The Commissioners of Education" upon a report from the Rev. Mr. White, that the whole place was in a state of decay and dilapidation.

The agent of the estate informed us that it was let at a gross rental of £787 6s. 5d., the tenement valuation being "very slightly less." "If times were better" the rental "might bear a rise." He received £3 10s. rent from the master of the Ballyroan school for the lawn.

Mr. Murphy reports that the estate consists of the townland of Cappaloughlin, about one and a-half miles from the town of Mountrath, with 48a. 1s. 34r. (on part of which the school stands) close to the village of Ballyroan, both in the Queen's County. The lands of Cappaloughlin contain 1,428a. 1s. 20r., statute measure, held by fifty-three tenants at a rental of £741 3s. 5d., with 300 acres of bog, producing, from sales of turf, about £17 10s. per annum. The rental is 19½ per cent. above the Poor Law valuation of the land only, and 7½ per cent. above the valuation of the land and buildings. The average annual outgoings (including £50 13s. 4d., salaries and costs of fuel for the tenantry schools, vide infra, p. 70) amounted to £237 15s. The lands of Cappaloughlin are of excellent quality, the farms well fenced, and the houses comfortable. The tenant of an excellent and well cultivated farm close to Mountrath Railway Station has built two houses upon the land which the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, recommended should be offered as building sites. One house is occupied as a public-house, the other has been sublet, and the Commissioners have not derived the advantage anticipated in 1857, and which Mr. Murphy thinks might fairly have been expected. As the bog becomes cut out, the tenants reclaim it, and are holding it free of rent. The townland was valued in 1816 at £1,065 15s. 7d.; the rental in 1857 was £727 15s. 3d., and at the date of Mr. Murphy's report was £741 3s. 5d., which was, in his opinion, very much under the value. The lands of Ballyroan were held by three tenants at a rental of £46 3s., the Poor Law valuation being £43 5s., os., including the buildings, £58 10s. Mr. Murphy visited the school, and found it most untidy, dark, dirty, and dismal. The bailiff of the estate could scarcely tell the acreage or rental of any of the tenants, and Mr. Murphy received no reply to his applications to the agent for information. The agent appears to have retained large balances in his hands for considerable periods after closing his accounts, which do not show the dates up to which the outgoings are paid. He debits himself with the cash received only, taking no notice of the arrears.

Mr. Murphy was informed that the tenants on an adjoining estate some years ago took forcible possession of a considerable tract of the bog on the estate, and had held it ever since. The acreage of Cappaloughlin, as returned by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, was 1,737A. 0R. 83R., being 8a. 3s. 15c. more than that stated by Mr. Murphy.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the endowment of this school was a rent-charge of £20 per annum for the Master, and of £10 per annum for the Usher, charged in 1642 upon estates now vested in the Duke of Devonshire, by the Earl of Cork who directed his heirs to keep the schoolhouse in repair. Twenty-five pupils attended in 1857. From the return made to us by the master, Dr. Browne, it appeared that in February, 1879, there were only eleven pupils attending, of whom nine were day boys. All were Protestants, and none were exempted from payment of school fees. The master received a salary of £40 per annum, paid by the Duke of Devonshire in discharge of the original endowment; the same sum was paid in 1857.

Corrickmacross Grammar School, County of Monaghan.

This school had an endowment of a schoolhouse, and £70 per annum, charged upon estates now vested in the Marquis of Bath, granted in 1711 by Viscount Weymouth. The rentcharge was to be devoted to the repairs of the schoolhouse and the payment of the master. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the yard and offices were in a ruinous condition, and specially noticed the neglect of visitation. The visitors were nominated by the deed of foundation, and directed to visit annually, or oftener if necessary. They were the Lord Primate, the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Dublin, the Bishop of Clogher, and the Provost of Trinity College, Dublin. None of these had ever visited the school down to the date of our inquiry.

Mr. Thomas S. Shaw was appointed master on 1st May, 1857. He described the condition of the buildings as very bad. At one time he had thirty-five boarders, but after some years the numbers fell off, as parents visited the school and saw its condition. For six years before 1879 he never had an application for a day pupil, and boarders were out of the question, but on 1st July, 1879, he re-opened the school, being asked to take pupils to prepare for the Intermediate Examinations. Of these, in January, 1880, he had ten, all day pupils, none free. His course included everything necessary for an University or mercantile education, or to prepare for the Civil Service.

App. A., p.

Mr. Mahaffy reports that he found the master—an elderly man—living as a sort of pensioner on the endowment, and in a small part of the house, of which the rest was falling rapidly into decay and ruin; he was still teaching ten little boys who had lately come to him, with some hope of Intermediate prizes, but his zeal and interest in the school were gone, nor were they likely ever to revive.

The Incumbent of the parish afterwards informed us that the master had in addition three female pupils who were taught with the boys, but had not been mentioned to us by the master.

Charleville Endowed School, County of Cork.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this school was endowed by the Earl of Cork early in the seventeenth century; the particulars of the endowment were unknown, but the master received £40 Irish per annum from the estates of Lord Cork. In 1857 there were four pupils, none free; the school, however, was in ruins, and the state of education unsatisfactory.

The school was in 1879, as in 1837, returned upon the list of "The Commissioners of Education" as an "existing school under their management and control." We found that Mr. William Cronin was appointed master in 1847 by the late Earl of Cork, and at one time had fourteen pupils. He was paid £40, Irish, per annum, until 1878, though for a very considerable period he had had no pupils, had left the schoolhouse in 1871, and was for several years before our inquiry resident in Cork. The agent of the estate, Daniel F. Leahy, Esq., B.L., stated that there was no building or land given as an endowment, and that the former schoolhouse had been for upwards of fifty years held by the successive masters as yearly tenants to Lord Cork, at rents varying from £15 to £20 a year. Mr. Cronin ceased to occupy it in 1871; it was then tumbling down, and its site was, on 29th September, 1871, let for ninety-nine years for the purpose of being occupied, as it now is, by the Rectory of the parish.

At the date of our inquiry it was under consideration by the Earl of Cork, his agent, the Rector of Charleville, and other inhabitants, whether an undenominational intermediate school might not be established there, there being a very considerable number of people of the middle class in and about Charleville likely to avail themselves of intermediate education. There was a difficulty as to securing a pension for Mr. Cronin. The last payment of his salary had been stopped. Mr. Leahy stated that Lord Cork recognised that he was bound to pay £40, Irish, a year for educational purposes, and wished the endowment to continue, but naturally desired that his estate should get some value from it.

Clonahilly School, County of Cork.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this school was not endowed, and that they thought it somewhat remarkable that "The Commissioners of Education" should for several years have returned it to Parliament as one of the endowed schools under their charge. It was nevertheless included in the return made to us in 1879 by "The Commissioners of Education," but stated not to have been in operation since 1873. Mr. Fleming informed us that the forms sent annually by the Commissioners to the master of the school had "latterly been returned from the Post Office, marked 'Gone away,' 'No school,' and so forth." Nothing was done by the Commissioners to ascertain what had become of the school.

Clonmel Endowed School, County of Tipperary.

The Clonmel Endowed School was founded and endowed in 1685 by Richard and Stephen Moore (ancestors of the present Earl of Mount-Cashell), who conveyed lands containing 370 acres, Irish measure, to trustees for the erection and support of a grammar school, where the children of Protestant freemen of Clonmel should receive a free education. By the deed of grant it was provided that the founders or their heirs, the Duke of Ormond, and the Mayor of Clonmel for the time being, or any two of them, should have power to appoint or change the school-master as they might think fit.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported the school to be in an unsatisfactory condition owing to the pecuniary embarrassments of the master, and they recommended that steps should then be taken for his removal, his imprudence having had the effect of "depriving an important town of an efficient school for some years." No steps were taken to carry out this recommendation, and the master continued in office until his death in 1874.

The present master, the Rev. A. S. Hutchinson, M.A., was appointed in March, 1874, by the Earl of Mount-Cashell, with the approval of the Marquis of Ormonde. No Mayor of Clonmel had ever since the foundation been consulted with reference to the school. It had been closed altogether for a year previous to Mr. Hutchinson's appointment in consequence of the illness and subsequent death of the former master. No boarders had attended for nearly thirty years previously. In February, 1879, there were thirty-three pupils on the roll, of whom thirteen were boarders. At the date of our inquiry in Clonmel (October 2, 1879), the aggregate number had increased to thirty-four, but the number of boarders had decreased to nine, and the attendance was about the average of the last three or four years.

There were four free pupils (one a boarder). Two of the free day-boys were sons of freemen of Clonmel, the third a descendant of a freeman. The free boarder was admitted by favour of the head-master.

The Town Clerk of Clonmel informed us that there were now but twenty-three freemen of Clonmel, eight admitted by birth, twelve by servitude, and three by marriage; nineteen were Protestants. Latterly, in consequence of the appointment of a good master to the school, there had been applications for admission to the freedom, with the object of obtaining the advantages of the endowment, and the Town Clerk expected a considerable number of applications, the moment their sons arrived at the proper age, from the large class of persons in Clonmel qualified to become freemen, and likely to take advantage of the school.

Richard Bagwell, Esq., J.P., informed us that there were over 100 Protestant burghesses in Clonmel, of the very class for which the school was founded, who although no longer qualified to be enrolled as freemen, in consequence of the provisions of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1840, were within the spirit of the intention of the founders of the school.

The Earl of Mount-Cashell stated that the school estate had been let in 1840 for £600 per annum, but had brought a smaller and smaller sum annually since. He suspected "fraud somewhere," and complained that bog rents, which on one occasion amounted to £19 6s. 11½d., were afterwards omitted. He had gone to Dr. Kyle for information, and had asked permission to see the accounts, which (as patron and trustee) he thought he was entitled to look at. Dr. Kyle refused to let him see them, and in consequence he moved in the House of Lords for returns, which were granted.

Mr. Hutchinson received a salary of £300 a year from the Commissioners, but no allowance for assistants, of whom he stated he employed three resident and two non-resident, the latter being teachers of music and drawing. He called on the Commissioners for assistance, but was informed by Dr. Kyle that they could not allow more than £300 a year, because a balance of £350 remained due to the Treasury on account of £4,000 advanced to build the schoolhouse about 1830. This sum ought to have been repaid by instalments of £340 a year, but the payments were for many years interrupted. Mr. Fleming stated that on 31st December, 1878, the Commissioners had in bank £748 16s. 8d., cash, to the credit of Clonmel School. Mr. Hutchinson, in going over the items of the school property, asked Mr. Kyle as to this balance in bank and the interest on it. Dr. Kyle said the Commissioners should keep the balance in case Government should call on them for payment of the balance due, and that "they could not take interest into consideration as it would confuse their accounts." Mr. Hutchinson stated that £300 had been paid off since his interview with Dr. Kyle, which had taken place about five years ago.

The Commissioners had laid out £70 or £80 upon repairs when Mr. Hutchinson was appointed, and an average of £30 or £40 a year since. The work was altogether done by local tradesmen under the supervision of the master, and paid for on his certificate. The building had not been visited by the Commissioners or their architect or any other person from them, but they appeared to Mr. Hutchinson "to have got some information about the school, because in their report for 1877 they spoke favourably of it, and of the way it had progressed."

The charges for boarders for a full course, including modern languages, were £49 per annum for boys over eleven years of age, and £44 for boys under that age. These charges were £10 per annum less than the master would have been obliged to charge if he had not the endowment. The charge for day boys over eleven years of age was £10 per annum, and £8 for boys below that age.

Mr. Mahaffy reports that he found three resident and two non-resident assistants, and thirty-five pupils—nine boarders and twenty-six day boys—at the school. There were few places in the south of Ireland better situated, and the older history of the school showed it to have been very successful. As regards the teaching, Mr. Mahaffy was impressed with its want of soundness and efficiency, the elements of modern languages only were well taught by a very competent and intelligent foreign master. The other assistants seemed gentlemanly and sensible men, but their salaries were quite inadequate.

Mr. Murphy reports that the estate consists of the townland of Lisnure, in the county of Tipperary, containing 690a. 3r. 36r. statute measure, of which about sixty acres are bog. The lands are held by thirteen tenants at a rental of £460 19s. 5d., which is about 12·8 per cent. above the Poor Law valuation of the lands, excluding the buildings, or slightly over 9 per cent. above it if the buildings be included. Three of the holdings contain on the average more than 150 acres each; one contains fifty-six acres, and the remaining nine contain on the average about thirteen acres each. The land is very much in need of drainage, and the tenants, except on the large holdings, are very poor. The lands are very unequally rented as contrasted with the valuation; one tenant pays a rent 21 per cent. over the valuation, while another, the bailiff, pays 20 per cent. below it, and has bought another tenant's interest in four acres for about £40. The former complained bitterly of harsh treatment, having been served with an ejectment; his house was "a mere hovel utterly unfit for human habitation," but his land was well tilled, and he appeared to be industrious. The bog is greatly neglected. There is a National School close to the estate under the care of a female teacher. The Commissioners do not contribute to its maintenance, and it is "devoid of the appliances necessary for the inculcation of habits of decency." The lands were formerly let under an old lease at a rent of £600 15s. 11d., and were occupied by fifty-eight sub-tenants, two-thirds of the townland being in the hands of two. In 1847 to 1849 many tenants, being then "wretchedly poor," surrendered their holdings, which were, in those depressed times, re-let generally at much below their value. One farm, the contents of which were variously estimated as from 146 to 271 acres, is held by a tenant who does not reside upon it, and who sells the mowdown of a large portion each year, the crops being carried off without any apparent provision for top-dressing the land. The average amount of the annual outgoings has been £100. The agent appears to retain considerable balances in his hands for several months after the yearly closing of the accounts, and does not debit himself with the arrears due, but seems, in 1879, to have given credit for some rents not actually received.

Dundalk Grammar School, County of Louth.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that there was some doubt as to the endowment of this school, which enjoyed a free site, and received an annuity of £50, Irish, per annum from the estate of the Earl of Roden. Rep., p. 111.

The forms which we sent to the master of the school were not returned, but to a letter to the agent of the Earl of Roden we received the reply that he was directed by Lord Roden to inform us that the "Dundalk Grammar School is his Lordship's private property, and is without endowment of any kind." He added that the salary of the master and expense of keeping the premises in repair have always been defrayed by the Roden estate at Dundalk. "The Commissioners of Education" returned this school to us, in 1879, as an "existing school under their management and control."

File Vol. II., p. 617

Mr. Mahaffy reports that he found thirty-six pupils on the roll—twenty-eight day boys and eight boarders—of whom twenty-two in all were present. The patron merely paid his £46 per annum, and cared no more for the school. The house was not commodious nor well situated, yet, under the late master, who had recently removed to Ennis, it was prosperous, and remarkable of late years for producing several very eminent scholars. He found the pupils fairly taught.

Eggescourt, County of Galway.

The forms sent by us to the master of this school were returned by the Rev. J. M. Aldridge, incumbent of the parish and trustee of the school, stating that there had been no pupils for the past five years. In the return from "The Commissioners of Education," the school appeared as an "existing school under their management and control," but it was stated that the mastership was "vacant."

File Vol. II., p. 617.

The endowment consisted, at the date of our inquiry, of a house and about an acre of ground, valued in 1857 at £19 per annum, for which a head-rent of £4 12s. 4d. per annum was payable, and of £440 6s. 9d., Government stock, and £14 12s., cash, held by "The Commissioners of Education."

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that no efficient steps had been taken to carry out the directions of the founder, who, in 1730, left £700 to found a charity school for the maintenance and education of poor children of the parish, to be nominated by the Bishop of Clonfert, and the Minister of the parish. The school was, from the commencement, made a classical school, and no free scholars were received into it. It was in 1857 attended by 10 day pupils, none free.

Mr. Fleming stated to us that the former master resigned about a year before our inquiry (April 5, 1879). The Commissioners continued to pay the rent of the school premises to the landlord (although Mr. Fleming thought he, the landlord, "had somebody in them"); and since the resignation of the master it had been under consideration whether or not the school should be placed in connexion with the National Board, but nothing had as yet been decided.

Kilkenny College, County of Kilkenny.

The endowments of Kilkenny College consisted of a rentcharge of £140, Irish, per annum, payable by the Marquis of Ormonde, and of the schoolhouse, capable of accommodating from 80 to 100 boarders, with about six statute acres of land attached. The house and grounds, the Poor Law valuation of which is £98 per annum, are subject to £5 a year head rent, payable to the Marquis of Ormonde.

Francis Endowments under The Commissioners of Education.
Evid., 1308.

The founder (James, Duke of Ormond), in 1684 framed certain rules for the government of the school, the great majority of which are not at the present day at all attended to.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, specially noticed the absence of the yearly visitation which the rules directed to be made by the visitors, the Bishop of Ossory and the Provost of Trinity College, Dublin. No formal visitation has taken place since 1857, but the present Bishop of Ossory, the Right Rev. Dr. Walsh, and the former Bishop, the Right Rev. Dr. Gregg, had visited the school, "not officially," upon the invitation of the head master.

Conn. 1854-8, Rep., Vol. III., p. 142.

The number of pupils on the roll in 1857 was forty-seven—32 boarders, 15 day scholars—none free. In February, 1879, the master, Mr James Weir, who was appointed by the patrons, the Board of Trinity College, Dublin, in April, 1874, returned the number of his pupils as twenty-seven—17 boarders and 10 day boys, all members of the Church of Ireland, except 3 Presbyterians. He had had as many as 18 Roman Catholic day pupils, "until they were interfered with." He employed a mathematical master at a salary of £50 a-year, with board and residence, and a foreign master at £40, with board and residence, and had had two English masters when the school was larger.

One of the rules framed by the founder was as follows:—

"The master to charge the rates of the most remarkable schools in Dublin, but for the children of the inhabitants of Kilkenny half as much. Children of persons in the service of the Duke of Ormond to be admitted gratis. Visitors may recommend boys, for whose teaching persons out of charity may be disposed to pay, to be taught gratis." No claims under these provisions had been made since Mr. Weir's appointment, and the fees charged for pupils were fixed entirely by himself. His terms for boarders ranged from £50 to £60 per annum, for day boys from 8 to 12 guineas.

The deed of grant directed that the sum of £140, Irish, per annum, should be paid to the schoolmaster "for his own maintenance, and for the maintenance of one or more usher or ushers, and to the intent that there shall be so much laid out from time to time as shall be necessary for repairs." Mr. Weir stated that when he was appointed in 1874, there had been no pupils at the school for six months and more, and the premises were in a very dilapidated condition, every window in the house being broken. On his appointment he expended a sum of £240 in repairs, £147 of which was allowed him by the Board of Trinity College, the present patrons of the school. Dr. Browne, a previous head master, had expended a sum of £463 in repairs, on condition that his successor should be required to repay him the amount so expended. His successor, Dr. Martin, paid this amount to Dr. Browne, and it was made by the patrons a condition of Mr. Weir's appointment that he should repay it to Dr. Martin. Mr. Weir accordingly lodged in bank the sum of £463 to the credit of the patrons, but in consequence of the dilapidated state in which Dr. Martin had left the school premises, they returned the sum of £147 to Mr. Weir to assist him in executing the necessary repairs, and paid Dr. Martin the balance only. Mr. Weir stated that he or his representatives would have a claim, we presume under the conditions of his appointment, against his successor for £281 10s., half the sum originally paid by him, but without interest. At the time of our inquiry he estimated that it would cost £500 to put the school premises into perfect repair.

Evid., 14101-248, App. A, p. 245.

At the date of our inquiry (October 4, 1879), no boys were in attendance, an epidemic having occurred some time previously, which necessitated the breaking up of the school. Mr. Mahaffy visited it subsequently, and reports that he found the boarders reduced to three, and the day boys to four.

Kinsale Endowed School, County of Cork.

Conn. 1854-8, Rep., p. 118. Evid., 15776-8.

In 1767, Edward Southwell, Esq. (afterwards Lord De Clifford), granted by deed to the Sovereign and Commons of Kinsale, his mansion-house, stable, coach-house, and garden, in Kinsale, for a school-house; and an annuity of £30, Irish, per annum (charged upon the lands of Rathmore), for the support of the schoolmaster. The deed was executed under a power of attorney, in which it was recited that the grantor was "informed that a good grammar school is much wanted for the instruction and education of youth in the town of Kinsale," and further that the consideration for the grant was the transfer of an advowson by the Corporation of Kinsale to Mr. Southwell. The deed itself was silent as to the consideration and objects of the grant.

Rep., p. 113.

It was stated in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, that "the master's salary of £30 (late Irish currency), was paid by the municipal Commissioners (representing the former Corporation), who also exercised the right of appointing the master, though this was reserved to Lord De Clifford and his heirs male by the deed of 1767." The original deed was not forthcoming, and we were unable to obtain any copy of it.

"The Commissioners of Education," though retaining Kinsale school as one of those under their control in 1879, had not (with one exception) instituted any inquiry since 1857 in reference to it. The exception consisted of a letter which Mr. Fleming stated "was written two or three years ago, to some official there, about Kinsale school;" but nothing further was done. No inquiry was made as to what had become of the endowment.

Until the death, in February 1873, of the then master, the Rev. Mr. Purdee, the post of master of the school was always filled by a clergyman of the Established Church, but some months afterwards the Town Commissioners appointed as master Mr. E. L. Hogan, a Roman Catholic, who retired in 1875. The school, which had begun to decline under Mr. Purdee, became "a very small school" under Mr. Hogan. The school premises, which Mr. Hogan stated were "quite uninhabitable" at the date of his appointment, became so dilapidated during his tenure of office that legal proceedings were threatened to compel him to take down portions of them which were considered to be in a dangerous condition.

The state of the school-buildings at the date of our inquiry was one of absolute ruin. They had been taken off the rate books as altogether valueless. The garden was let by the Town Commissioners to a tenant at a rent of 8s. 4d. per month. It was valued separately at £2 5s. per annum.

Besides the rent payable in respect of the garden, the Town Commissioners had since September, 1875, been in receipt of the rentcharge of £30 (Irish), which, up to 1879, went into the common fund, and was treated by the Commissioners as part of their corporate property. In 1879, for the first time, the amount was lodged on deposit receipt to a separate account. One of the Town Commissioners, Dr. George Dunne, stated that he proposed that the income of the endowment should be applied towards the repairs of the school-buildings, but it did not appear that any formal resolution was moved upon the subject.

The Rev. William Daunt, Incumbent of Kinsale, stated that a proposal had been put forward, on behalf of the Protestants of Kinsale, to transfer the Southwell endowment to a National school under Protestant management. Mr. Daunt contended that the endowment was practically a Protestant one, inasmuch as it was confided to the care of a body then exclusively Protestant, and was granted in exchange for an advowson; that the proposed school, though nominally primary, would by giving a higher education, not of an intermediate character but suitable to the shopkeepers of the town, carry out the intentions of the founder; and he thought that to create through this endowment a virtually Protestant school under the National Board would not be an unjust departure from the objects of the trust, having regard to the fact that the Roman Catholics of Kinsale already had two National schools administered by themselves, and virtually denominational.

The Rev. Patrick Riordan, R.P., contended on the other hand that it appeared from the terms of the foundation deed to have been the intention of the founder to benefit the entire community, and he urged that if the grant were applied as Mr. Daunt suggested its benefits would be confined to one small section. It would work like the other National schools, and be an exclusive school. The National schools under Roman Catholic administration referred to by Mr. Daunt were merely primary; one of them was built by the Roman Catholic parishioners, with the assistance of a loan from the National Board of Education; the other belonged to the Roman Catholic Convent, and both sites were subject to rents.

Lismore College, County of Waterford.

This school was endowed in 1642, by the Earl of Cork, by the gift "for a free school" of a rentcharge of £30, Irish, per annum, with a large school-house and half an acre of land. The school buildings were, in 1857 and at the date of our inquiry, kept in repair by the Duke of Devonshire.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that there were no pupils at the school in 1857, nor had there been any since 1851. They added, "the annual returns made by the master of this school to the Commissioners of Education must have shown to them the declining state of the school, and the ultimate discontinuance of the attendance of pupils. The Commissioners are responsible, as visitors of the school, for having taken no step for the removal of the master under such circumstances; and we think that proceedings should now be taken with a view to his dismissal. Vigilance at an earlier period, on their part, would also have prevented the master from converting a free school into a private one, and denying the right of free pupils to be admitted."

No action was taken upon this report by "The Commissioners of Education." They merely continued to send the ordinary half-yearly returns, and to file them when sent back.

Private Endowments under The Commissioners of Education.
Returns.

App. A, p. 246.

The present head master, Mr. J. G. Gillon, stated to us in his return that, previous to his appointment by the Duke of Devonshire, the school had lost its reputation, that there were no pupils in attendance at it, and "in fact it had gone down altogether." Since his appointment the school had progressed, the number of pupils increasing every term. There were forty pupils on the roll in February, 1879, thirty-five of whom were boarders, and five day scholars, but none were free.

Mr. Mahaffy reports that he inspected the school in its working order, and found twenty boarders and four day boys, with two assistants (one non-resident). The assistants were men of good qualifications, and the building, though not suited for a very large school, was commodious and well ventilated. The teaching seemed rather for special competitions than regular schooling.

Middleton Endowed School, County of Cork.

Gen., 1854-8, Rep., Vol. III, p. 594.

Rep., p. 114.

This school was founded in 1696 by the Countess of Orkney, who granted 2,000 acres of land to trustees "to build a free school, and pay the master a salary of £100; the usher and writing master, 250 each; £10 for the repair of the school-house; and £50 for exhibitions in the Dublin University, not exceeding £15 each."

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the endowments of this school were then limited to the school-house, and certain reserved rents amounting, in 1857, to £200, Irish, with some renewal fines.

Between 1830 and 1847 the school had been raised to great prosperity under Mr. Turpin, but it declined before he resigned, and under his successor the state of instruction had in 1857 become unsatisfactory, and only fifteen boarders and eight day boys, six of whom were free, were then attending the school. At the date of our inquiry it had revived, and was again in an efficient and prosperous condition.

Evid., 18016-55.

The Rev. Thomas Moore, LL.D., the present head master, informed us that he was appointed in March, 1863, and received from "The Commissioners of Education" £92 per annum for his salary, with £20 as an allowance for an assistant. The funds of the school were under the control of the Commissioners, who paid the cost of repairs, but took no part in the management or inspection of the school.

The Bishop of Cork, Lord Middleton, who was represented by his agent, and the Earl of Shannon were the visitors or trustees who appointed the master and visited annually. "The Commissioners of Education" gave £50 per annum, in two exhibitions of £30 and £20, to students entering Trinity College. Other prizes of small amount were given by Lord Middleton, and by others who took an interest in the school.

Before Dr. Moore's appointment there had been no real school for a great many years, and part of the endowment had been accumulated, though the master continued to receive £112 per annum, there being no provision for his superannuation. On 31st December, 1878, "The Commissioners of Education" held £1,107 2s. 10d., Government Stock, and £61 1s. 3d., cash, to the credit of the school.

"The Commissioners of Education" laid out £1,200 upon the premises when Dr. Moore was appointed, and had lately made an addition at a cost of £500 or £600.

Evid., 18031-2.

The school-house had been largely increased, and at the date of our inquiry Dr. Moore had eighty-eight pupils—fifty-eight boarders in his own house, eight in the house of one of his masters, and twenty-two day boys. He gave them an ordinary classical education, designed principally for preparation for Trinity College, but he also trained pupils from the neighbourhood who wished to go to the Queen's College, Cork.

App. A, p. 238.

Mr. Mahaffy reports that he found forty-five boarders and twenty-seven day boys (ten of whom were Roman Catholics), with five assistants and a drawing master at the school. He describes the school as evidently situated in an important and convenient place, but owing its remarkable and steady prosperity during the last fifteen years, first, to the ability and zeal of the head master, secondly, to the fact that the county and even the city of Cork did not possess any other school of high repute. The railway brought boys daily from the neighbourhood (as far as Youghal), and the Roman Catholics seemed disposed to support it. The buildings were in some respects not well situated, and the sanitary arrangements required examination and improvement. The older part of the house and the out-offices were in a very bad state, and the whole schoolhouse was wanting in cleanliness. The dormitories and beds were not in a satisfactory state, and Mr. Mahaffy made other criticisms, in answer to which the head master complained of the total want of periodical inspections under the Commissioners' authority, by which such matters as are perceived at once by a stranger might be noticed. The teaching of the head master was excellent, and the classes under his management were doing good work, but in the case of the other classes Mr. Mahaffy's opinion was not so favourable. The success of Middleton boys in Trinity College showed that on the whole the education must be fairly good. There was no doubt that the school was an important foundation, but it needed a considerable sum of money to be expended upon it, and also some increase of endowment, which Mr. Mahaffy suggested might be provided from Bishop Crow's endowment at Cloyne, and by applying the Duke of Devonshire's endowment at Youghal to bringing Youghal boys by train to Midleton.

Priests' Endowments under The Commissioners of Education.

New Ross Endowed School, County of Meath. [See Ballyroan, page 54, supra.]

New Ross Endowed School, County of Wexford.

This school was founded and endowed by John Ivory, who by deed dated 19th February, 1713, granted certain premises in New Ross to trustees for the maintenance and continuance of a free grammar school, in which "four poor scholars of the Protestant religion, as by law established, should be educated without fee or reward." By the deed, of which we obtained a copy, the management of the school and the execution of the trust were confided to John Cuffe, William Napper, and James Napper, and to the Corporation and Vicar of New Ross—the appointment of the master, in case of default, being vested in the Bishop of the diocese.

Com., 1854-8, Rep. p. 115.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the school was returned by "The Commissioners of Education" as being under their jurisdiction in 1821 and 1831, but omitted from their returns in 1849, 1853, and 1857, and that it did not appear how a school once placed under the Commissioners by statute could cease to be subject to their authority; also, that it was generally believed in the town of New Ross that the endowment had been encroached upon by neighbouring proprietors, but that, owing to the want of definitiveness in the deed of endowment, it was impossible now to trace with certainty the original boundaries. Mr. Fleming stated to us that he was not aware that anything had been done upon the subject of this report since 1857, and in the Secretary's return New Ross School was stated not to have been in operation since about 1873.

We were afterwards informed by the Roman Catholic Parish Priest, and also by the Protestant Vicar of St. Mary's, New Ross, that the school was re-opened in August, 1880. From the same sources we learned that the Town Commissioners of New Ross, during several years previous to 1873, assumed the entire management and control of the school, that this was resented as an usurpation of authority by the Vicar and others, that considerable litigation ensued, and, finally, that in a suit in which the Attorney-General was informant and the Town Commissioners of New Ross and others were defendants, a scheme was settled for the future management of the school, by which the endowment was intrusted to the care of four trustees, two to be co-opted from time to time, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and the remaining two to be the Vicar of Saint Mary's Parish, New Ross, and the Chairman of the Town Commissioners of New Ross, each for the time being.

Id.

It did not appear that "The Commissioners of Education," who had included the school in the list of those "under their management and control," were aware of this litigation, or had been consulted about the settlement of the scheme.

The school and the trust property were, at the time of our inquiry, vested in the Reverend Francis Le Hunte, Vicar of Saint Mary's, and in Charles George Tottenham and Edward Neville, Esqs., three of the first four trustees nominated in the scheme, the fourth trustee, the Chairman of the Town Commissioners, being specially excluded from the clause vesting the property. The appointment of the master, in case of default by the trustees for a longer period than six months after the occurrence of a vacancy, was vested in the Bishop of Ferns. At the date of our inquiry, the property was stated by the Rev. Mr. Le Hunte to consist of the school-house and garden, with three tenements adjoining, comprising a house, two stores, and a yard, let for rents amounting in all to £31 2s. 6d., and of which the valuation was £19 15s. It was further stated that the rents arising from the premises had been wholly expended in law costs. We could not ascertain the particulars of the tenancies.

Returns.

During the period of management by the Town Commissioners the school buildings had been allowed to fall into a ruinous state, and required to be almost rebuilt when the effort was made by the trustees to re-open the school, by an appeal to the inhabitants for funds sufficient to put it into a proper state.

Waterford Corporation Free Grammar School.

This school was in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, included among the Grammar Schools under the control of "The Commissioners of Education." It was omitted from the return made to us by the Secretary, and we found that the School was still in existence, but had been converted into a denominational school in connexion with the Catholic University, and that the payment of the endowment formerly provided by the Municipal Corporation of Waterford had been discontinued.

The school had been supported by the Corporation of the City of Waterford from a very early period, but after the Municipal Reform Act, 1840, the new Corporation passed a resolution against paying the master's salary or allowing him for the taxes of the school-house; they afterwards took possession of the school-house by ejection, and placed the master under rent for it. The master took proceedings against the Corporation, and succeeded in establishing a claim to his salary for his own tenure of the office, the question as to the permanence of the endowment remaining undecided.

It appeared from the evidence taken at our public court in Waterford, that Dr. Price, the master who had taken these proceedings, died in 1862, and his representatives surrendered the school premises to the Corporation.

Evid.,
13809-2.

The Town Clerk informed us that a case had been laid before the Solicitor-General in 1862, to advise whether the Corporation were legally bound to continue the endowment, and he had suggested that they should do so, but the following Report was made by the General Committee of the Town Council:—

"The Committee beg to report that it is inexpedient, under existing circumstances, to continue the endowment of the Waterford School, as suggested by the Solicitor General for Ireland, and in reference to the school-house and dwelling-house which have been surrendered by the representatives of Dr. Price, we being of opinion that same should not be used for or dedicated to any other than educational purposes, recommend that the Council shall advertise for tenders for letting the premises for these purposes."

Upon this Report the Town Council resolved that they would not continue the payment of the endowment. For the school premises the Town Council accepted the tender of the Roman Catholic Bishop of Waterford, and ordered a lease to be given to him for a term of seventy-five years from 29th September, 1862, at a rent of £80. The Bishop went into possession, but no lease was taken out. Subsequently, a memorial was presented by the Rector of the Catholic University of Ireland, praying for an annual grant from the borough funds for the maintenance of a first-class Grammar School in the City of Waterford, and a resolution was passed by the Town Council on 7th May, 1867, in the following terms:—

"Resolved,—That the Report of the General Committee of the Council upon the memorial of the Very Rev. M. Woodlock, D.D., Rector of the Catholic University of Ireland, praying for an annual grant from the borough funds for the maintenance of a first-class grammar school in the city of Waterford be and the same is hereby agreed to and adopted by this Council, and that in pursuance of the recommendation contained therein, a lease be granted of the premises in Stephen-street, now being used for educational purposes in connexion with the Catholic University, to the Right Rev. Dr. O'Brien, Roman Catholic Bishop of Waterford and Lismore, for the longest term that can legally be given, from the 29th day of September, 1862, at the yearly rent of £12 18s. 6d. sterling, and that a proviso be inserted in the lease for resumption in case the premises should cease to be used for educational purposes."

The premises were, in 1879, still held on this resolution of the Council, no lease of them having been taken out; and no application had been made to the Treasury to sanction the proceedings of the Corporation, although the premises were admittedly let for less than their value. They consisted of a large school-house, a residence adjoining, and a playground attached, in Stephen-street, Waterford. A classical school, exclusively carried on by Roman Catholics, has since been in operation in these premises, the Rev. Mr. Phelan being the head-master and tenant in occupation.

We sent forms on two occasions addressed to the master of the school, which were not returned to us. We received, however, two letters from Mr. Phelan, stating that the school was not in any way endowed, and a third dated 16th September, 1879, in which, in reply to a question from our Secretary, he stated:—"The valuation of our school premises in Stephen-street in this city is £37 per annum; but owing to the depreciation of house property in the district, and other reasons, the Corporation has recently lowered the rent to some £12 or £13 yearly."

By deed dated 27th September, 1787, Dr. Downes granted a sum of £15 per annum (Irish) to be paid to a student in the University of Dublin, who should have been educated in the "Waterford Endowed School," such payment to continue until he reached Master's standing—the student to be nominated by the Bishop, Mayor, Recorder, and Dean of Waterford, and the master of the school, and the executor or administrator of Dr. Downes, or the majority of them, the preference to be given to the best scholar on competition, and, if the candidates should be nearly equal, to the poorest. The Right Rev. Maurice F. Day, Bishop of Cashel, informed us that on his coming to Waterford he found that there was no exhibitioner in receipt of this £15 per annum, and that for a year or two an alternative mentioned in the deed of grant was adopted, and the fund applied in the purchase of books for the Cathedral library,—that then it occurred to him that the Waterford Diocesan Free School was in existence, and that as "that school stood in the place of the other school which had become extinct, it would be carrying out the design of Dr. Downes" if an exhibitor were appointed from the former school, it being no longer possible to appoint one from the latter. The bishop accordingly selected a distinguished pupil of the Diocesan Free School, who held the exhibition at the date of our inquiry. The Diocesan Free School at Waterford no longer exists (Vide, supra, p. 53), but the Bishop of Cashel informed us that he proposed to connect the Downes prize with the "Waterford Diocesan School," described infra p. 117.

ENGLISH SCHOOLS OF PRIVATE ENDOWMENT UNDER THE COMMISSIONERS OF EDUCATION IN IRELAND.

The English Schools under "The Commissioners of Education" were, at the date of our inquiry, eight in number, viz. :—the Schools at Athlone, Betaghstown, Cloyne, Kilworth, Lifford, Rathvilly, Tullyvin, and Yonghal. All these were in operation at the date of the Royal Commission, 1854-8; the schools at Lifford and Yonghal, which were noticed as Grammar Schools in the Royal Commissioners' Report, have been since converted into English Schools, and are accordingly so classed by us.

Athlone; St. Mary's Parochial Male and Female Schools, County of Westmeath.

The endowment of these schools consisted of an annual rentcharge of £20 Irish, granted by William Handcock in 1705 for a Protestant school in Athlone, and of an accumulation of income represented at the date of our inquiry by a sum of £164 2s. 10d. Three per cent. Government Stock, held by "The Commissioners of Education." The deed creating the rentcharge directed that the master should be a B.A. of Dublin or Cambridge, and the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that to meet this provision the expedient had been adopted of appointing the rector of the parish to the office, leaving him to hand over the salary to the parish schoolmaster. They suggested that the rector should be removed from the mastership, and that "an attempt should be made to manage the endowment in conformity with the intentions of the founder, by the appointment of a University graduate, to conduct a school suitable for the middle classes." Nothing appears to have been done to carry out this suggestion; and from the return made to us it appeared that the present rector was the nominal head master, received the endowment, and applied it to the salaries of the assistant teachers.

The Board of Erasmus Smith supplemented the endowment with annual grants. For the year ending 1st May, 1878, the amounts granted by that Board were :—towards salaries of teachers, £54 5s. 9d., other expenses, £5 6s. 3d.

The head master was appointed by Lord Castlemaize, a successor of the founder; the assistant teachers were appointed by the head master and the Board of Erasmus Smith.

Betaghstown School, Cluse, County of Kildare.

The founder of this school, Patrick Hewetson, who died in 1783, left all his property to three trustees, the Primate of Ireland and Bishop of Kildare for the time being, and a layman, towards the support of a charity school for as many boys and girls as the trustees should think fit, and as could be conveniently instructed in the principles of the Protestant religion, in reading writing and arithmetic, those properly qualified to be bound out as apprentices to trade, and the proper fees to be paid.

In 1824 a scheme was settled by the Court of Chancery for the management of the endowment, the particulars of which are stated in the Report of the Royal Commissioners of 1854-8.

Rep., Vol.
III., p. 135.

The scheme provided (inter alia) that the dwelling-house on the lands of Betaghstown should be appropriated for the purposes of the charity school and the residences of the children and master; that the annual income of the school estate should be applied for the support of the school, in which fifteen boys were to be maintained and clothed; that £10 should be paid as an apprentice fee with each boy, and that the Primate of Ireland and the Bishop of Kildare should have a discretionary power to add to or diminish the number of boys on the foundation. The scheme intentionally omitted any provision for the admission of girls.

The school premises, which included about 20 acres of land surrounding the house, were, in 1857, stated to be of the annual value of £46 16s. 9d.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that though the boys were formerly apprenticed, this practice had of late been discontinued for want of funds, a circumstance which appeared "extraordinary" when they considered that the number of pupils was not large, and the value of the endowment very considerable, "but in this endowment, as in the case of many others, the expenses incurred in managing it and supporting the teachers left but little remaining for any other purpose.* They further reported that the net annual income at the date of their inquiry was £219. 17s. 8d. from land, and £79 2s. 8d. from trust funds. An increase in the rental afterwards took place on the falling-in of a lease; at the date of our inquiry the rental was £405 10s. 9d., and a sum of £1,948 4s. 11d. Three per cent. stock, was invested in the names of the Primate and the Archbishop of Dublin as Bishop of Kildare. The number of pupils on the roll at the date of our inquiry, twelve, was the same as that in 1857, and the provision for binding pupils as apprentices still continued in abeyance, the reason alleged being identical with that put forward in 1857, viz., want of funds. The annual expenditure at the period of our inquiry appeared to be considerably within the annual income.

The salary paid to the master was £100 per annum, a large amount having regard to the limited number of pupils and the character of the education, which was elementary.

The school was managed by the Rev. Ambrose Cooke, acting as deputy or commissary of the Archbishop of Dublin, and Colonel Gaisford, as commissary of the Lord Primate. The will of the founder contained no provision authorizing the trustees to appoint deputies, and we were unable to ascertain the precise authority under which the appointments above mentioned were made. There was no lay trustee.

Mr. Hanna, a member of the firm of agents who manage the property of the charity, informed us that more than half the acreage of the estate, which is 824a. 1n. 20r., was bog; of the remainder, some was poor, the average being fair land. He stated that the tenants held under carefully drawn leases, paid their rents punctually, and enjoyed the right of cutting turf; that the rents had been gradually readjusted, and that the land was let at its full value.

Evid.,

We received evidence with reference to a proposal for the removal of the school from its present situation to Clane, a village in the neighbourhood, and its union with a parochial school there to which the Protestant inhabitants had hitherto contributed £50 per annum. A sum of £300, with a site and two acres of land at Clane, to be granted for ever at a nominal rent, were offered by a private donor, Thomas Cooke Trench, Esq., on condition of the removal, and it was contemplated to let the existing school-house and lands to a tenant.

A-p. C. p.

Mr. Moore reports that the school-house at Betaghstown, though large and rambling, was in sound repair, and quite suitable for the accommodation of the teacher and his pupils, of whom he found eleven at the school, and he feared the advantages to be gained by the removal to Clane would not repay the cost of migration. With respect to the state of instruction he says, "The answering of the boys was not satisfactory, nor indeed under the circumstances could it be, since the teacher was but a short time appointed, and his predecessor was allowed to ruin the school."

Bishop Crow's School, Cloyne, County of Cork.

Rep. p. 118.

This endowment was created in 1719 by Dr. Charles Crow, formerly Bishop of Cloyne, who directed that the rents of some landed property at Cloyne should be laid out and expended in clothing and educating and binding to apprenticeship, the poor boys of the diocese of Cloyne, as many in numbers as should seem proper and sufficient to his wife, and to the Rev. Mr. Thomas Squire, precentor, and to the Rev. Mr. Walter Atkin, treasurer of Cloyne, and to such others as his wife should appoint; and after their decease he constituted the precentor and treasurer of Cloyne for the time being the perpetual overseers and trustees of the charity, subject always to give an account of their proceedings to the Bishop of the diocese for the time being.

The annual income produced by the endowment, was, at the date of our inquiry, £189 13s. 2d., being £86 5s. 6d. the dividends on a sum of £1,209 4s. 5d. Government Stock, accumulated income, and £153 7s. 8d. the net rental of the school estate.

14931.

The agent stated that the property was let at its fair value, except about sixty-five acres of land, held under lease dated 21st July, 1853, for a term of thirty-one years, at a rent of £65 10s. a year; on the falling in of this lease there would be a considerable increase of the rental. No record of the proceedings of the trustees with reference to the granting of this lease was preserved on the minutes.

Evid.,

App. C. p.

The trustees were, in 1879, the Rev. Thomas Moore, M.A., precentor of Cloyne Cathedral, the present master of Middleton School, and the Rev. Richard Chester, B.A., treasurer of Cloyne Cathedral. The former visited the school frequently, and appeared to interest himself greatly in its behalf. Mr. Moore, whose report upon the school is very favourable, states that he has no doubt that its efficiency "is greatly owing to the interest taken in it by Dr. Moore." He describes the school house as very old but in good repair.

14937.

There were at the school, at the date of our inquiry, five free boarders on the foundation and seven other boys, of whom six were day pupils. None of the day boys were on the foundation; but three of them, including the only Roman Catholic at the school, were admitted free by favour of the master.

The master stated:—"The boarders appointed on the foundation of the school must be Church of Ireland, but I have not been limited as to the religion of my day scholars." It was stated in the report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, that the will of the founder contained no direction that the endowment should be exclusive. The overseers and trustees were, however, all dignitaries of the then Established Church.

It appeared that several boys were waiting for nominations to free places, but the trustees were unable to do more than provide for the five pupils already maintained upon the foundation.

For some years past the trusts of the founder's will with reference to "clothing and binding to apprenticeship poor boys," had not been carried out, but Dr. Moore stated, in a letter dated August 27th, 1880, that the trustees had directed the Bishop's attention to the clothing and apprenticeship clauses, and that the trustees would carry out these clauses as occasion should arise.

"Bishop Crowe's School" was returned by the Secretary as under the management of "The Commissioners of Education," but Dr. Moore stated in his letter and return to us that they had nothing whatever to do with it.

The school house had been held at a rent of about £3, under a Bishop's lease, and the perpetuity was purchased by the trustees from the Church Temporalities Commissioners for £60, which they paid out of a balance in hand from the endowment, but owing to expenditure upon repairs and other outgoings there was, in 1879, a balance due by the charity of £80.

Kilworth School, County of Cork.

This school was returned to us by "The Commissioners of Education" as an existing primary school under their management and control. Mr. Fleming stated that at the suggestion of the Earl of Mount-Cashell, made "a great many years ago," forms were sent to Kilworth school, but that about two years ago they ceased to be returned. He said the school was "considered somewhat of a parochial school," and that no action had ever been taken by his Board with reference to any parochial endowment.

We made three applications for information to the master, but received no reply.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the endowment was £15 15s. per annum, from trust funds, and that the school premises, including one acre of land, were of the annual value of £5 3s.; that the state of education was unsatisfactory, and the premises in bad condition.

Lifford Free School, County of Donegal.

Sir Richard Hansard, in 1619, bequeathed £30 per annum for the support of a master and £20 for an usher "for instruction in learning at a free school at Lifford, where all the children of the parish of Clonleigh were to be entitled to a gratuitous education."

For a considerable time this school was conducted as a Grammar school, and was so classed by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8. They, however, mentioned in their Report that the school had then lately been re-opened under the management of the Bishop of Derry, the visitor, who considered that under the terms of the will it ought to be an English and not a Grammar school.

The Lifford school has now become an exclusively English one. In May, 1876, it was placed under the control of the National Board, and it now scarcely differs from an ordinary National school.

In February, 1879, as appears from the master's return to us, there were 66 boys and 74 girls on the roll; sixteen of the boys were free. The master, however, appended to his return a note with reference to the "free" pupils, in which he stated that "all are recommended to pay something, and may ultimately be induced to do so." He further stated that there was no particular method of appointment or selection, and no restrictions as to the religious denominations of those of the pupils who were exempted from payment of the usual school fees.

The master reported to us that he received, in addition to his salary from the National Board, the sum of £30, Irish, per annum, under the provision to that effect in the will of the founder. No assistant masters were employed, and the endowment of £20 "for an usher" was paid to the mistress of the female school.

The school premises consisted of two dwelling-houses and a school-house, described as inadequate to the requirements of the school. The site was free under the will of the founder. The yards at the rear of the dwelling-houses were held from the Earl of Erne, under a tenancy from year to year, at the yearly rent of 1s. One of the dwelling-houses was used as a teacher's residence, and its yard as a playground for the girls. The second dwelling-house was let by the trustees, and the rent, which amounted to £12 a year was (we were informed by the manager) expended on fuel, repairs, and school requisites. It was stated in the master's return that the entire premises stood in need of extensive repairs.

The trustees of the endowment (which was secured by a charge on the estates of the Earl of Erne) were the Bishop of Derry and the Earl of Erne.

App. C, p. 282.
Mr. Moore reports the answering in the programme of the National Board good, but the building derived from the endowment very old, and in bad condition, and so totally inadequate that the male school was carried on in the Parochial Hall, and the old house left to the girls and infants.

Infra, p. 219.
A sum of about £15,000, was, in 1870, left by Miss Eleanor Prior, to found a superior school or college near Lifford, to be called the Prior Endowed School (Vide, infra, p. 219), and Mr. Moore reports that Lifford is not large enough to supply children for both schools. The trustees of both endowments were the same at the date of our inquiry, and advocated an amalgamation.

Rothvilly Boys' School, Rothvilly Girls' School, County of Carlow.

Evid., 1863-2.
These schools were endowed in 1814 under the will of Benjamin D'Israel, Esq., who left certain property to provide a school-house, a residence, five plantation acres of land, and an annual salary of £30 for a schoolmaster, "to be applied for the purposes of a school to be conducted on the most liberal and enlightened principles, under regulation of the Bishop of Leighlin and Ferns, and the founder's heir-at-law." In 1857 the endowments were represented by £8,046 3s. 6d., stock, in the hands of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, with the school residence and five acres (Irish) of land, valued at £26 1s. 6d. per annum. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that these schools furnished one of the few instances in which "The Commissioners of Education" had acted in accordance with the Act (3 Geo. IV., cap. 79), which extended their powers to endowments subsequent to 1813. They also observed that the schools had been placed under the inspection of the Church Education Society, a proceeding which they considered objectionable, as they were of opinion that there was nothing in the terms of the founder's will to make the schools exclusive. Up to the date of our inquiry, Mr. Fleming was not aware that any steps had been taken by the Commissioners to sever the connexion of the school with the Church Education Society. From the returns made by the teachers to us it appeared that all the pupils in attendance were Protestants, and the great majority were members of the Church of Ireland. The late Bishop of Ossory Ferns and Leighlin had claimed "sole and entire authority over the school." It was stated that no child was excluded from the benefits of the endowment on account of inability to pay the school fees, and that "there are no restrictions as to religion, but all are required to read the authorized version of the Bible." Fourteen boys and eleven girls were being educated free, and several others paid only nominal sums.

Rep., pp. 115-22. Vol. III., pp. 9, 10.
No boarders were received at the girls' school, but twelve out of the forty-one pupils on the roll of the boys' school were resident. "Pupils are prepared for commercial pursuits, and for professional, intermediate, and University examinations."

Evid., 1862.
Mr. Moore reports that the school, under its present master and mistress, was a most useful and successful one, and the premises were in good condition, but the expense of most of the repairs had been borne by the master.

The history of this endowment is stated by Dr. Kyle, in a letter to one of the trustees which will be found printed in the evidence, infra, Vol. II., page 458.

Evid., 1860-5.
The original endowment of Tullyvin school was a bequest of £4,000 by Mr. Moore, of Cavan, out of the interest of which to pay a sum not exceeding £50 per annum, as a stipend to a capable master of good character and morals of the Protestant religion, for keeping a public school at or near to Tullyvin, for the education and instruction of Protestant children; the remainder of the interest of the aforesaid £4,000 to be applied to the purchase of books, paper, hats, shoes, and stockings for the children, and also for the purpose of obtaining and paying for the board and lodging at a moderate rate, contiguous to the said school, of such Protestant children whose own residence is too distant from the said school to allow of their daily attendance thereat. "Very protracted and expensive litigation arose, but the ultimate result was that a sum of £8,986 17s. 2d. Government new three per cent. stock became the amount of the endowment of Tullyvin." It was long since found that the intention of the founder as to the boots and shoes, lodging, &c., did not work, and was not carried out. Benbawn school, in reality, formed no part of the endowment. The rector of the parish, the Hon. and Rev. H. O'Brien, however, who was extremely energetic on the subject of education of the lower orders, rented the school house of Benbawn, and induced the Commissioners to permit him to open it, and to carry it on as an auxiliary to the Tullyvin school, and his exertions appeared to have been attended with considerable success. He was extremely desirous that the Benbawn school-house should be purchased, and constitute part of the permanent endowment. The legal obstacles to this, however, prevented its being carried out, and Mr. O'Brien and the other trustees prepared plans for the working of the funds of the Tullyvin endowment, to which the Commissioners did not object.

At the date of our inquiry the endowment consisted of £8,886 17s. 2d. Government Stock, and £189 13s. cash; held by "The Commissioners of Education," and the annual income was £269 12s., being the dividends arising from the Government Stock.

It was stated in the return made by the master of the Benbawn school to us, that an order was obtained from the Court of Chancery, sanctioning the application of portions of the Tullyvin endowment towards the maintenance of the Benbawn branch.

The benefits of the endowment are not now exclusively confined to Protestants. Out of the eighty pupils who at the date of our inquiry were in attendance at the Tullyvin day school, seven were Roman Catholics, and we were informed that a night school, held during three months of the year, was attended almost exclusively by Roman Catholics. At Benbawn of eighty-four pupils on the roll thirteen were Roman Catholics. It appeared that most of the pupils who attended the night schools were grown up young men, sons of farmers and others, anxious to keep up their knowledge, and in some instances preparing to enter the constabulary.

"The Commissioners of Education" granted £17 annually, divided between the schools and distributed in prizes.

Mr. Moore reports of Benbawn school that the answering of the 25 boys and girls present was highly satisfactory in all the subjects of a strictly primary education. The school was carried on in a miserable farm-house, in no way suitable for the purpose, though there was a vacant parochial school-house close at hand, to which it would be very desirable to move it.

Of Tullyvin, Mr. Moore reports that the teacher was an intelligent and painstaking person, but much in need of proper direction from an inspector. The examination was carried on by a neighbouring clergyman, who, as far as Mr. Moore could judge from the condition of the school, had little experience in such matters. The junior classes were decidedly bad in reading, spelling, arithmetic, and geography, while the senior class answered well in grammar, geography, Euclid, and algebra. The school was thought well of in the country, and attended by children of all religious denominations, and it seemed a pity that its usefulness should be hindered by the want of regular professional inspection.

There were no fees charged at either Tullyvin or Benbawn for day scholars. A nominal charge of 1s. per quarter was made for pupils attending the night schools, but seldom or never enforced.

Youghal Endowed School, County of Cork.

This, which in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, was classed among the "Grammar Schools under the Commissioners of Education," has become a merely primary school.

The Earl of Cork, in 1642, bequeathed £30 per annum to the free school at Youghal which he himself had founded and endowed with a school house; £20 to be paid to the master, and £10 to the usher.

At the date of our inquiry the Duke of Devonshire had raised the salary of the existing master to £40 per annum. No assistant master was employed. From the return made by the master it appeared that there were no free pupils and no boarders, that the school premises were badly situated, and not suited for modern school requirements, and that the number of day scholars in attendance was miserably small. The course of instruction was "that of an ordinary day school," there being "no demand for classics or any collegiate course."

Mr. Mahaffy found eight pupils on the roll, and suggested an application of the endowment to the cost of bringing boys from Youghal to Midleton School.

TENANTRY SCHOOLS UNDER "THE COMMISSIONERS OF EDUCATION."

There were, at the date of our inquiry, four schools of this class, one, Kilbricken School, Queen's County, on the Navan and Ballyroom Schools Estate; and the remaining three on the estates of the Royal Schools, viz., King's Island School, on the Dúnigasson Estate; Mullaghmore School, on the Armagh Estate; and Townavilly School, on the Raphoe Estate.

Kilbricken School had been placed by "The Commissioners of Education" under the control of the National Board. Mr. Moore reports it well conducted, and found forty-nine scholars present from a roll of sixty-one Roman Catholics and ten Irish Church children. Mr. Murphy reports the attendance "much less than might be expected."

King's Island Tenantry School, County of Tyrone.

Return.

King's Island School was established in 1865, by "The Commissioners of Education," and had been placed by them under the control of the National Board. The master reported, in 1879, that 106 children attended the school—ninety-seven Roman Catholics and nine Presbyterians.

The teachers of the Kilbricken and King's Island Schools received grants from the National Board as well as from "The Commissioners of Education."

Mullaghmore Tenantry School, County of Armagh.

Evid., 1128.
Return.

Mullaghmore School was established by "The Commissioners of Education" for the children of the tenantry on the Armagh Royal School Estate. The returns made by the master and mistress showed that in March, 1879, there were 69 pupils on the roll—40 boys and 29 girls; of the boys 4 were Roman Catholics, 7 were members of the Church of Ireland, and 29 were Presbyterians. Of the girls 4 were members of the Church of Ireland, and 25 were Presbyterians. No fees were charged for pupils attending during the ordinary school hours only, but the master had formed an early morning class, from 8 o'clock to 10 o'clock, for boys who desired to read the Trinity College Entrance Course, or to take advantage of the Intermediate Education Act. Pupils attending this class—there were 8 at the date of the return—paid from 10s. to £1 per quarter.

The endowment consisted of a house and garden containing one acre, which were held rent free by the master and mistress jointly. The salary of the master was £45, that of the mistress £25 per annum. Both salaries were paid by "The Commissioners of Education" out of the funds of Armagh Royal School.

Rep. p. 113.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the School was under the inspection and subject to the rules of the Church Education Society, and they expressed their opinion that "The Commissioners of Education" should not have placed a school intended for the benefit of tenantry of different religious persuasions under the "inspection and control of an exclusive body," such as the Society above-mentioned. In the teachers' returns to us it was stated that the school was "undenominational and unsectarian," but it appeared from the evidence of Mr. Fleming that it had been visited by inspectors of the Church Education Society. No one, on the part of the Board, had inspected the school since 1857.

Mr. Moore reports that the boys and girls were taught in one room, leaving the original girls' school-room vacant. "The reading, writing, and geography were good, while the arithmetic was fair, but the spelling and grammar bad." The teacher, who was about to leave, had been in the habit of teaching classics and mathematics out of school hours, and Mr. Moore thought that it would be greatly to the advantage of education if a person were employed who could prepare for the Intermediate Examinations, as the neighbourhood was stocked with primary schools.

Townavilly Tenantry School, County Donegal.

Townavilly School was established by "The Commissioners of Education" for the children of the tenantry on the Raphoe Royal School Estate.

The forms addressed by us to "The Master of the School" having been returned from the Post Office marked "No master at Townavilly," we wrote to the Secretary of "The Commissioners of Education" for information. In reply we were informed that the school was closed in August, 1878, and that "the circumstances connected with the resignation of the late master rendered it necessary for the Board to use great caution in the selection of his successor"; that for this reason the Board had deputed

Mr. Berkeley, one of the Commissioners, to institute careful inquiries; that owing to the ill health and subsequent death of Dr. Kyle, the matter had remained in abeyance, but that on 2nd October, 1879, a master had been appointed.

Mr. Moore visited the school on 5th February, 1880, and reports that it was then conducted by National teachers, and about to be placed under the National Board. The answering of the ninety-three pupils present was highly satisfactory, and they showed an intelligence and quickness very gratifying to an examiner. In the teacher's house there were only two habitable rooms; if the walls were raised a few feet two additional rooms would be rendered available, which were, at Mr. Moore's visit, merely lofts, and utterly unfit for use.

II.—ERASMUS SMITH'S SCHOOLS.

*Erasmus
Smith's
Schools.*

The schools which, at the date of our inquiry, were under the management of "The Governors of the Schools founded by Erasmus Smith, Esquire," belonged to three classes, and were:—

I. Four Grammar Schools, viz.: the schools at Drogheda, Galway, and Tipperary, founded under the original charter of 1669; and Ennis School, founded in 1773.

II. Two Intermediate Schools, viz.: the Brunswick-street School, Dublin, in which the teaching had in 1879 been raised above the grade of primary education; and "The High School, Dublin," established in 1862, which gives to all the pupils a superior English education, and a classical education to such of them as desire to receive it.

III. The "English Schools," which in 1857 numbered 140, but which had in 1879 been reduced to 105.

The history of Erasmus Smith's schools from their foundation to the year 1858 will be found in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8.

Erasmus Smith originally intended to found five free Grammar Schools, but in order to secure a more liberal maintenance for the schoolmasters, and also to make provision for clothing poor children, and binding them as apprentices, he reduced the number of the schools to three, viz., those at Galway, Drogheda, and Tipperary. The original grant of lands for the maintenance of the schools, executed by Erasmus Smith in 1667, made the teaching of the catechism published by the Assembly of Divines obligatory. The Charter obtained during the life of the founder, in 1669, from King Charles II., brought the religious teaching into conformity with the Church as then established. It provided that the course of instruction should be in writing, casting accounts, and as far as the pupils were capable, in the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew tongues, and they were to be fitted for the University if desired. It further provided that the Governors should have power to place in the schools poor scholars not exceeding twenty in number (besides the tenants' children of Erasmus Smith, his heirs, executors, or assigns, who were not to be limited to any number); that the masters and ushers were to be approved of by the Bishop of the diocese, and should sign the first two Canons of the Church, and that the masters should each Lord's day catechise the scholars in the Catechism of Archbishop Usher. With regard to the surplus income (if any), the Charter provided that it should be applied—first, in increasing the number of scholars in the schools or the allowances of those already there; secondly, if the rents exceeded £300 a year, in "repairing and beautifying" the schoolhouses. The further trusts were for the payment of ushers, for founding a Hebrew or other lectureship in Trinity College, for binding out poor children as apprentices under Protestant masters, and for clothing poor children in the Grammar Schools. The intention of Erasmus Smith was to found schools essentially Protestant in character; in a letter to the Governors in 1683, he writes:—"My end in founding . . . schools was to propagate the Protestant faith according to the Scriptures . . . Therefore it is the command of His Majesty to catechise the children out of the Primate Usher's Catechism, and expound the same unto them, which I humbly desire may be observed, upon the penalty of forfeiting their (the masters') places."

1835.

At an early period the Governors, finding a surplus in their hands, established the practice of granting exhibitions to poor scholars in Trinity College, Dublin.

In 1723 the governors obtained a Private Act of Parliament to regulate the disposition of the still increasing funds. The Act ratified the application of the funds to exhibitions in Trinity College, Dublin, and empowered the Governors to erect buildings in Trinity College for the exhibitioners, who were to be exempted from the payment of the usual chamber rent, either in the rooms so erected or elsewhere in the college. The Act also ratified an agreement with the Governors of the Blue Coat Hospital, Dublin, for the maintenance of twenty boys, and gave power to apply the surplus funds towards some public work or use in Trinity College, or the Blue Coat Hospital, or in sending poor children to school, or putting them out as apprentices.

In 1773 the school at Ennis was founded, which brought up the number of Grammar Schools to the existing number, four.

Evid., 3727. The Governors of Erasmus Smith's schools are a co-opted body, with the exception of seven ex-officio members, namely, the Lord Primate, the Archbishop of Dublin, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, the Lord Chief Justice, the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, the Lord Chief Baron, and the Provost of Trinity College, Dublin. The co-opted members of the Board, twenty-nine in number, were, at the date of our inquiry, the Right Honorable Hedges Eyre Chatterton, Vice-Chancellor of Ireland, the Treasurer, and, as such, ex-officio the Chairman of the Board; the Earl of Erne, the Earl of Longford, the Earl of Meath, the Earl of Courtown, the Bishop of Kilsloe, the Bishop of Meath, the Bishop of Tuam, the Rev. W. C. Greene, the Dean of St. Patrick's, the Archdeacon of Dublin, Lord O'Neill, Sir Arthur E. Guinness, Bart., M.P., Sir Edward R. Brough, Bart., William Digges La Touche, Edward Pennefather, Q.C., Col. The Right Hon. T. E. Taylor, M.P., Anthony Lefroy, The Right Hon. William Brooke, Ion Trant Hamilton, M.P., Henry M. Pilkington, Q.C., Thomas Vesey Nugent, the Honorable Judge Harrison, J. C. Stronge, Rev. H. R. Poole, F.T.C.D., Lord Monck, the Earl of Belmore, the Dean of the Chapel Royal, and the Earl of Rosse.

Evid., 3732. The routine business of the Board was discharged by a Standing Committee, consisting of those Governors who were most constant in their attendance. The members of the Committee at the date of our inquiry were:—The Vice-Chancellor (Chairman), the Primate, the Rev. W. C. Greene, the Dean of St. Patrick's, the Archdeacon of Dublin, William Digges La Touche, Edward Pennefather, Q.C., Anthony Lefroy, H. M. Pilkington, Q.C., Thomas V. Nugent, Judge Harrison, the Provost of Trinity College Dublin, Sir Edward R. Brough, John C. Stronge, the Rev. H. R. Poole, F.T.C.D., and the Dean of the Chapel Royal.

Evid., 3733-43. The Seal of the Board was used only at meetings of the Board itself, of which the quorum was five. No quorum of the Standing Committee was prescribed, but practically they required three, though, on very rare occasions, the treasurer with only one other governor, had transacted business. Since the Vice-Chancellor was appointed treasurer, there had only been one meeting of the Board summoned at which a quorum did not attend, and during the 5 years next before our inquiry the average attendance at the board had exceeded nine, and at the Standing Committee had exceeded five. The substantial attendance had been on the part of those who were not ex-officio governors, and as to the members of the Standing Committee, almost without exception, had been remarkably regular. Out of 138 meetings held in the five years 1874-9, the Treasurer had attended 137; a list of the attendances will be found in the Appendix to Evidence, No. V., Vol. II., p. 591.

Vol. II., p. 591. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, did not consider the management of the charity to be satisfactory; they especially remarked the want of visitation and inspection of the schools of every class, the unsatisfactory and costly mode of transacting the legal business of the Board, and the absence of a regular system of accounts. Some improvements were effected upon the publication of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, and since the appointment of the Vice-Chancellor of Ireland as Treasurer, in 1872, most of the defects noticed have, to a great extent, been removed.

Evid., 3488-93. The office of Treasurer was, in 1858, filled by John Barlow, Esq., J.P., who also discharged the duties of Auditor, but in an unsatisfactory manner. Immediately after the Report of the Royal Commission, 1854-8, was issued, W. Digges La Touche, Esq., D.L., and another member of the Board, were appointed Auditors, and the accounts have since been annually submitted to a full audit by two of the Governors.

Evid., 3774-3776. Mr. Barlow continued in his position of Treasurer until his death in 1872, when the present Treasurer, the Vice-Chancellor, was elected to the office by the governors.

Rep., p. 12. At the date of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, the offices of Inspector of Schools and Registrar were both held by the Rev. Hugh Hamilton, and their combination appears to have led to the neglect of the duties of both offices. In consequence of a recommendation made by the Royal Commissioners, the offices were separated in 1859, and Mr. William Henry Rudkin was appointed Inspector of the English Schools. At the date of our inquiry he still held that office at a salary of £500 per annum, paying his own travelling expenses.

Evid., 3826. No Inspector of the Grammar Schools was appointed until 16th April, 1875, when the Rev. T. T. Gray, F.T.C.D., was appointed at a salary of £100 per annum.

The manner in which the duties of the office of Solicitor to the Board were discharged continued to be very faulty until the year 1873, when Mr. Arthur Barlow, the then solicitor, was changed, and Mr. John Mannsall, the present solicitor, was appointed. Since Mr. Mannsall's appointment, the solicitor's functions have been confined strictly to the transaction of the legal business of the Board. He has attended only when there is legal business to be transacted and for the purpose of transacting it, and has taken no part whatever in the management of the affairs of the Board. Each bill of costs has been submitted for taxation to an independent solicitor.

In consequence of the observations of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, upon the accounts of the Board, a new system was commenced, and Mr. Barnes was appointed accountant and book keeper in 1857. Mr. La Touche stated to us that since that time the duties of the accountant had been very well performed, and that the books were thoroughly well kept.

The accounts were made up to the 1st May in each year, and the following Table and Balance Sheet were furnished to us by the Treasurer, for the year ending 1st May, 1878.

In the year ending 1st May, 1878, the expenditure upon the Grammar Schools was stated to be exceptionally large, the ordinary expenditure upon that class of schools being about £1,500 per annum, less than half the outlay upon the English Schools.

The item "Treasurer's poundage fees" arose from the fact that the Treasurer was originally entitled to a poundage on the rents. A Charter of 1833 provided that the poundage fees should be "set apart and form a fund to be applied as the Board should from time to time direct."

The estates of the Governors are situate chiefly in the counties of Limerick, Tipperary, and Galway. There are smaller estates in the counties of Sligo and Westmeath, and in the King's County. At the date of our inquiry all the estates were under the management of one agent, Walter Here, Esq., who resided at Pallas, in the county of Limerick. The agent collected the rents half yearly, and lodged his receipts from time to time in the Bank of Ireland to the credit of the Governors, furnishing the rentals and accounts once in each year. He did not appear to make any periodical or systematic inspection of the property. He thought the rents in some cases "quite full rents, in other cases they may be low." The Galway property included a considerable number of houses, let to weekly tenants, who paid their rents half-yearly. Except an external examination by the agent on the occasion of his visiting to collect the rents, there was no inspection of the buildings to ascertain whether they were kept in proper repair.

Mr. Murphy visited the Limerick, Tipperary, and Galway estates, and has furnished a full report upon each.

The Limerick estate contains 4,195*½* 2*½* 18*½* r., statute measure, is rented at £4,470 1*½* 7*½* d., the Poor Law valuation is £3,165 5*s.*, and the lands are held by 156 tenants. The average acreage of each holding is 26*½* 3*¼* 23*¼*, the average rent, £28 13*s.*, being £1 1*½* 3*½* d. per statute acre, and the rental is 29 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation. The estate is situated close to the village of Pallas Green, and the lands vary in quality from cut-out peat to some of the very richest pasture and arable land. There were maps of the estate in the Dublin office, of some of which the agent had rough copies, but there were no recent valuations. The estate was valued by Sherrard, Brassington, and Green, in 1818, at £3,930 10*s.* 8*d.* Mr. Byrne valued the estate in 1840 at £3,731. The records of the estate were not very accurately kept. The survey book of the Limerick estate differed from the Ordnance measurement, and the agent could offer no explanation of the discrepancy. The rental of 1878 did not give a correct account of the existing tenancies; the changes did not appear to have been recorded as they occurred, and the names of former occupiers who had long ceased to exist were retained in the rental. Up to the year 1840 almost the whole of the Limerick estate was let to middlemen, and the evil effects of this system were recorded in the surveys of the estate. One townland, which in 1818 was held under lease by a middleman whose under-tenants were described as very poor, is now held directly from the Governors by the occupying tenants, whose rental is 43*½* per cent. over the Poor Law valuation. This no doubt arose from the Board, at the termination of the middleman's lease, having simply taken over the tenants at the rent they were then paying. Mr. Murphy could not see or learn that they were in any worse condition than the tenants on the other portions of the estate, whose rents, as compared with the Poor Law valuation, were very much lower.

In the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-5, one holding, containing 34*½* 0*¼* 26*½*, plantation measure, is referred to, which was occupied then (1857) by the Incumbent of the parish of Green, at £12 12*s.* per annum, or about 7*s.* 6*d.* per acre, though valued by Mr. Byrne at £3 8*s.* per acre. That farm is now held by the Rev. Mr. O'Connor, at a rent of £68 6*s.* 6*d.*, about 40*s.* per Irish acre; the Poor Law valuation is £36 15*s.* The average rent of the locality is 54*s.* per Irish acre, and Mr. Murphy considers this farm still much underlet. His attention was also directed to a farm held by the Medical Officer of the district at the rent of 27*s.* 6*d.* per Irish acre, which appeared to be very much below its value. In this and another instance the agent's estimate of a fair rent had been reduced by the Governors after referring the matter to the agent of a neighbouring estate, a course which Mr. Murphy thought calculated to destroy the influence of the agent of the estate, and likely to generate a degree of listlessness and want of anxiety for the interests of the estates. The Rev. Alexander McLoughlin holds 42*½* 1*½* 12*½* of land, at the yearly rent of £31 2*s.* The late Bishop of Cashel had obtained a lease of these lands, which consisted of out-away bog, and erected four rows of double cottages, in which he offered a home and employment to those who became members of his communion. The Bishop's farm, as it is still called, is now in the hands of the Rev. Mr. McLoughlin, and the houses are now occupied by his sub-tenants. John Quinlan, of Ballycoshown, complained that his farm was highly rented. He holds 15*½* 3*¼* 2*½*, Irish measure, at a rent of £25 4*s.* 5*d.*, being 32*s.* per Irish acre; the Poor Law valuation is £22. The average rent of the townland is 27*s.* per Irish acre, and relatively to his neighbours, Mr. Murphy thinks Quinlan is highly rented. Quinlan, however, holds another farm in the same townland, containing 12*½* 0*¼* 8*½*, formerly occupied by a tenant named Howard, to whom Quinlan paid £170, something over £14 per acre. Quinlan holds this farm at the rent formerly paid by Howard, viz.:—25*s.* per acre, and is bound by his agreement with the outgoing tenant, to permit the Widow Howard to occupy a house and garden, and to give her the grass of a cow, all free for her life. The land is of no better quality than his other farm, and if interest on the sum paid for "tenant-right" were added, it would bring the rent up to 38*s.* an acre. Quinlan is also tenant of 4*½* 3*¼* 14*½*, in the same townland, which originally formed part of the lands held by the late Rev. Mr. Atkinson, under a lease which did not contain the usual non-alienation clauses, and the lessees' executors sold the interest to several parties. Quinlan paid £400 for the lot he holds, being about £40 per acre, the rent being 21*s.* 5*d.* per Irish acre. When the lease expired Quinlan was informed that he should pay the Governors 40s. per acre, "a proposition to which he strongly demurs." Mr. Murphy thinks this a striking example of the evil effects of granting leases without non-alienation clauses, and fears the estate will be involved in trouble with the sub-tenants, particularly as the Board did not take up the lands at the expiration of the lease.

A new form of lease has now been adopted which, in addition to all the requisite stipulations, provides that "tenants whose holdings shall be valued by the Poor Law valuation over £50," shall be precluded from making claims under the Land Act, 1870. Mr. Murphy does not think this a judicious clause. The tenantry and the estate would prosper more if each tenant felt that, whether he held by lease or otherwise, the value he had added to his holding by his industry and the expenditure of his capital, was secured to him. The Governors have borrowed from the Board of Works a sum of money to be expended in arterial and thorough drainage; the work has been most judiciously laid out, and is being executed in first rate style. A large tract of land, now held at about 30s. per Irish acre, will be much improved, and situated as it is, should, in Mr. Murphy's opinion, be well worth 50s. per Irish acre when the drainage works are completed. He was not aware what arrangements, if any, had been made with the occupiers in reference to this improved value.

The estate situated in the county of Tipperary contains 3,020A. 1n. 8r., statute measure, rented at £2,048 19s. 7½d.; the Poor Law valuation is £1,708 5s., and the lands are held by 107 tenants. The average acreage of each holding is 28½ acres; the average yearly rent, £19 8s.; the average acreable rent, 13s. 6d., and the rental, 11½ per cent. over the Poor Law valuation. This estate is considerably scattered, the townlands of Abbeylands and Rathassesseragh being close to the town of Tipperary, Soloheadbeg 2½ miles from the Limerick Junction, and Drumsane and Gortacoolrush not far from Thurles. The Abbeylands contain 105A. 3n. 9r., statute measure, of which 15A. 3r. 19r., statute measure, are held as a perquisite by the Master of the Tipperary Grammar School, which is situated on the lands. The Board of Ordnance hold 21A. 0n. 1r., statute measure, at £5 9s. 2d. per Irish acre, and the remaining 69A. 3n. 20r. are held by other tenants at rents varying from 52s. 6d. to 80s. per Irish acre. In one case, a tenant who holds 6A. 3n. 16r., Irish measure, at £31 11s. 6d., paid £200 to the former occupant for the good will, and now complains of the high rent of his farm, for which he pays 63s. per Irish acre. His neighbour holds 3A. 3n. 20r., Irish measure, at 77s. 6d. per Irish acre. The Guardians of the Union hold 6A. 0n. 11r., Irish measure, at 52s. 6d. per Irish acre, a rent "ridiculously below the value." The townland of Rathassesseragh is also close to the town of Tipperary, and is principally occupied as market gardens. These lands and the Abbeylands should have been treated as townparks, and would have been readily sought after at very high rents for this purpose; but now that they have been treated as farms and the "good will" allowed to be bought and sold, these considerations are out of the question. The townland of Soloheadbeg was held by middlemen up to the year 1835, at rents stated to be 33 per cent. over the rents charged by the Governors after the lands came into their hands. The Governors expended a large sum, borrowed from the Board of Works, on drainage and other improvements, and relet the lands about the year 1856, at an increase in the rental of £70 5s. 8d., which only just covered the interest of the Board of Works' loan, so that practically the tenants are now paying 33 per cent. under the rental paid to the middleman in 1835. The farms appear to be well laid out and well fenced; the rents vary from 34s. to 22s. per Irish acre, which Mr. Murphy considers very moderate, but they seem to be unequally assessed. The rental is 17 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation. The Rev. Mr. Smith holds twenty Irish acres at £34, the Poor Law valuation being £26 10s. He has sublet the lands to four tenants, one of whom is tenant of other portions of the townland held directly under the governors. Mr. Smith charges 46s. per acre for his land, and Mr. Murphy did not bear any complaint about that rent, though the tenant was "very decided in his language" as to the rent he pays to the Governors, which is exactly the same as the Poor Law valuation, and 12s. 6d. per acre less than he pays to Mr. Smith for certainly not superior land. A new valuation should be made, in which a careful note of all improvements made by the tenant should be recorded. There is a very fine limestone quarry on this townland, but it does not appear to be much utilized. The houses are fairly comfortable, and the tenants appear to be prosperous. The remaining townlands of the Tipperary estate, which are near Thurles, are let at 17 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation, including the buildings, or at 25 per cent. over it, if the buildings be excluded. The lands vary in quality, from good deep arable, to thin poor grazing land, and appear to be rather unevenly let, as compared with the Poor Law valuation, but Mr. Murphy thought the unevenness "more the fault of the valuation than of the rents," which opinion was concurred in by some of the old tenants.

who stated that the valuation put upon the arable land was much higher than that put upon land of equal quality which happened to be in grass at the time. The inequalities had, however, "disturbed the minds of the tenantry." One tenant who held 53½ acres, at £35 12s. 10d. (13s. 4d. per Irish acre), complained much of his rent, the Poor Law valuation being £27, but this included six acres, which, against the rules of the estate and without the agent's knowledge, he had taken from another tenant, subject to a rent of £2 8s. per annum, paying £120 for the "tenant-right." The Rev. Mr. Fry holds sixty-five statute acres, at a rent of £25, valued by the agent at exactly double that amount, which Mr. Murphy thought "exceedingly moderate." Part of the holding had been sublet, but Mr. Murphy could not ascertain at what rate. The Governors had arranged to spend £1,000, borrowed from the Board of Works, in drainage on these townlands, charging the tenants the same low rate of interest at which they had obtained the loan. Many of the tenants had availed themselves of the arrangement, and the works were well executed, and likely to prove "amply remunerative." Extensive drainage is still required, and much wet land, now absolutely unprofitable, might be rendered good sound land, and the tenantry then enabled easily to pay double the present rent. There are several instances of subletting, and the tenantry seem "rather difficult to deal with."

"The Western Estates," in the county and town of Galway, are chiefly held by middlemen, under leases and fee-farm grants. The holdings are much confused; the agent had no maps or records, and he and his assistant, who accompanied Mr. Murphy, were "utterly unable to identify the premises in the town lots." Under the statutes referred to in Mr. Murphy's report, the Governors were obliged to grant perpetual leases of the principal portion of these estates, but Mr. Murphy could not ascertain the principle on which the rents (which were to be fixed by arbitration, and subject to variation), were ascertained. The terminable leases contain clauses binding the tenants not to make claims under the Land Act, 1870. Of this Mr. Murphy disapproves. The tenant of a valuable seashore complains that his seaweed is carried away, and thinks the Governors should protect him. The buildings upon some of the holdings, in the suburbs of the town of Galway, are in a disgraceful condition of utter neglect, and there appears to be reason to believe that, through want of maps or knowledge of the property on the part of the Governors, some valuable property may have "passed away." The master of the Galway school enjoys thirteen acres of excellent land, "as a perquisite," free of rent. Mr. Murphy formed the opinion that, "this valuable estate has suffered from the most sheer neglect," and has stated the data on which that opinion was arrived at in his report. A "running gale" or half year's back-rent is allowed on this estate to all, from "weekly tenants" (who pay half-yearly), to the holders of fee-farm grants, and this arrear in the rental of 1878 amounted to over £1,200.

The lands in Sligo, Westmeath, and the King's County, are all cheaply rented.

Mr. Murphy thus summarizes the income of the Governors derived from the estates:—

| | £ | s. | d. |

| The average outgoings were, | 1,727 | 12 | 7 |

The agent's accounts appeared to be most accurately kept and audited.

Evidence was given on the part of the Presbyterians of dissatisfaction with the management of Erasmus Smith's foundation on account of its intimate connection with the Church of Ireland.

The Treasurer informed us that he considered the schools to be "Church of Ireland schools;" they were "established by Erasmus Smith in connection with the Established Church of the country, now represented by the Irish Church," and having regard to the words of the Charter, viz:—

"No part of the statutes, or rules, or regulations, shall be contrary to the ecclesiastical canons of the Church of Ireland, that shall be then in force—" the Treasurer thought that it would not be in the power of the Board to appoint a Roman Catholic either as head master or assistant in the schools. He stated that, under the provisions of the Charter, the masters must formerly have been members of the United Church of England and Ireland, and the Governors still worked the institution as if it was in connection with the late Established Church.

The Rev. W. Todd Martin, in the course of the statement which he tendered on behalf of the Committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, said:—

"The schools on the foundation of Erasmus Smith have been the subject of frequent complaint on the part of the Assembly. The grounds of complaint are briefly these—that the Presbyterian Church has been unfairly excluded from all share in the benefits derivable from the foundation, and that the endowment, which was originally designed to promote grammar school education chiefly, has been in great part diverted to the support of elementary English schools, the maintenance of Fellowships and Lectureships in Trinity College, Dublin, and grants to the Blue Coat Hospital."

As to the exclusion of Presbyterians from the government of the charity, he said:—

"The trustees into whose hands Erasmus Smith entrusted his lands, for reasons specified in his original instrument, dated 1st December, 1657, were all noted Puritans. He could not have chosen men more heartily opposed to Prelacy, yet the Presbyterian Church, whose confession of faith is that drawn up at Westminster by the Puritan divines of that period, and approved by Parliament, and whose form of worship is identical with that observed by those original trustees, has been excluded from the educational benefits accruing from the foundation. Surely in this the Church has suffered injustice. In answer, an appeal may be made to the provisions of the charter granted in 1689, during the lifetime of the donor. But a great political change had meanwhile taken place. The Episcopal Church had been re-established. If a charter was to be obtained at all there must be the recognition of the altered state of things. Provisions more favourable to Protestants outside the Established Church could not be expected than those which the charter contains. The only concessions which it requires are that the masters shall be approved by the Bishop of the Diocese, and that they shall sign the first two canons of the United Church. There are no requirements that the scholars shall attend the parish church, while they are to be taught doctrine identical with that of the Presbyterian Church—the doctrine of Archbishop Usher's catechism. It is only in 1712 that we find the governors making rules which require the use, at daily worship, of prayer out of the English Liturgy, attendance at the parish church, the use of Dr. Muma's catechism, and the preparation of the scholars for confirmation. It is very certain that Erasmus Smith did not in any way countenance or support the doctrines and rites which distinguish the Episcopal from the Presbyterian creed and service. The exclusion of all except members of the Episcopal Church from the administration and enjoyment of his endowments is clearly inconsistent with his intention."

Mr. Todd Martin stated, however, that he was aware that the regulations of 1712, to which he referred, had not been long in operation, and were not enforced.

As to the diversion of the funds from grammar schools to elementary English schools, he contended that, since the establishment of the National system, there had been no sufficient ground for expending the trust funds on the maintenance of rival schools, and said:—

"At the present time, when the National system is so largely taken advantage of by the Protestant Episcopal Church, there can be no shadow of reason for the maintenance of these rival schools. The funds should be withdrawn from them, and devoted to the more urgent and important work of grammar school education. In the present state of education in Ireland, all revenues available for the maintenance of grammar schools should be allocated strictly to that purpose."

It appeared from the evidence of the Treasurer that since the passing of the Irish Church Act, 1869, the Governors had been reducing the number of English Schools, and withdrawing their grants from localities where National schools could be maintained under Protestant management, and this subject of the Rev. Todd Martin's statement will be found more specifically referred to in the portion of our Report dealing with the English Schools (infra p. 84).

As to the grants to Trinity College and the Blue Coat Hospital, Mr. Todd Martin said:—

"The provision in the charter that a Hebrew or other Lectureship should be founded in Trinity College has been expanded into a very considerable annual grant. The annual contribution to the Blue Coat Hospital is another charge which is objectionable. That institution is exclusively Episcopalian. It is, no doubt, a valuable charity, but the trust funds of Erasmus Smith's foundation should not be made contributory to its support. I am aware that this annual grant, as well as other charges to which I have taken exception, is by authority of Act of Parliament, but an Act of Parliament may need to be reviewed and repealed. The Presbyterian Church has an indisputable claim to an equal share with the Protestant Episcopal Church in all the educational benefits derivable from the liberal endowment of Erasmus Smith. The Presbyterian Church is the only body in this country really representing the Puritan Creed, and the mode of worship to which the donor was attached. In carrying out Protestant objects, the Legislature, acting through the Established Church, had in past times made over to the members of that Church the revenues of this foundation. Such disposal of them, at no time fair to Presbyterians, is without plausible defence now that the State has withdrawn its sanction and support by disestablishment. Presbyterians ask only what is equitable when they say that they shall no longer be excluded from the benefit to which they have been all along justly entitled."

Erasmus Smith's Schools.

Several matters of general importance in reference to the management and condition of Erasmus Smith's Schools, but which more specially affect or relate to particular classes of those schools, will be found noticed in the following portions of our Report.

Grammar Schools.

Rep., pp. 78, 79.

With respect to the four Grammar Schools, the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, remarked that they were neglected and insufficiently controlled by the Governors—that they were never inspected—that the rules for religious instruction laid down by the Charter were not observed—that the Exhibitions in T.C.D. were inadequate, and not sufficient to attract competitors—that the trust for beautifying the school-houses had been neglected, and the cost of repair frequently thrown on the masters—that the Governors had almost entirely neglected to exercise their right of nominating free pupils, and had not made known to the tenants on their estates the existence of the right of their children to free admission, and that in none of the schools was there the requisite number of free pupils.

Improvements have since been made in the management of the charity in respect of almost all these matters of observation.

Evid., 2828.

We were informed that the supervision and inspection of the Grammar Schools, since the appointment of Mr. Gray in 1875, had been strict and systematic. He visited each school twice in each year, once at a stated period, and again without notice at an uncertain time. He examined every pupil, and also the buildings, and furnished detailed reports, which were submitted as they came in, first to the Standing Committee, and afterwards to the Board of Governors; and if anything occurred in the way of deficiencies in the answering of the boys, the Registrar was directed to communicate at once with the head master, and to call his attention to the complaint by the Inspector as to the answering in the particular subject. The Governors exercised control over the charges for day pupils and for boarders, and these could not be altered without their sanction.

Evid., 2890.

The Governors had made the following regulations for religious instruction, which were given to every head master on his appointment:—"On every day all pupils, who have attained a suitable proficiency, shall read to the master or assistant a portion of the Bible; the master or assistant shall then examine the pupils as to their understanding what they have read, and explain the sense in plain language. The pupils whose parents are members of the Church shall be instructed in the catechism of the Church of England (Archbishop Usher's or Bishop Mann's catechism is recommended), and no other catechism shall be taught or admitted in the school." At the same time, the Governors were aware that Roman Catholic boys attended the schools, and they had never in any way interfered with the discretion of the head masters in reference to those boys. They had reason to believe that the head masters did not insist on the rule being carried out with respect to children whose parents objected to it, and in Harcourt-street school there were no actual rules in force as to religious instruction; to that extent the intentions of the founder were not carried out. In the resolution which the Governors passed with regard to the duties of the Inspector of Grammar Schools, the following provision was made:—"That Mr. Gray be directed at each inspection to hold an examination in the Holy Scriptures and Church catechism, but no boy shall be required to attend such examination whose parents or guardians shall object thereto." The Governors appoint as masters members of the Church of Ireland only.

With regard to Exhibitions, there were under the Act of George I. twenty Exhibitions in Trinity College of £8 and fifteen of £6 a year, Irish. The Exhibitioners were free of rent for their rooms in College. These Exhibitions were, before the date of the Royal Commission, 1854-8, increased to £12 and £10 a year respectively; but in 1864 a new regulation was made, by which the original twenty Exhibitions at £8 and fifteen at £6 were resumed, and the Governors supplemented each year one of the Exhibitions of £8 Irish (£7 7s. 8d. sterling) by £32 12s. 4d., raising it to £40, and another by £17 13s. 4d., raising it to £25. These supplemented Exhibitions were not attached to any particular Grammar School, but were open for competition to first year's students of Trinity College who had been, for three years previous to their entrance, pupils in any of the four Grammar Schools. The examination for these Exhibitions took place with the examinations for the Royal Scholarships, they were subject to similar regulations, and tenable for five years. The disposal of the small statutory Exhibitions was formerly left to the Board of Trinity College, and they were usually awarded at the Degree Examination to distinguished students irrespective of the places of their education, and were tenable up to the standing of Master of Arts. Latterly, if any pupils from Erasmus Smith's schools failed to get the supplemented Exhibitions, but yet answered fairly in the examination, the Governors have required the Board of Trinity College to award statutory Exhibitions to them.

Erasmus Smith's Grammar Schools.

Evid., 2864-5.

Between 1874 and 1877 the attention of the Governors was called to the necessity for making some change in the system of keeping the school buildings in repair.

Evid., 2777-84.

There had not, under their former practice, been any periodical inspection of the buildings, and the head masters were, under their agreements with the Board, bound to keep the buildings in repair. Experience showed that this obligation was practically useless; and after communication with their architect, Mr. Symes, and upon a report of the Treasurer dated December 20, 1877, the Governors put the four schools into thorough repair, and relieved the masters from all liability for heavy repairs, but required them to be responsible for internal repairs and cleanliness, and for any actual mischief done; they have also, since 1874, caused a careful inspection of the buildings of each school to be made once at least in every three years by their architect, who was required on each occasion to make a complete report in writing on each school—showing the condition of the premises and the repairs, if any, required, with their estimated cost.

The expenditure since 1874 upon the four school-houses has amounted to nearly £9,000, the greater part of which has represented the cost of restoring them from the condition into which they had fallen under the previous arrangement to the good state in which they were at the date of our inquiry. The Governors hoped in future to secure the proper preservation of the school buildings at a comparatively small cost.

The Treasurer stated that the Governors did not consider themselves bound to nominate twenty free pupils to each school; "practically there had been a great change in educational matters in Ireland since the date of the Charter, and great facilities had been afforded to the poor for obtaining a more suitable education than that provided in the Grammar Schools." Their practice had been never to reject any boy who applied for admission as a free pupil, and was thought eligible, but the number had never come up to twenty in any school, as there were never so many applicants. The Governors observed two rules in the admission of free pupils. First, not to admit any boy the circumstances of whose parents did not require that he should receive a free education. Second, not to admit free pupils who from their very humble class in life or from other circumstances would not be suitable to associate with the pupils usually educated at these schools. The number of free pupils in the four Grammar Schools at the time of our inquiry was twenty-two, viz., seven in Drogheda, two in Tipperary, eight in Galway, and five in Ennis. The free pupils were day scholars; sixteen were members of the Church of Ireland, three Roman Catholics, and three Protestant Dissenters.

2884-5.

The Treasurer stated that the Governors had never received an application for the admission of children of the tenants upon their estates to the Grammar Schools, and that the privileges of the tenantry in respect to free education in such schools have not been availed of, chiefly on account of the difficulty of giving an education which would be accepted by the tenantry, of whom the great majority are Roman Catholics, and at the same time adhering to the provisions of the Charter as to religious education. Mr. W. Here, the agent over the estates, stated that some of the tenants on the Limerick and Tipperary properties would wish to raise their sons, and send them to schools of a higher class than the National Schools; that the tenants in Galway were of the wealthier class; but that the fact that they were Catholics would probably prevent them from claiming any rights which they might be entitled to at the hands of the Governors.

3429

The Governors allow a salary of £100 a year for the head master of each Grammar School, and £100 for an assistant, except at Galway, where the allowance was £150. The Treasurer stated that the Governors were anxious, as soon as they could afford it, to increase the allowance for assistant masters, and that when they recovered their financial position after the late heavy expenditure on repairs they contemplated making some change in that respect.

Evid., 3906

The course of education is generally classical, and all the boys must learn Latin, but need not learn Greek, or take any advanced instruction in Latin or mathematics, and can content themselves, if they so desire, with a purely commercial education. This, however, is not often sought, and the Inspectors reported that all the boys go on with the general course.

Drogheda Free Grammar School, County of Louth.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that there were then 61 pupils on the roll of this school. In 1877 Mr. Whitty, the then head master, was transferred to Ennis, and took almost all his boarders with him. The present head-master, Mr. Aldhouse, "had to begin the work over again, and make a school for himself." At the date of our inquiry (April 10, 1879), there were only 23 pupils on the roll, but at the date of Mr. Mahaffy's visit (1880), he found at the school three assistants, 25 boarders, of whom 7 were Dissenters, and 18 day boys, of whom 5 were Roman Catholics. He reports that the school was rising steadily in numbers under the present master. The Treasurer stated that the situation of the school-house in the town and the fact that a great many boys from the district were sent to Armagh Royal School, in the adjoining county, diminished the number of the pupils at Drogheda.

Six of the 43 pupils were free. The charges were £32 a year for boarders and £12 for day boys, for the full classical course. A commercial education was provided for day scholars at £6 a year.

Mr. Mahaffy reports that the buildings were commodious, and the school-room, with its adjoining class-rooms, a model of what such a building ought to be. As to the state of instruction, he remarks—"I examined the boys in the principal subjects, and found them on the whole fair in their answering. But in some points improvement is desirable. A senior class wrote almost uniformly bad dictation exercises, and a junior class were almost all puzzled by an ordinary sum in interest, though they were familiar with the rule. Yet, both in languages and in science, one or two of them showed remarkable talent. A chemical laboratory has just been started, and attention is paid to the teaching of natural sciences."

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that there were then 58 pupils on the roll of this school, 38 of whom were boarders, and 20 day pupils, 9 of the latter being free.

Mr. Mahaffy found 39 boarders, 3 being Roman Catholics, and 19 day boys, one being a Roman Catholic, at the school. There were 3 salaried and 2 pupil assistants, and the school was in a surprisingly good state considering its antecedents. The last master had left it at a low ebb. The building was large and straggling—indeed, too large for the requirements of the place, and required new plaster. The keeping of the buildings seemed fairly good. In science the boys were admirably taught. The head-master himself a distinguished science scholar, devoted his whole time to this side of the school. The little boys also answered well in spelling, not so well in easy geographical questions. The answering in French and German was fair, and in Latin and Greek the upper classes were fairly prepared. There was hardly any teaching in natural science. There was urgent need of a school library and of a reading room for the boys, and a detached infirmary was desirable.

This school was built in 1812 at a cost of £8,985 16s. 10d., and at the date of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, there was not a single boarder, and there were only twenty day pupils. At the date of our inquiry there were at the school 28 boarders (including 9 Protestant Dissenters), and 40 day-boys (7 of whom were Roman Catholics); 7 of the pupils were free.

The school premises had been allowed to fall into a state of disrepair during the tenancy of the late head master, and on the appointment of Dr. Biggs, the present head master, in 1875, the Governors were obliged to expend over £3,000 in repairs and improvements.

Previously to his appointment to this school, Dr. Biggs had a large school at Parsonstown, and most of his boarders migrated with him from Parsonstown to Galway. It was stated, however, that as these boys left the school their places were not filled by proportionate numbers of new boarders.

To the "great tendency existing in Ireland amongst the better classes to send their sons to English schools for education," the Governors attributed in a great measure the want of greater success in this and the other Grammar Schools.

The locality of the Galway School was described by Mr. Mahaffy as "eminently unsuited for a boarding school, but for the same reason eminently requiring a good day school." He found four assistants and fifty-four boys present at the school. The state of instruction in Latin and Greek was on the whole good, and in mathematics very good, but in English deficient, and in French indifferent. He considers the staff of masters peculiarly good, as all are experienced and professional teachers. The premises were not in perfect repair, or well kept.

Tipperary Free Grammar School.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, at the commencement of their inquiry found this school in a very unsatisfactory condition, there being not a single boarder and only twenty-one day pupils on the roll. Before the date of their report the master was called upon to resign, a new master was appointed in his place, and the school was fast regaining the position it had lost. The Commissioners advised that the Governors should by inspection guard against the school being again brought into the unsatisfactory state in which it had been.

Notwithstanding, the school had in the year 1874 again fallen into such a state that the Governors were obliged to direct an inquiry into the causes of the decline in its position, and the inquiry was about being proceeded with when the head master died. The present head master, the Rev. Mr. Lindsey, was appointed in 1875, and the school was described by the Treasurer, at the date of our inquiry, as the most successful and flourishing of all Erasmus Smith's Grammar Schools.

There were then 95 pupils on the roll—70 boarders; and 25 day boys, of whom 3 were free. The accommodation afforded by the school-house being sufficient for 60 boarders only, the head master had been obliged to take a house as a residence for those boys for whom there was not room in the school-house.

Mr. Mahaffy found 5 assistants, 48 boarders, and 28 day boys (17 Roman Catholics) at the school. He thought the discipline very good, and the religious teaching peculiarly careful and complete. Some boys answered very well in Euclid, some fairly in French and German, but in Greek and Latin the answering was not above a moderate average. Natural science was not taught. There was a great want of a school library. He visited the school only two days after the Christmas vacation, which may account for the deficiency in the number of the boarders whom he found present at the school. Both the master and Mr. Mahaffy called attention to the want of a gymnasium.

ERASMUS SMITH'S INTERMEDIATE SCHOOLS.

In 1811 the Brunswick-street School, Dublin, was founded. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, classified it as an English school, and the Treasurer informed us that it was still "put down as an English school," but it was described by him as a commercial school, with the benefit of a higher education. The High School, Harcourt-street, Dublin, gives a superior English education to all the pupils, and a classical education to such as desire to receive it. These two institutions therefore appeared to us to form a separate and intermediate class.

The Brunswick-street School, Dublin.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this was an excellent school, the education of a very superior character, and the master's qualifications of a high order.

There were then 100 pupils on the roll, and an average attendance of eighty-four. The expenditure of the Governors upon the school has been since increased. The Board, in 1875, made arrangements with the master to receive ten free boys, for whom they should pay him at the rate of £5 a year each. This was found so beneficial, and so much thought of by the lower middle class, that the Governors, in 1876, raised the master's salary by £100 a year on the terms of their having the right to nominate five additional free pupils. The mode and conditions of the election of free pupils to this school are similar to those adopted for the Harcourt-street school (vide supra, pp. 82 and 83). In January, 1879, there were sixty-five pupils on the roll, of whom fifteen were free. The charge made by the master to the paying pupils was £4 a year. The school can accommodate between eighty and ninety.

Mr. Moore found sixty-three boys present. The answering in English and mathematics was on the whole satisfactory, though the papers of the senior class were by no means as neat as they should be. The order was not good, and there was much need of a class room, four classes being taught at the same time in the same room. The Board had expended £300 on the repairs of the school-house within the last three years.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, mentioned that in 1709 Samuel Smith, son of Erasmus Smith, presented a petition to the House of Commons praying that the surplus rents of Erasmus Smith's school estates might be appropriated to the support of a mathematical school in the city of Dublin, and a draft Bill to carry that suggestion into effect was at one time approved of by the Governors. The matter was allowed to drop until 1862, when it occurred to the Governors that it would be desirable, as they had a considerable surplus for educational purposes, to establish a first-class school in the city of Dublin, upon the model of the High School at Edinburgh. Great difficulties presented themselves, some of which have been rather evaded than met by the plan ultimately adopted. By statute the surplus funds should be applied to the foundation of one or more English schools. An English school would not answer the requirements of Dublin, where the school, to be successful, should be much more akin to a Grammar school. The Governors endeavoured to separate the education offered in the school into two classes, distinguishing a superior English education, to be provided out of the funds of the charity, from the classical and mathematical teaching, to which the Treasurer's poundage (£250 to £300 a year), which under the Charter of 1833 was at the disposal of the Board, and the pupils' fees were to be applied.

Evid., 2946.

In 1868 the large house, No. 40, Haicourt-street, Dublin, was purchased for £4,000, subject to £100 per annum rent. Part of the house was used for the Board-room and offices, and another part was furnished as a residence for the head master. The sum of £3,400 was expended upon the erection of an adjoining school-room, class-room, and other necessary offices, and the cost of furniture, &c., brought up the outlay to £7,795, for the payment of which £5,000 Government stock was sold out, and the deficiency has been since paid out of surplus income. A head-master, the Rev. Samuel F. Creswell, B.D., Cantab., was appointed at a salary of £400 a year, with a capitation fee of £1 10s. per annum for each boy over the number of 200. This was afterwards changed to a salary of £300 a year, with a capitation allowance for every boy, including the free boys.

At the date of our inquiry (April, 1879), Mr. Creswell was about to leave, and it was intended to give his successor £400 a year, with a capitation fee of £2 for each boy over the number of 150.

A staff of assistant masters, whose salaries amounted to nearly £1,000 a year, were also employed. Accommodation was provided which was thought sufficient for 300 pupils. Up to the date of our inquiry the number had never much exceeded 130, including twenty free boys, elected half-yearly by the Governors.

2947-9

In 1875 the arrangements of the school were reconsidered, and in some respects modified. At the date of our inquiry it consisted of a lower and upper division. In the lower division, there was, for all pupils, one general course of instruction, comprising a sound and suitable English education, and such instruction in Latin, Greek, French, and elementary mathematics as the head master should appoint, with a discretionary power in him, under special circumstances, to exempt any pupil from learning any one or more particular branch. In the upper division, there was afforded an advanced course of English education, and also full courses of instruction in Latin, Greek, advanced mathematics, natural sciences, French, and German; the English educational course was compulsory upon all pupils of that division, but the other courses were optional. Arrangements were also made for instruction in book-keeping and other commercial education. The fundamental principle on which the school was established by the Governors was thus laid down, apparently with the object of bringing the school within the terms of the statute, 10 Geo. I. :-

2955.

"That the primary object of the instruction given be to impart a sound and comprehensive English education to every pupil."

The charges in the upper division for the English course only, and in the lower division for the general course, were £7 per annum; and in the upper division for the English course, with Greek, Latin, advanced mathematics and natural sciences, or for the English course, with advanced mathematics, natural sciences, French, German, book-keeping, and other commercial instruction, £12; a fee of £12 thus included everything except drawing, for which £1 extra was charged, and modern languages, when not substituted for Latin and Greek, for each of which the charge was £1 10s. The head master was not allowed to receive boarders.

2977-80.

The school was opened on 1st October, 1870. The 30 free places in the school have been kept filled. The elections for the vacancies have taken place twice a year. They have been advertised in the papers, and the Board have selected the candidates who seemed to them most deserving. No religious qualification was required, but there had not been many applications from Roman Catholics, and the Treasurer did not think there were any such among the free boys at the date of our inquiry; all the circumstances of the boys, who were examined separately, were considered, and the incapacity of the parents to pay for their children's education was the main point regarded. The number of applications so far exceeded the vacancies, there being generally from 15 to 20 candidates for 4 or 5 places, that the Governors resolved not to limit the number strictly to 20, and when particularly pressing cases appeared to receive them. The candidates must be between the ages of 10 and 13 years, and the places were tenable for 5 years, but the head master was required to report every half-year upon the progress of the free pupils, and they were liable to be struck off for inattention or idleness.

The Governors have raised five of the statutory exhibitions in Trinity College, Dublin, to £30 a year each, and one of these, tenable for five years, is awarded in each year at the general examination to the best answerer from Harcourt-street school. The sum of £40 is awarded amongst the pupils every year in book prizes.

In the accounts which the Governors have kept of their annual expenditure upon Harcourt-street school, which, in the year ending May 1, 1878, was stated at £768 5s. 3d., the true cost imposed on the charity by the establishment of the school does not fully appear, for the school is not charged with rent, taxes, and other outgoings, or with interest on the capital expended upon it.

During the five years preceding our inquiry the current cost of the school was about £1,500, of which about £900 was met by the pupils' fees, and the deficiency was charged against the general funds of the charity. The Treasurer's poundage was not appropriated in their books, but carried forward as an annually increasing fund, and no attempt was made to separate the cost of the English education, which, in the original plan, was the only portion regarded as legally chargeable against the general funds of the charity, from the expenses of the classical education.

Mr. Mahaffy reports that he found 146 boys at the school in November, 1879, and the number had, in 1880, increased to 170. The recent appointment of a young head master, Mr. William Wilkins, a distinguished graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, had caused the school to increase rapidly, and if properly managed and inspected Mr. Mahaffy thought it ought to stand first among the day schools of Ireland. He noticed some defects in external matters and the want of a school library; he also observed upon the inadequacy of the number of assistants, which he thought hardly sufficient for 80 boys, and upon the excessive number of boys in the classes, and he disapproved of the absence of control on the part of the head master over the appointment or dismissal of his assistants.

Mr. Mahaffy adds—"The free boys are elected by the Governors without examination, are not submitted to any sufficient periodical test, and are not under the complete control of the Head Master; hence there is a tendency in them to think lightly of their privileges, and these boys were reported to me as among the worst and most troublesome in the school. This serious evil could easily be remedied by making them submit to a qualifying examination every half-year."

On account of the appointment of the present head master having been so recent, we do not consider it necessary to refer to the defects in teaching noticed by Mr. Mahaffy.

ERASMUS SMITH'S ENGLISH SCHOOLS.

The English schools were 140 in number at the date of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8. Since that date many of these schools have been discontinued, and several other schools have been taken into connexion with the Board. The total number of English schools (excluding Brunswick-street school), had, at the date of our inquiry, been reduced to 105.

These schools, which were not within the original intention of the founder, were established in pursuance of the Act of 10 Geo. I., which authorized the application of the surplus income to the founding of "one or more English schools in Ireland." Many of them enjoyed grants of land (generally about 2 acres) made to the Governors by proprietors who were anxious to have schools under the Board of Erasmus Smith established in their localities.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that 69 English schools were founded between 1808 and 1815, the sites being leased to the Governors under instruments containing a provision requiring all the children to be taught the Church Catechism. Between 1839 and 1843, 52 additional schools were founded upon sites the leases of which provided that the children should be instructed according to the regulations of the Governors, the Holy Scriptures being read in the school, and all the children instructed therein. The leases in both cases provided that the sites, with the buildings, should revert to the lessors on the discontinuance of the schools.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that some of these schools were efficient, while others were in a very unsatisfactory condition, which they attributed chiefly to the want of adequate inspection, the insufficiency of the teachers' salaries, the inferiority of the school books, and the want of school requisites.

English
Schools*

Evid., 3110.

These schools had been always established in connexion with the Church of Ireland, the superintendents being generally the incumbents of parishes. In consequence of the passing of the Irish Church Act, 1869, the Governors appointed a committee, on the 25th of October, 1873, under the following resolution:—

"That a committee be appointed to inquire into the application of the funds of the Governors to the maintenance of the English schools, and to report to the Board whether any and what changes should be made in the present arrangements, having regard to the requirements of the country as to religious education."

Evid., 3111.

The Report of the Committee (which is printed in extenso in the evidence), came before the Governors in January, 1874.

The Committee reported that the condition of the English schools had been shown to be, in many respects, unsatisfactory; no classification of them existed, and the teachers were paid without any regard being systematically had to the numbers and importance of the schools. In many instances the salaries of the teachers were insufficient, and very great difficulty had been experienced in retaining them in the service of the Governors. The superior advantages held out by the Board of National Education had taken many of their best masters from the schools of the Governors. No mode existed by which teachers could be promoted, nor any by which those who proved to be, or who became from age, unsuited for the management, could be removed. The Committee recommended the adoption of a system of classification of the schools, and a graduation of the teachers' salaries; also that as a general rule the Governors should require that one-third of the salary of the teacher should be supplied by local contributions, but should take into consideration the special circumstances of any district satisfactorily shown to them not to be able to contribute its proportion, and if a district should fail to contribute its required proportion, the Governors should, after due notice, withdraw the teacher, and either appoint one of an inferior class, or close the school.

The Committee also presented a full statement of the reasons which had led them to their conclusions. They said that the circumstances of the country with regard to the primary education of the poor had been materially altered since the establishment by the Governors of the system of English schools. These schools had increased so much in number as to require an expenditure upon them of nearly £5,000 a year. They had been always established and conducted in connexion with the Church of Ireland, the superintendent being almost invariably the incumbent of the parish in which the school was situated. They were open alike to children of all religious denominations, provided that they conformed to the regulations of the schools. They were availed of, as might be expected, almost altogether by Protestant children only, and of these the great majority were members of the Church of Ireland. The recent disendowment of the Irish Church had seriously interfered with the means of education of Protestant children, and from these causes there would be great difficulty in continuing to provide means for the education of the Protestant poor in most districts of Ireland. To meet this difficulty as far as possible, the available resources of the Governors might legitimately be applied. They also reported that the many and great advantages of the system of National education had not been availed of as largely as they might have been by the members of the Church of Ireland, but they were of opinion that patrons having the power to avail themselves of grants from the funds supplied by the State, should not draw upon the limited sum at the disposal of the Governors. If this were done it would enable the Governors to apply their funds to the maintenance and assistance of schools in localities where the numbers were too small to entitle them to adequate grants from the National Board. In very many of such localities the numbers were too few to entitle the schools to any aid; in others, there were Protestant children sufficient to entitle them to partial assistance, such as payment of the salary of a monitor and supply of school requisites, or to the latter only. To such localities the attention of the Governors should be specially directed, and assistance afforded to supplement both local efforts and partial aid from the national funds. If this were not done, the children of the Protestant poor must in many districts be left altogether without education or be obliged to obtain it in National schools not under Protestant patrons. Most of these schools in three of the provinces were under the patronage of the Roman Catholic clergy, and though the rules of the National Board in the nature of conscience clauses might be obeyed, still it was impossible to avoid the danger that must exist from the influence flowing from such patronage, and from the large preponderance of children of the Roman Catholic persuasion, upon the general religious tone of a school.

The Committee therefore recommended the Governors to decline to afford assistance to any schools not already maintained by them, in localities where adequate funds from other sources could be obtained; and also, as opportunities should present themselves, to withdraw the grants from schools which they should consider to be in a position to obtain sufficient support either from private contributions or public funds. Any savings so effected should be applied to the assistance of localities not thus favourably circumstanced. In cases in which grants should be so withdrawn from schools, where the premises were vested in the Governors, such premises should not be voluntarily surrendered by them, and under suitable regulations the use of them should be permitted to patrons approved by the Governors, who might obtain funds for the support of schools therein from other sources, the Governors also contributing to keep such premises in repair. They also recommended that separate schools for males and females should not be maintained where the average attendance was less than twenty; and that in such cases the male and female schools should be united under one teacher, either male or female, as the Governors should deem best.

The Governors had since discontinued a number of schools, in many cases withdrawing the grant if there were means of establishing a school in connexion with the National Board, under the patronage of the superintendent of their own school. The Treasurer thought there would be a further but only gradual reduction. In some localities the Governors would be in a condition to compel the superintendents to put their schools under the National Board, but they would probably have calls upon them from other poor localities which had not a sufficient number of children to obtain grants. He stated the general object of the Governors to be "to come to the assistance of the disestablished Irish Church, and to prevent the Protestant children in certain localities from being forced to accept the National system of education under the management of persons who were not members of their Church," there being a great many localities, particularly in the southern provinces, where no school was available, for a not inconsiderable number of Protestant children, except under Roman Catholic patronage. The treasurer also said he was sure that there would be an equal objection to compelling children of the Church of Ireland to accept the National system of education under the management of Presbyterians and Methodists as under that of Roman Catholics. He thought that system was becoming practically a denominational system in all the provinces except Ulster, and that there was now scarcely anything like mixed education in the National Schools.

The expenditure upon the English schools, which in 1872 was about £4,000 a year, was at the date of our inquiry reduced to £3,557, and the number on the roll of these schools, which in 1857 was 7,010, was in 1879 5,217—2,798 boys and 2,419 girls—of whom 4,163 belonged to the Church of Ireland, 951 were Protestant Dissenters, and 163 were Roman Catholics. There was an average attendance of about 3,500. Each child was required to pay 1*d.* a week at least, but many paid 2*d.* or 3*d.*, according to their circumstances, and children entirely unable to pay were admitted free on the nomination of the clergyman of the parish, or of the patron; at the date of our inquiry there were 1,879 free pupils in the schools.

Mr. William Henry Rudkin inspected each school twice a year—once at a fixed period, and again without notice. In cases where the results of inspection were unsatisfactory the teacher was warned, and the inspector had the power of reducing or withholding the Board's allowance of £5. If, after warning, the efficiency of the school did not come up to what it ought to be, Mr. Rudkin made a report to the Governors, and the teacher was removed. He reported a great improvement in the schools, which he attributed to the introduction of a better class of teachers, and the attention of the superintendents, as well as to his own inspection. Since his appointment he had gradually introduced the National School books, which he found to be the best, instead of those used in the Church Education Society's Schools. Mr. Rudkin "had not the slightest hesitation in saying that there were no schools under any Board in the United Kingdom superior in point of efficiency to the English Schools of the Erasmus Smith's Board."

As it was not possible for our Inspector to visit all the English schools, we selected six as types, viz. :—Kill, Kildare; Granard, Longford; Enniscorthy, Wexford; Lurgan (Male and Female), Armagh; Donaghadee, Down; and Dungannon (Male and Female), Tyrone.

Mr. Moore found these schools well chosen to give him a general knowledge of the system carried out by the Board and its practical results.

He reports that there was no programme of instruction, and the teachers had complained that while Mr. Rudkin—as far as they could judge by his questions—examined in a fixed course, yet they had no intimation of that course, at least in writing. In this Mr. Rudkin was not in fault, as it was the duty not of the Inspector but of the Board to prepare a programme. It seemed to Mr. Moore unaccountable that the experience and ability of the gentlemen who formed the English and Irish National School Boards should be ignored, as nothing would be easier than to adopt the inspection forms and programmes of either Board, or at least modifications of them. He therefore could not state that the schools were properly looked after by the Board, and he strongly recommended that the Inspectors' report sheets should be revised, and that a standard should be prepared and sent to each school. The actual condition of the schools was, on the whole, satisfactory so far as the instruction was concerned (though by no means so good as it might have been if more carefully managed). This was due to the conscientiousness and energy of Mr. Redkin (who had to do the double work of inspection and organization), and should the inspection fall into the hands of a less competent person, the schools would most probably relapse into the condition in which they were found in 1856. The special feature of Erasmus Smith's schools was the excellent manner in which spelling and geography were taught. In these subjects the pupils answered as well as, if not better than, those of any other school which Mr. Moore examined.

Ibid. The school-rooms were generally in good condition, though the teachers' apartments were very often much neglected, and were evidently considered a matter of secondary importance. The gratuity to the teacher might with advantage be increased, and it should be made to depend on the percentage of passes at the examinations.

Ibid. p. 265. As to the absolute usefulness of these schools Mr. Moore could only, of course, judge of the six which he visited; these served merely as parochial schools, but they were much superior to the schools ordinarily called by that name, though not, in his opinion, so useful as National schools. Three of the six had not an attendance which would entitle them to any material assistance under the regulations of the National Board; in such cases the Erasmus Smith grant was of great service.

Evid., 3111. From a very early period the Governors took upon themselves the maintenance of twenty boys at the King's Hospital, Oxmantown. The power of nominating these boys was formerly vested in the treasurer alone. The Committee appointed by the resolution of 25th October, 1872, reported that it would tend materially to promote the efficiency of the English schools if the whole or a part of the nominations of boys to the King's Hospital were offered as exhibitions to pupils educated in those schools. They stated that the Treasurer had expressed his desire to relinquish his right of nomination so far as might be necessary to give effect to the proposal of the Committee, and recommended the establishment of a competitive examination for four nominations in each year.

Evid., 3113. This recommendation was carried out, and the Governors, in each year, offer four nominations (if so many vacancies exist) to be competed for by boys between the ages of eleven and twelve, who have attended one of their English schools for not less than two years next preceding the competition. The examination is held in Dublin; the subjects are the Holy Scriptures, reading, writing, arithmetic, English grammar, and geography. The exhibitions are tenable for four years. The Governors pay about £30 a year for each of the boys, who receive a first-class commercial education, and some are taught Latin. The answering for these exhibitions was stated to be very good, but the competition not as large as might be expected, the reason given by Mr. Redkin being that the parents were not in all cases able to pay the expense of sending their sons to Dublin for the examination.

Ibid., 3111. Premiums for good attendance in the English schools were formerly given, but they have been discontinued since 1874.

Evid., 3123. With regard to religious instruction, the rules in force at the date of our inquiry were, that all children who had attained a suitable proficiency should daily read to the teacher a chapter in the Bible, and the teacher should examine the children as to their understanding of what they had read, explaining the sense in plain language without entering into controversial or abstruse matters; the children whose parents were members of the Church should be instructed on at least one day in every week in the Catechism of the Church of England, and no other Catechism should be taught or admitted into the school. The attendance of the children of other denominations on this occasion should be as their parents might direct.

These rules for religious instruction were strictly adhered to, and the breach of them was not overlooked by the Governors, as it was in the case of the grammar schools, the reason given by the Treasurer for the distinction being that the children attending the grammar schools, belonging to the better class, must receive a large amount of religious instruction at home, and the parents were in a position to see that their religious instruction was attended to, but that the same safeguard did not exist in the case of the English schools. He thought that no education could be really beneficial if not based on religion, and therefore that religious instruction should be secured to every child as a most material part of his education. He believed that this object could not be as satisfactorily attained in reference to the poor children whose parents might not be as capable of instructing them in religion as the parents of the better classes, or might not be as active in looking after their religious instruction. Consequently the Governors deemed it necessary to insist on all the children attending these schools being instructed in the Holy Scriptures, and all were examined in the Scriptures by the Inspector.

The rules to be observed in these schools are to be found in Appendix F., p. 330.

The mode of supplying books to the pupils had been altered. Formerly the books were paid for in equal proportions by the Governors and the superintendent, were considered the property of the Governors, and could not be taken out of the school to enable the children to prepare their tasks at home. The consequence of this rule was that the children came to school unprepared in the work of the day. The Governors now pay one-half the cost of the books and the superintendent the other half, and the books are sold to the children at half-price, thus enabling the superintendent to recover what he has advanced, and the books become the property of the children, who can take them home.

The Governors have occasionally contributed towards the expense of purchasing school furniture, but as a rule the supply has been from local sources.

The larger number of the English Schools have been built by the Governors upon sites held in perpetuity. The rest are called non-vested schools, and the school premises belong to private individuals, who have applied to the Governors to take the schools under their charge. The Governors contribute one-half of the sum expended on the repairs of the schools of both classes.

We subjoin a list of all the English schools which in February, 1879, were under the control of, or in connexion with, the Board of Erasmus Smith. Information as to the number of pupils, state of instruction, &c., in each school, taken from the returns furnished to us by the teachers, will be found in our General Table of Endowments, Appendix P., infra, pp. 345-477.

III THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S SCHOOLS.

"The Incorporated Society in Dublin for promoting English Protestant Schools in Ireland" was incorporated by Royal Charter in 1733. The Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, contains a statement of its history from 1733 to 1857. The Society, from its foundation in 1733 until 1832, received annual grants from Parliament, but the Secretary stated that the present endowment was entirely of private foundation, and that the present fund did not represent any money voted by Parliament.

The result of our inquiries with reference to the Society is, on the whole, satisfactory, and shows that in some respects considerable progress has been made since 1857.

For example, the competition for free places in the boarding institutions was formerly limited to candidates who came from districts in which the Society possessed estates, and who for at least one year previous to the examination had attended a school in which the Scriptures were daily taught. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, recommended that these restrictions should be removed. The Society have adopted and carried out this recommendation. Attendance at a Scriptural School no longer constitutes an essential qualification, and candidates for admission to the male schools may come in from any part of Ireland on producing a certificate in the form printed in an appendix to this Report. Again, the Commissioners suggested that the accounts of the Society were not kept in a sufficiently business-like manner, and they recommended that the system of book-keeping by double entry should be adopted. In accordance with this recommendation, the books were placed in the hands of an accountant, and the proposed alterations at once carried out.

But while the Society thus promptly met some of the suggestions made by the Royal Commissioners, they allowed others of them to remain unattended to. The recommendation that the audit of the accounts should not be conducted by members of the Standing Committee of the Society has not been carried out. Again, the Commissioners advocated the appointment of a paid Inspector, who should visit the Society's schools without notice, and examine all the pupils. No such appointment has been made, the Society evidently considering the existing system of inspection by a deputation of the Society sufficient. In this view, however, our Inspector, Mr. Moore, does not concur.

In his report upon the Society's Boarding Institutions he states :—"The annual examination, of which notice is given, is carried on by a deputation sent by the Board, and is confined to the foundation pupils; thus that part of inspection which relates to discipline, classification of pupils, cleanliness, &c., is totally neglected. There should be a regular paid Inspector appointed, who should visit without notice, and report accurately on the working of the school, cleanliness of the house, &c. . . . In every school I visited the effects of this want were apparent. . . . In Farrar the house and out-offices showed very great neglect, while in Primrose Grange, where a large number of boarders are kept, the fact that there was not a single bath in the house showed that it was not inspected by a person acquainted with the ordinary necessities of an educational establishment." Speaking of the day schools, Mr. Moore remarks :—"The want of inspection is here more apparent than in the boarding schools."

Mr. Mahaffy, who visited five of the higher and more important schools of the Society, prefaces his general remarks upon them with the observation that the schools had the benefit of constant and careful inspection, and hence no grave abuses have been allowed to grow up, but he suggests that "the inspection by the Society should extend to the question of baths, lavatories, and general cleanliness."

The affairs of the Society are managed by a board consisting of 112 elected and 25 ex-officio members. A general meeting of the board is held quarterly. A committee of fifteen (elected under the Charter by ballot annually) meets once a month, and transacts the routine business of the Society. The average attendance at the meetings of the Committee has been about ten, and at the meetings of the Board about fifteen. On some occasions there has been a large attendance.

The official staff consists, under the Charter, of a Secretary, an accountant or registrar, and a messenger. The agent over the numerous estates of the Society is Mr. William Fidgeon, J. J. who was examined before us.

The following balance-sheet shows the income and expenditure for the completed year next preceding the date of our inquiry :—

On the 31st March, 1879, there was a sum of £1,755 4s. 9d. in hand to the credit of the Society on account current, and £2,500 invested on deposit receipt bearing interest.

In 1857 the Society possessed £98,230 stock in the English and Irish Funds. This amount had been reduced to £85,175 1s. 1d. on the 31st March, 1879, by expenditure in the purchase of quit rents and head rents to which the estates of the Society were subject, and by a sum of £5,250, the amount paid for portion of the lands of Clonarks, near Athlone, purchased in 1860.

The estates of the Incorporated Society are situated in sixteen different counties. Many of the estates are small, the Society receiving head rents only from them. The greater number of the estates are let on leases.

The gross rental in 1878 was £9,138 11s. 3d., showing a considerable increase since 1857, when the gross rental amounted to £7,771 10s. 5d. This increase was attributed "to several causes,—to the falling-in of leases and the granting of new ones at increased rents, and to the purchase of head rents by the Society out of their funded capital." The lands of Clonarks have also been added to the rental.

The Board of the Incorporated Society take an active share in the management of their property, and do not leave the matter entirely in the hands of their agent. Deputations from the Board occasionally visit and inspect the estates. The agent "is rarely absent from the meetings, either of the Board or of the Committee," and when it becomes necessary to re-let holdings, the future rent is decided not by the agent but by the Board. The evidence of the agent was that the estates were fairly let, and there did not appear to be any accumulation of arrears. A plan of making advances to tenants anxious to drain their farms, or effect other improvements thereon—the Society charging an additional rent amounting to 25 per cent. upon the outlay—appeared to have been largely taken advantage of, and to have proved beneficial in numerous instances.

Mr. Murphy inspected the estates of the Society, which are of various extent and value, have been derived from a large number of donors, and are occupied by tenants possessed of interests varying from quarterly tenancies to estates in fee-farm. He divided the estates into two classes, each included in a separate schedule. The first schedule includes such property as could be compared with the Poor Law valuation, and from which a prospective increase might be expected. The second schedule contains such properties as could not be usefully compared with the Poor Law valuation, consisting of head-rents, tithe-rentcharges, and lands held by the tenants in fee-farm, or under leases for long terms.

The estates of the first class contain 4,836A. 0a. 19r. statute measure, and are let at £3,518 2s. 10d. to 141 tenants, and the Poor Law valuation is £3170 2s. The average acreage of each holding is 33A. 2n, the average rent of each tenant £14 10s, the average acreable rent 14s. 6d., and the lands are let at nearly 10 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation.

The principal estates of the first class are:—No. 1. the Raneigh estate, consisting of two townlands near Athlone, containing 1,391A. 1s. 15r. held at a rental of £397 3s. 6d.; the Poor Law valuation being £382 2s. Up to 1850 these lands were held under lease by middlemen, and on the termination of the leases they were densely populated by a wretchedly poor tenantry, and permanently injured by repeated burning of the surface. There were then fifty-seven tenants on one townland, and seventeen on the other. These numbers have been reduced to thirty-three and four, respectively; the tenants removed were generously dealt with by the Society, and the lands were well re-arranged amongst the remaining tenantry. There was great difficulty in having these arrangements carried out, and the lands were let much below their value, and have so remained since. There are many cases in which the rent is considerably under the Poor Law valuation, and some few in which it is slightly in excess of it. The Society have constructed some useful roads, and for some years maintained a nursery at considerable expense in the hope of encouraging the tenants to plant, but the attempt has been discontinued. The houses of the tenants appeared comfortable, and two or three which Mr. Murphy inspected were "models of cleanliness." "There was an air of respectability amongst the tenants which was quite pleasing, remembrance being had to the state in which the property appears to have been under the dire influence of the middleman."

No. 2. the townland of Clonarks, which the Society purchased recently in the Landed Estates Court, contains 870a. 3s. 8p., the rental is £304 4s. 6d., the Poor Law valuation being £293 10s.; the price paid for the estate was £5,250, being seventeen and a quarter year's purchase, which Mr. Murphy considers "an excellent bargain." The lands are let on very easy terms to the tenants; the Society has made no attempt to revise the rents, but has spent about £800 on drainage, and other improvements. The tenants are "pretty evenly rented, considerably under the letting value of adjoining lands."

No. 3. the Farra estate, situated within three miles of Multifaraham, consists of two townlands, Rathoniska and Rathbennett, containing 455a. 2s. 28p., of which 364a. 3s. 14p. are occupied, strictly speaking, by twenty tenants, who pay £352 10s. rent. The remaining 90a. 3s. 14p. are let annually for grazing, producing £185 13s. 4d. The Poor Law valuation of the tenanted portion is £333 5s. Eight of the tenants hold by leases, seven of which will expire on 1st November, 1887, and the eighth on November 1st, 1881. At present the average rent is 19s. 4d. per statute acre, which is very much below the value, in Mr. Murphy's opinion. Some of the lands are exceedingly rich in quality, and occupied as accommodation lands by persons in trade. The Farra School stands on the estate. Mr. Murphy describes it as a straggling set of buildings, very much out of repair, formerly occupied as an agricultural school, which failed to commend itself to the public, and now used as an ordinary school. Some repairs were being carried out when he made his inspection; but the whole place had the appearance of decay and dilapidation, and seemed quite unsuited for training the pupils in habits of regularity, cleanliness, and order.

No. 4. the Pooocke estate consists of nine separate denominations of land, in the counties of Kilkenny and Waterford. One townland, Loughnacash, in the immediate vicinity of the town of Kilkenny, containing 56a. 0s. 28p., statute measure, was let on lease in 1864 at £110 a year, for thirty-one years. It had previously been let for twenty-one years, at £71 5s. 9d. It is bounded by roads on two sides, and although the rent has been considerably increased at the last letting, it is still very far below what Mr. Murphy understands it would let for if again in the market. It is deep rich land, and from its proximity to the town should command a very high rent. Another townland, Coolishalbeg, six or seven miles from Kilkenny, containing 47a. 12. 24p., statute measure, was let on lease in 1871, for thirty-one years, at a rent of £79 3s. 2d., to the former tenant, who had held it on a twenty-one years' lease, at £45 6s. 9d., the Poor Law valuation being £42 15s. The rent now paid, nearly 50s. the Irish acre, is in Mr. Murphy's opinion, a very full rent. Lands immediately adjoining, and of similar quality, are let at 44s. the Irish acre. The Society, however, expended £80 in drainage before reletting the land. The principal parcel of the estate is the townland of Kilmann, within four miles of the city of Waterford, containing 523a. 2s. 10s. The lands are let to eight tenants, at a rent of £445 4s.; the Poor Law valuation, including the houses, which were chiefly built by the Society, being £372 5s. The lands are all held under leases for twenty-nine years, from 1865. Mr. Murphy reports that the Society has been most liberal in the treatment of the tenantry here, as elsewhere; the Society has expended considerable sums in building and drainage; the tenants have valuable interests in their farms; they pay a very moderate rent, and have been treated with very great consideration by the Society; abatements have been allowed during the past season "in the shape of allowances for improvements." Some of the tenants, however, appeared to have more land than they were able to manage, their farms being too large for their capital. The agent explained that he had such trouble in getting rid of some objectionable tenants at one period that he was most anxious to have the farms as large as possible. In some instances the Society has advanced money to the tenants for improvements, and charged 5 per cent., added to the rent, a good system, care being taken that the money shall be judiciously expended.

No. 5. the Dundalk estate comprises, among other denominations, the townland of Killinehy, in the county of Down, containing 363a. 3a. 36r. statute measure, let to thirteen tenants, who pay £452 10s. 8d., the Poor Law valuation being £448 15s. Eight of these tenants hold by leases for twenty-one years from November, 1865. They pay nearly 22s. per acre, statute measure, equal to about 33s. 8d. per Irish acre, which appears to be a fair rent. They are industrious and comfortable.

No. 6. Dean Stewart's estate consists of the townlands of Rathesdy and Ardpatrick, in the county of Louth, containing 360a. 3a. 16r., let to twenty-one tenants at the yearly rent of £494 2s. 6d., the Poor Law valuation being £368. There are only two leases. The lands appear fairly let at about £1 7s. 3d. per statute acre, but there appears to be considerable unevenness in the rents of the different tenants.

All the estates of the Society being mentioned in detail in Mr. Murphy's report, we do not think it necessary to refer specially to more than a few of them. Among the estates held upon long terms or in perpetuity, the Lackan estate, which has only recently (1879) come into the possession of the Society, is situated in the county Westmeath, and had been left to the Society many years ago by Sir R. Levinge. The Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests recovered it some years ago, but the Society were not informed of their rights; for several years no rents were collected, and a large arrear of rent thus accumulated, part of which is not now likely to be recovered. The lands are let on perpetuity leases at a gross annual rent of £92 3s.

Rogerson's estate consists of fifty-three tenements in the City and Liberties of Cork, all let on leases varying in terms from 91 to 990 years. Some of the 91 years' leases were granted in 1861. The rule adopted by the Society in re-arranging the rents has been to employ a valuator, whose instructions were only to estimate the improved value due to circumstances external to the place under consideration, so that no improved rent should be charged on any outlay made by the former occupier. Mr. Murphy reports that these unusually liberal terms induce the tenants to keep up the premises during the whole term of their leases, and even to expend large sums shortly before their expiration. On one tenement, of which the lease will expire in 1912, a new range of houses is being built.

Mr. Murphy notices several discrepancies between the particulars of the smaller estates of the Society, as given in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, and those supplied to, or ascertained by him. In some cases there would appear to have been clerical errors in the former report, but, in one instance, a deficiency of 62½ acres was explained by the statement that the Society had been evicted from 62½ acres of land at Innishannon, in the county of Cork.

From 1857 to 1879 the arrears remitted, or otherwise lost to the Society, amounted only to £903 12s. 8d., of which a considerable proportion accrued on the property in Dublin and its neighbourhood, chiefly consisting of houses. A sum of £107 was lost by the insolvency of a former master of Farra School, who rented the adjoining lands; and £191 is part of the arrear on the Lackan estate already mentioned. From 1875 to 1879 the Society expended £1,272 18s. 8d. upon improvements, and of this sum £420 produces a direct return in increased rent.

In 1857 the total income of the Society from the estates was reported to amount to £7,825 10s. 5d.; and the outgoings to £1,768 19s. 1d.; showing a net income of £6,056 11s. 4d. At the date of Mr. Murphy's inspection the gross income appeared to be £9,334 2s. 3d.; the outgoings, taken from the agent's account for 1878, amounted to £1,963 4s. 6d.; showing the net income to be now £7,360 17s. 9d., or an increase of about £1,300 per annum.

Mr. Murphy reports that the agent has excellent maps of the principal portions of the estates, appears to devote great attention to the property, and has an intimate knowledge of all the affairs of the estate. The management of the estates of the Incorporated Society approaches more nearly to the regime of a well-ordered private estate than that of any of the others inspected by Mr. Murphy. The accounts are most clearly and accurately kept, and "might well form a model for those kept on the other estates."

- Rep., p. 89. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, recommended that the Society should be enabled to sell, with an inalienable title, their small estates in different parts of the country—the adjoining proprietors being first offered the option of purchasing—and that the money arising from such sales should be held in trust to be re-invested in the purchase of other land.
- E. id., 3901. The Secretary stated that the Board were anxious that powers should be conferred upon them by Parliament in accordance with this recommendation, and the agent was of opinion that the granting of such powers would be of material advantage.

The Charter of the Society directs the schoolmasters and schoolmistresses—

- E. id., 4198. "To teach the children of the Popish and other poor natives of Our said Kingdom the English tongue, and to teach them to read, especially the Holy Scriptures and other good and pious books, and to instruct them in the principles of the Protestant Religion established in Our said Kingdom, and to teach them to write, and to instruct them in arithmetic and such other parts of learning as to the said Society shall seem meet, and to bring them up in virtue and industry; and to cause them to be instructed in husbandry and housewifery, or in trades or manufactures, or in such like manual occupations."

The Society, in 1820, feeling a difficulty in carrying out the directions regarding religious education, took the opinion of the Attorney-General as to whether they could receive Roman Catholics into their day schools without instructing them in the principles of the Protestant religion, and he was of opinion that they could not.

8, Reg., p.

In the girls' schools housewifery is taught, but in the boys' schools the provisions with respect to instruction in husbandry, trades, &c., are altogether neglected. In these schools, however, the instruction in arithmetic has been extended so as to include an extensive course of mathematics. Mr. Mahaffy reports that "The mathematical teaching is, no doubt, the best in Ireland." Facilities are also given for learning classics, but this is purely voluntary, and the Board do not consider themselves at liberty to apply any of their funds to the purpose. Each of our Inspectors expresses regret at this circumstance. Mr. Mahaffy says that "if some allowance were made to the masters for classical teaching, these excellent schools would become far more efficient."

p. 564.*

Ibid.

Mr. Moore adds:—

"The course of instruction is thorough English and advanced mathematical, in fact the boys in the senior class at Ferra and Primrose Grange are taught a course of mathematics, which is little short of that for scholarship in Trinity College, and the proficiency shown by them in that course was surprising, and superior to that of any other schools in Ireland, whether Intermediate or Primary. The boys . . . in many cases gain entrance to Trinity College as seniors, thus winning by their ability a free education from their childhood until they leave the University. Now, while the pupils are so well grounded in English and mathematics, so many of them make their way to the University, it seems a pity that elementary Classics should not be included in the programme of instruction. Many cases have come under my own observation where pupils from Santry, who entered in the first rank as mathematicians, had to spend the best part of their Freshman years in making up sufficient Latin and Greek to carry them through the ordinary examinations, thus giving their competitors, who could devote their entire time to mathematics, an enormous advantage. Latin and Greek grammar and at least two classical authors might, without materially interfering with the English or science courses, be taught in the three years which are spent in the schools."

The schools in connexion with the Incorporated Society are subdivided into boarding and day schools, but the latter, which are thirteen in number, receive but a very small proportion of the Society's income, amounting in the year 1878-9 to £353 13s. 10d. only. The former, which are eight in number, are substantially the objects of the Society's support, and in 1878-9 cost £7,604 10s. Each of these schools is annually visited by a committee or deputation of members of the Society. The chief duty devolving upon the members of this deputation is the examination of candidates for free places on the foundation. Since 1857 there have been no substantial alterations in the mode of conducting these examinations. Of the eight boarding institutions in connexion with the Incorporated Society, six are for the education of male and two of female pupils. In the former class are comprised the Ranelagh (Male), Dandalk, Ferra, Poochoke, Primrose Grange, and Santry schools. In the latter, the Colbride, and Ranelagh (Female) schools.

The Secretary stated that the aggregate number of foundation pupils supported by the Society amounted, at the date of our inquiry, to 212, of whom 136 were boys. The regulations in force as to the admission of foundation pupils to the schools of the Society will be found in Appendix G. Each boy elected is permitted to remain for three years in the Institution to which he is elected, unless removed for misconduct; during that period he is clothed, maintained, and carefully educated, solely at the cost of the Society. A proportion of the scholars who have completed their term of three years in the other Institutions of the Society are annually elected to the Santry Institution for an additional period, if after examination and inquiry as to character they appear deserving of that distinction. The Santry Institution thus serves as the head school of the Society, receiving such only of the foundation pupils as have availed themselves fully of the educational advantages afforded them during their three years' course in the provincial schools, and the course of instruction there is of a much higher order than that afforded at the other schools.

The Ranelagh and Colbride Female Institutions are managed on a similar system. Annual examinations are held for the admission of foundation pupils, who are permitted to remain for a term of four years, and a limited number of the most deserving girls are admitted for an additional period to the "Teachers' Training Class," with the view of enabling them to qualify themselves for the position of teachers.

Incorporated Society's Schools.
 Evid., 4925. In appointing the masters and mistresses the Board have generally selected for the position persons trained in the Society's schools who are familiar with the systems of the Society, and of whose character and abilities the Society have had the opportunity of judging. The Secretary stated that pensions were granted by the Board to teachers who retired after a lengthened period of service, and of the sum of £298 12s. 8d., expended in 1878-9 on "annuitants," £262 15s. 8d. consisted of such pensions.

Evid., 4311. The day schools receiving aid from the Incorporated Society resemble parochial schools: some were old parish schools in the neighbourhood of which the Society possessed property, and to the support of which they as landlords were expected to subscribe. The appointment of teachers was left very much in the hands of the parochial clergy, subject to the veto of the Society, who either paid the entire salary or subscribed a large amount towards payment of it. There was no regular visitation as in the case of the boarding schools, but the Secretary stated that he himself occasionally visited some of the larger day schools for the purpose of inspecting them, and that on such occasions he was usually accompanied by some member of the Board.

Evid., 4512. In the day schools the devotional exercises were left very much in the hands of the masters, who might act upon the objection of any pupil to attend prayers, but all were required, according to the Charter, to receive instruction in the Holy Scriptures. Three Roman Catholic day scholars attended at Athlone, and at Ray School, in the county of Donegal, there were at one time (March, 1878) forty-three, and at the date of the masters' return (September, 1879) there were twenty-four Roman Catholic pupils on the roll. With these exceptions all the pupils taught in the Society's schools were Protestants.

Rep., p. 95. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, stated that at a late period of their inquiries the Incorporated Society had founded a new day school in Aungier-street, Dublin, with the view of affording "to the middle classes of Dublin an opportunity of procuring for their children, on reasonable terms, a superior English and mercantile education, combined with instruction in modern languages." Soon after the opening in the same neighbourhood of the Erasmus Smith's High school (Harcourt-street), the attendance of pupils at the Society's school declined, and the Society closed the school and disposed of the school premises in 1878.

It was stated in a return furnished to us by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests that it appeared from entries in the books of the Incorporated Society that in 1749 a sum of £1,100, Irish, was given to the Society by the Rev. Joseph Henderson to found one of their schools on the Hertford estate, in the county of Antrim. The return stated that this gift was claimed for the special benefit of the Hertford estate, and, in particular, of the parishes of Lisburn, Glenavy, and Ballinderry. The Society was unable to obtain a site, but for many years gave some advantages in the selection of foundation pupils to boys from the three parishes, but the rectors did not think these advantages sufficient. It was further stated that all parties having requested the opinion of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, that Board, in 1878, replied that a free scholarship should be annually given to candidates from the three parishes of sufficient merit, and that an arrangement on the basis of this suggestion was likely soon to be carried out.

App. A, p. 243. Mr. Mahaffy reports that the Incorporated Society's Boarding Schools were managed on so regular a system that the education in any one of them was a fair index to the rest. He visited the Pooocks Institution, Kilkenny; the Dundalk Institute; the Ranelagh Institute, Athlone; and Primrose Grange, Sligo, which he describes as "the most beautifully and healthfully situated school in Ireland." The system of these schools hardly brought them within the scope of his inquiry, as the only compulsory subjects appeared to be Scripture and mathematics; in the latter there could be no doubt, judging from the results, that the teaching was thoroughly efficient. With the exception of the highest classes at the Belfast Academical Institution, he found no boys so advanced in their studies.

Ibid. The best boys were sent up to the head school at Santry, where Mr. Mahaffy had an opportunity of testing their knowledge. The atmosphere of all the schools was essentially an atmosphere of work. No idling was tolerated, nor had the masters any trouble in enforcing either discipline or attention in their pupils. The master of the Ranelagh Institute had lately engaged both a classical master and a native Frenchman, in the expectation of being paid by an increase of boarders. The library arrangements were very deficient. There was a want of cleanliness, and at Santry there was urgent need of plastering and cleansing, and a want of bath-rooms, and the management of the house was defective.

There was a great deficiency in classical teaching through all the schools, a deficiency not arising from neglect, but from the original conception having failed to satisfy the clever and ambitious youths trained under the old system. The schools only professed to teach Mathematics, English, and Scripture, whereas of late years all the most brilliant of the pupils had sought bachelorships and other honors in the University of Dublin, and thus required the "humanities" to a larger degree. The Mathematical teaching was, no doubt, the best in Ireland, but the most careful teaching in English, without Classics, failed to produce good English scholars.

Incorporated Society's School.
App. A, p. 244.

Mr. Mahaffy was of opinion that the Board should supply for cricket-grounds, gymnastics, &c., the funds which in richer schools might be supplied from the profits, or by subscriptions among the boys. An allowance of £10 per annum to each school under this head would be well spent, and would conduce greatly to a cheerful and happy life among the boys, which seemed not well attained by the present system.

Red

An exhibition of £30 per annum for two years in Trinity College, Dublin, is open under certain conditions to pupils from the schools of the Society.

Mr. Moore reports — "The day schools are very little better than ordinary parochial schools, though the teachers seemed of a somewhat higher class. . . . The want of inspection is here more apparent than in the boarding schools. There is no definite programme of instruction."

App. B, p. 245.

Santry Institution for Boys, Co. Dublin.

At the date of our inquiry there were fifty-five pupils on the roll, forty-seven boarders, and eight day boys. The number of foundation scholars was twenty-three. The fee for non-foundation boarders was £30 per annum, but classics, modern languages and drawing were charged for as extra subjects. The terms for day boys were six guineas per annum for the ordinary English course. All the pupils were members of the Church of Ireland.

Return.

A large number of the pupils educated at Santry enter the Civil Service. Many become assistant masters at the provincial institutions of the Society and elsewhere. Within a recent period two studentships in Trinity College, Dublin, one in science, the other in classics, were obtained by pupils from this School, and numerous lesser distinctions were gained by other pupils.

Evid., 3873-6, 4508.

Mr. Mahaffy reports that the classical answering was not good; the boys, though not young, had either begun the languages lately, or had made little progress. In Geography and Modern History the answering of some of the boys was very good, and they showed clearly that many of them had been selected by a careful competition.

App. A, p. 245.

Pococke Institution for Boys, Kilkenny.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, stated that this school was "endowed in 1765 under the will of Dr. Pococke, Bishop of Ossory, who, subject to certain charges, left all his estates, real and personal, to the Incorporated Society, 'for founding a school for Papist boys, to be bred to linen-weaving, and instructed in the principles of the Protestant religion;' with a gift over to St. Patrick's Hospital for Lunatics in case any other than the Protestant religion should at any time be established."

Rep., p. 94.

There is now no industrial training, and a high class English and mathematical education is given.

Evid., 4639.

From the master's return it appeared that there were sixty-five pupils on the roll, all boarders, and all Protestants. Twenty-six were foundation free scholars.

Return.

The charge for paying boarders was £21 per annum.

Mr. Moore found fifty-three boarders at the school; the answering was very creditable, and the school kept in perfect repair. In his general report he remarks that the non-foundation boys were backward as compared with the foundation scholars.

In 1809 the management of this school, which theretofore had been carried on under the direction of the trustees of the will of the Right Honourable William Connolly, who founded and endowed the institution, was transferred to the Incorporated Society.

There are sixty-two places on the foundation. To thirty of these the representatives of the founder have a right to nominate pupils; thirty-two are at the disposal of the Society.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, suggested that "the standard of instruction in this school ought to be raised. It might then be advantageously used as a training school for schoolmistresses." The Secretary stated to us that this suggestion had been carried out, and that the institution "had supplied some valuable schoolmistresses, who were highly prized in the country, and had gained great successes."

Mr. Moore found fifty-nine pupils present, all members of the Church of Ireland. He reports that this was in every respect a well conducted establishment, the answering very good, and the writing excellent.

None of the other schools of the Incorporated Society appear to call for any more special notice than that contained in the following table, which gives a summary of the

It is to be observed that the schools at Primrose Grange, Sligo, and Farm, Westmeath, were formerly agricultural schools, but as such proved unsuccessful, as, with scarcely an exception, all the agricultural schools of which we received any account appear to have done. From the reports of Mr. Murphy and Mr. Moore, the condition of the Farm school would appear to be unsatisfactory, especially having regard to the large expenditure (£1046 18s. 6d.), made upon that Institution during the year 1878-9.

| — | In the return made to us by the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, it is stated that the schools at Trim are at present "in abeyance." The particulars of the endowment are stated in our Tables infra App. F., p. 487. |
| — | The Parish Priest at Trim by letter called our attention to the fact that these schools had been closed for some years, and mentioned that the majority of the population of the district were Roman Catholics, and interested in any provision which may exist for education. |
| — | The Incorporated Society contribute £20 per annum towards the salary of the master contingent on the success of his pupils at an examination in the Holy Scriptures, but do not interfere in any way with the management of the school. Mr. Moore reports that the school buildings are suitable, and in good repair, and that the answering of the junior classes was satisfactory. Appendix C, p. 275. |
| — | The Incorporated Society contribute £40 per annum towards the master's salary. They also supply books, maps, &c. The master is appointed by the Rector of the parish. |
| 17 | The Society pay £10 per annum to the mistress who, in addition, receives about £50 from private subscriptions. The schoolhouse and premises are the property of the Society, and are kept in repair at the cost of their Birrhill Estate. |
| 6 | The master stated that the school is managed by the Very Reverend The Dean of Cusack, who appoints the teacher, and superintends the school. The master's salary, £40, is paid by the Society. Mr. Moore reports that the 9 boys present at his inspection answered well in English. Appendix C, p. 279. |
| 7 | The free pupils are selected by The Dean of Cusack. Mr. Moore reports favourably of the state of instruction. He suggests that this school should be amalgamated with the foregoing. Appendix C, p. 280. |
| 15 | The master, who is appointed by the Rector of the parish, receives a salary of £50 per annum, of which £30 is subscribed by the Incorporated Society, and £20 by the Rector. Mr. Moore reports that the 23 boys present at his inspection "answered fairly in the usual English subjects, with the exception of arithmetic." Appendix C, p. 280. |
| 17 | This was one of the old Charter schools. The master, who is appointed by the Incorporated Society, receives a salary of £40 per annum. Mr. Moore reports that there are two large schoolrooms, each suitable for about 80 pupils, one of which is unoccupied, while the master has only one room to live in. The children present during his inspection "answered passably in the usual programme." Appendix C, p. 282. |
| 20 | The figures in the columns represent the numbers on the roll in September, 1879, when the average attendance was considerably below its normal condition—a change of masters having occurred a short time previously, and the school having been closed for a time. The Incorporated Society pay the master £30 per annum; he enjoys in addition a free residence, garden and grounds, containing about 6 acres, and a fuel allowance of £10 per annum. The Society allow £40 per annum for an assistant-teacher, who is appointed by the master, subject to the approval of the Society. Of the free pupils, 4 were Roman Catholics, 6 members of the Church of Ireland, and 8 Presbyterians. Mr. Moore reports that the school buildings have been culpably neglected by the Society, and were allowed to go to ruin until the appointment of the present teacher; the state of maintenance was unsatisfactory. Appendix C, p. 282. |
| — | These schools appear on the list furnished by direction of the Incorporated Society. The Secretary stated, however, that the grants are at present in abeyance. In the returns made to us by the teachers, it is stated that the schools have received no aid from the Society since 1874. The schools were in connexion with the National Board at the date of our inquiry. |

IV.—SCHOOLS CONNECTED WITH THE CHURCH OF IRELAND.

SCHOOLS CONNECTED WITH CHURCH SOCIETIES.

At the date of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, a large number of schools appeared to be connected with the United Church of England and Ireland through the following societies:—

The Association Incorporated for Discountenancing Vice and Promoting the Knowledge and Practice of the Christian Religion.

The Church Education Society for Ireland.

The Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor in Ireland (Kildare-place).

The Irish Society for Promoting the Scriptural Education and Religious Instruction of the Irish Speaking Population.

The Islands and Coast Society for Promoting the Spiritual Education of the People on the Islands and Coasts of Ireland.

The Society for Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics, and

The Sunday School Society.

We addressed inquiries to each of these societies, and found that the amount of educational aid given by them, and the number of schools with which they were connected, had so much diminished, and the relations of the schools to the societies had so far altered, that such schools could no longer be regarded as a separate class. We have therefore given a separate report as to each of these societies, and have divided the schools connected with the Church of Ireland into:—

- I. Parochial Schools; and
- II. Miscellaneous Church Schools.

The Association for Discountenancing Vice.

Rep. p 105.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this Association was founded in 1792, and incorporated by Act of Parliament in 1800; out of assistance obtained from private individuals, and annual grants from Parliament, which were discontinued in 1837, it had contributed a considerable sum towards the building of school-houses. In 1835 there were 226 schools in connexion with the Association, and a grant of land in perpetuity was secured, in every case, for the schools to the building of which the Association had contributed. Most of these schools were at the date of the Royal Commissioners' Report still in existence, and carried on under deeds of endowment by which the conveyances of the lands occupied by the schools were made to the Ministers and Church Wardens, and the appointment of the school masters and regulation of the schools were vested in the Ministers, of the parishes in which the schools were situated. After the withdrawal of the annual grants, the Association gave up all connexion with the schools, but retained many of the deeds and the books and papers relating to the endowments.

The Royal Commissioners recommended that all such documents should be deposited with a proposed "Registrar of School Endowments," and that power should be given by statute to the Association to transfer the property to trustees, or to a proposed "Board of Commissioners of Endowed Schools."

Vic., c 42.

No effect has since been given by legislation to these recommendations, and under the "Irish Church Act, 1869," the status of the Ministers and Church Wardens has been so affected as to leave the title to property conveyed to them in a most unsatisfactory position.

The Association had not, at the date of our inquiry, any connexion with the management of schools, or any endowment. Its funds were applied to the circulation of religious books, and the encouragement of parochial catechetical instruction, chiefly by giving premiums in books to the best answerers at catechetical examinations.

A number of schools founded by this Association, and whose sites are still held under the grants obtained by it, are included in the Tables annexed to this report.

We received no reply from the Secretary to the circular which we forwarded to him.

*The Church Education Society for Ireland.*Rep. p.

This Society was established in 1839, its objects, as stated in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, being:—

"To assist existing schools, and to establish new schools for the purpose of affording, to the children of the Church, instruction in the Holy Scriptures and in the formularies of the Church, under the direction of the Bishops and parochial clergy, and under teachers who are members of the United Church of England and Ireland. . . . The main object of the Society is the raising of annual funds for the maintenance of schools, and not for their permanent endowment."

Church of Ireland
Schools.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, further reported that, as the "Church Education Society" was a voluntary society not necessarily connected with permanent endowments, they did not examine its officers. The Society had established, and at that time maintained, a model and training school at Kildare-place, Dublin, for the education of teachers; it supplied books and other school requisites for the use of the schools established by it, and it assisted in furnishing and repairing school-houses. It also granted annual assistance to a large number of schools the sites of which were secured for educational purposes. The schools in connexion with the Society were inspected by the Assistant Commissioners, who reported that the instruction was much inferior to that in the corresponding classes of National Schools, the inspection insufficient, the management defective, the school books "out of date, and behind the time," and the schools "as a class not good," and some of them "miserably inefficient"—at the same time it was stated that in proportion to the resources of the Society, the training schools produced very satisfactory results.

p. 251.

Of the endowed schools mentioned in the tables to the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, 160 were stated to be in connexion with the "Church Education Society." We found that some of these schools were no longer in existence, that the Society's annual grant had been withdrawn from others, and that many schools formerly in connexion with the Society had been placed under the control of the National Board.

Field,
Vol. III.,
p. 739-40.

Mr. Thomas O'Connor, the accountant of the Society, stated to us that according to the most recent returns 501 schools were, at the date of our inquiry, "connected with the 'Church Education Society,'" the children on the roll numbering 17,391, and the average attendance being 9,900, but that the Society had, from want of funds, been obliged to discontinue inspection, the supply of school requisites, the supervision of the teaching, and the control of the expenditure. The connexion of the training schools with the Society was severed in 1879, under the circumstances stated below. The functions of the Society had been reduced to the distribution, chiefly through Diocesan Boards, of funds collected by it, and it no longer took any part in the management of schools.

Field,
et seq.

The funds had, since the passing of the "Irish Church Act, 1869," continuously declined. In 1867 the income of the society was £4,919 17s. 4d., while in 1879 it was only £823 15s. 10d. Out of this sum, with a balance of £329 16s. 9d. in hand from the previous year, the Society granted the sum of £716 3s. 7d., and no more, to the schools "in connexion" with it, being an average of less than £1 10s. per annum for each school of the number stated by Mr. O'Connor; the connexion of the Society with the schools is therefore little more than nominal. We found the schools to be in most cases scarcely distinguishable from ordinary parochial schools, and those which possessed endowments will be found mentioned with the other schools of their several classes in our Report and Tables.

1894A.

Mr. Moore visited several of the schools returned as connected with the "Church Education Society," and which were selected by us for his inspection. He reports:—"The 'Church Education Society's' Schools are far inferior to the National, or Erasmus Smith's Schools. They are but little use to the country in their present condition, and they should be immediately placed under the control of an efficient board. In them may be seen all descriptions of abuses, inefficient teachers, useless inspections, with misleading reports, a badly-graduated standard of instruction, and inadequate salaries to teachers. . . . While the reports of former Commissioners have been carefully considered and acted upon with the greatest advantage, by the Erasmus Smith's Board, they have been totally ignored by the 'Church Education Society,' so far as I could judge, and their schools are now little better than they were in 1837."

p. 265.

In 1878 the society severed its connexion with the Kildare-place Training School, which was established for the training of teachers for the Society's schools, and occupied valuable buildings in Kildare-place, held at a rent of £30 per annum under a tenancy from the "Kildare-place Society."

Evid.,
1893B.

The Training School was, in 1862, endowed with a sum of £1,140, Government New Three per Cent. Stock, the produce of subscriptions which were invested for its maintenance, under a deed dated January, 1862, upon trust—

Evid.,
1893B.

"That the principal should not be encroached upon or diminished so long as there should exist in Dublin a training department in connexion with the Society, and upon further trust, in case at any time the training department and model schools of the Society in Dublin should be discontinued and permanently and definitely closed, then and in such case to transfer, pay, and assign all such stock, money, securities and other property towards the general purposes or objects of the Society, as set forth in the printed fundamental laws of the Society, in such manner as the managing committee for the time being should from time to time by resolution direct."

14965-72.

The training school had in 1873 incurred debts for current expenditure amounting to £500, which the committee were advised that they could not pay out of the capital so long as the school continued to exist. In June, 1878, shortly before the commencement of the usual summer vacation, under the advice of counsel, a resolution was passed that the institution should be permanently and definitely closed. A sum of about £700 of the Government Stock was immediately afterwards sold out, and the debts and other liabilities, including a quarter's salary given in lieu of notice of dismissal to the teachers, were paid out of the proceeds. At the end of the current term the school was closed. At the same time the school buildings were surrendered by the "Church Education Society" to the "Kildare-place Society," and the fixtures and furniture were sold to a committee formed with the object of re-opening the training school, by whom the school was re-opened at the end of the usual vacation, with the same officers, teachers, and pupils as before, and under a similar system. This committee has, however, no connexion with the "Church Education Society;" it has since separately collected voluntary subscriptions for the maintenance of the institution, which is now called the "Church of Ireland Training College," and the buildings have been let for the purpose by the "Kildare-place Society."

Evid.,
16966.

The capital of the "Church Education Society," at the date of our inquiry, consisted of £485 2s. 4d., Government New Three per Cent. Stock, being the balance remaining unsold of the endowment fund of the training school, and a sum of £114 14s. 6d., Government New Three per Cent. Stock, invested in the year 1878, when the connexion with the school was dissolved, and representing the proceeds of the sale of the school fixtures and furniture. The legacies left to the society from time to time have been treated as income and expended. From 1867 to 1878 inclusive these legacies amounted to £4,178 4s. 10d.

126-7.

The "Kildare-place Society," as this Society is commonly called, was founded in 1811, and at one period of its existence was in receipt of an annual Parliamentary grant of considerable amount. The circumstances under which this grant was withdrawn are stated in the report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8.

In reply to our application for information, we received a letter from the Registrar, Mr. Charles H. Keene, in which he stated that since the withdrawal of Government aid the resources of the society had been greatly crippled, and that there were not at present, nor had there been since 1857, any schools under its management or control, or connected with it; "the Society, however," he stated, "continued to afford such assistance, in grants of books and money, as their limited means permitted to schools and other institutions established for the benefit of the poor."

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-5, reported that property of considerable value (consisting chiefly of school sites and school houses), was vested in the Kildare-place Society, and they recommended that provision should be made for placing these endowments, together with all leases, books, papers, &c., relating thereto, "under the care of bodies or persons more directly connected with existing arrangements for education, and who would in consequence be more likely to exercise the activity and vigilance which are necessary for the security of such small endowments, distributed over different parts of the country." This recommendation has not been carried out. Large and valuable buildings situate in Kildare-street and Kildare-place, Dublin, at the date of our inquiry, belonged to the Kildare-place Society. Parts of these premises were occupied by the offices of the "Church Education Society," and by the training college mentioned above. The rest of the buildings appeared to be in the occupation of various tenants.

Rep p. 136.

On 6th August, 1880, we wrote to the Secretary of the Kildare-place Society requesting that he would be good enough to furnish a copy of the last report of the Society, and also to inform us in writing how the premises owned by the Society in Kildare-place were now occupied and used, the rental and tenure of such parts as were let, and the mode in which the funds realized from them and the other income of the Society were disbursed. We stated that this information was asked in consequence of its having appeared in evidence (as to the "Church of Ireland Training College") that some parts of the Kildare-street premises were still used for educational purposes.

On 19th August, 1880, a further letter was written repeating the request, and to these applications the following reply was received:—

"Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor of Ireland,

4, Kildare-place, Dublin, 29th August, 1880.

SIR,—Your letters of the 6th and 19th inst have only just reached my hands. I shall immediately write to the honorary Secretary of the Society, who is at present absent from town, for his instructions in the matter.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed),

CHARLES H. KEENE, M.A., Registrar.

J. C. Meredith, Esq., LL.D., Secretary, Endowed Schools Commission, Four Courts, Dublin.

We afterwards received the following letter:—

"Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor of Ireland,

4, Kildare-place, Dublin, 16th September, 1880.

SIR,—In reply to your letter of the 6th of August, I am directed to inform you that there are no schools connected with this Society, but that the premises comprised in the agreement, of which a copy is enclosed, were for many years let to the Church Education Society, and are now held under the enclosed agreement by the Board of Religious Education of the General Synod, but that this Society has had no control over the working or management of that body. This Society, therefore, does not appear to fall within the scope of the Commission. It receives no subscriptions, and its income is chiefly derived from profit on the sale of books, and is dispensed in gratuitous gifts of books.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES H. KEENE, M.A., Registrar."

The following advertisement, published by the Society in 1880, states its object and working :—

"ISLAND AND COAST SOCIETY FOR IRELAND."
Established 1834.

30, LOWER SACKVILLE-STREET
Office Secretary—REV. D. HOLDEN.

This Society aims at the spiritual, moral, and temporal benefit of the scattered population of the remote parts of the coast and the adjacent islands, by supporting schools which afford Scriptural and secular education, and by making grants for clerical aid. During the past year grants amounting altogether to £613 were given to 33 schools. Grants in aid of clerical duty amounted to £50. Temporal relief was given in urgent cases to the amount of £56, and parcels of clothing for children and adults were distributed in many parishes.

Contributions are urgently required.

Society for Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics.

Return.

The Society for Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics devoted a considerable portion of their annual income to the purposes of education. The Rev. Canon Cory, Missionary Secretary of the Society, informed us that the only permanent educational endowments vested in the Society were the buildings appertaining to the Clifden Mission Schools, with their site of two acres.

Mr. Moore found these schools to consist of a male school at which 16 boys were present, and a female and infant school at which 22 girls and 20 infants were present. He reports :—

"The answering of the boys was disgraceful, nor could I make any distinction between the subjects, all being about equally bad. The fault, I think, does not lie so much with the teacher, who seemed a suitable person, as with the managers, who employ as inspectors gentlemen who overlook the faults of a school, giving at the same time a glowing account of all that seems to them worthy of praise. . . . The answering of the girls in the usual subjects was passably good, with the exception of the senior class in arithmetic. The buildings are nicely situated and in excellent order."

The Sunday School Society.

In reply to our circular the secretary of this Society wrote :—

"I beg to inform you that there are no schools of any kind under the management or control of this Society. There are 2,249 Sunday schools connected with this Society, but the connexion is merely the fact of having obtained aid in grants of books, and the sale of books at reduced prices to the managers of such schools. We know nothing of the endowments of the schools. This Society has no control over the Sunday schools connected with it, and does not interfere with the management, but gives aid, as before mentioned, where, upon statements made in the applications, assistance seemed necessary. Our funds consist entirely of voluntary contributions."

I. PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS OF THE CHURCH OF IRELAND.

The Parochial Church schools were so numerous that we could only select for examination the most important, or those whose circumstances called for special investigation.

Many of these schools were not under the control of, or in connexion with any Educational Board; they were, in general, aided by grants from parochial funds or subscriptions from the parishioners, and were managed by the incumbents, or by the incumbents and select vestries of the parishes.

*Rep., vol
III., pp.
792-3.*

More than 300 parochial schools were included in the Tables appended to the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8. The endowments mentioned varied in value and importance—a large proportion consisting only of free sites (usually glebe land assigned for the purpose), and of school-houses built by grants from the Lord Lieutenant's building fund, from the "Society for Discouraging Vice," from the "Kildare-place Society," or from private sources, while others comprised considerable quantities of land and large sums of stock, derived from private benevolence.

Vict., c. 42.*

Since the passing of the "Irish Church Act, 1869," a marked change has taken place in the condition of the Parochial schools; a large number of them have been placed under the control of the National Board, the resources of others have diminished, and many have been discontinued. The tendency, probably induced in great measure by the necessity of the case, to accept aid from the public funds, and to place the Church schools under the control of the National Board has been increasing.

Edw., 5111.

Several letters were received by us from clergymen and others informing us that parochial schools had recently been discontinued through want of funds, and in other cases letters addressed by us to the teachers of such schools, appearing as existing schools in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, were returned from the Post Office marked "no school" "gone away" "school-house in ruins" and so forth. Those schools which appeared in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8 as "Schools in operation," but which have been discontinued since 1857, or from which we failed to obtain any returns, are included in Table No. 3, App. P, infra pp. 493-510.

The increasing tendency to place Parochial schools in connexion with the National Board was evidenced by the returns furnished to us by the teachers, and by the testimony of several witnesses. The Archdeacon of Dublin stated that the Parochial schools of Saint Stephen, Dublin, were in 1878, with the consent of the Select Vestry of the parish, placed under the National Board, and that he had mooted the question of dealing in a similar manner with Saint Peter's Parochial Schools. He also mentioned other schools which had been placed in connexion with the Board, and expressed his opinion that schools refusing to avail themselves of the advantages afforded by the connexion were only "throwing away money" without any sufficient reason. The Rev. D. H. Powell, Rector of St. Mary's, Shandon, Cork, stated, "The School of St. Mary's, Shandon, is under the National Board, and I would not amalgamate my school with a school under any other Board, the education given is so much superior." The Rev. Richard Galbraith, Rector of Carrickmacross, contrasted the condition of his school when under the Church Education Society with its present position under the National Board, and considered that great advantages had accrued, to the school itself as well as to the pupils, from the change of management. Each of these witnesses admitted that the schools were practically as denominational under the new, as under the old management.

The Committee of the Board of Erasmus Smith's Schools, in their Report of January, 1874 (supra, p. 84), also referred to the tendency we have mentioned, and the Governors have themselves taken measures, as already mentioned, to transfer their English schools to the National Board, wherever the management can be retained in the hands of members of the Church of Ireland.

The "Irish Church Act, 1869," sec. 25, sub-sec. 5, obliged the "Church Temporalities Commissioners" to transfer, with the churches which were vested in the Representative Church Body, all schoolhouses belonging to or used in connexion with such churches, together with any land occupied with such schoolhouses; and school endowments coming under this description are now vested in the Representative Church Body.

The invested moneys, charges upon land, and other property, constituting a large part of the endowments of Church Schools, invested in the names of or held by "Ministers and Churchwardens for the time being," have, since the passing of the Church Act, been dealt with by those appointed under the new constitution of the Church of Ireland in the same manner as before the Act, and, so far as we could ascertain, no question has been raised as to the title to property so invested. The Churchwardens no longer represent the whole body of the parishioners, but only those members of the Church who are "Registered Vestrymen." No legislative provision appears any longer to exist for vesting such property in any parochial body corporate, legally so recognised.

Dublin: Schools of the Parishes of St. Andrew, St. Nicholas Within and St. Michael, and of St. Werburgh and St. John.

The schools of the United Parish of St. Andrew, St. Nicholas Within and St. Michael have been amalgamated with the schools of the United Parish of St. Werburgh and St. John. Under the arrangement existing at the date of our inquiry the schools (which were not in connexion with any society) were managed by a Board of Governors consisting of the Clergy, Churchwardens, and three representatives (generally chosen from the Select Vestry) of each of the united parishes.

The endowment enjoyed by the schools was considerable, consisting of houses, invested funds and annuities, and was supplemented by subscriptions averaging about £100 per annum.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, stated that in 1845 St. Michael's parochial schools were possessed of two sums of £281 10s. and £300 Government Stock, which were sold out in that year and produced £597 19s. 5d. cash. "This sum was expended in the year 1845 in building the school-house in churchyard, which cost £638 9s. 3d., the balance being advanced by the treasurer." This schoolhouse, at the date of our inquiry, had been taken down, and its site was occupied by the Synod Hall, Christ Church place. It was stated to us that the materials had been sold, but we could not ascertain that any claim to the proceeds of the sale had been made on behalf of the schools.

The united Schools, at the date of our inquiry, were held in the old Deanery House of Christ Church, in Fishamble-street, which for some years before 1870 had been used as a parish schoolhouse. It is now vested in the Representative Church Body. St. Werburgh's schoolhouse is now used as a teacher's residence. It did not appear that the parochial schoolhouses of St. Audon and St. Nicholas were any longer used for school purposes.

The schools were inspected by the Diocesan Inspector, Rev. Hugh Hamilton.

Mr. Moore reports that the state of instruction in the boys' school was most unsatisfactory. The reading and writing disgraceful; the grammar and geography very little better. The present master had had charge of the school for a very short time, and it was in a miserable state when he came into office. The boys were all members of the Irish Church, and belonged to the lowest class.

In the girls' school the answering of the thirty-seven pupils present was most creditable in all the usual English subjects, and presented a pleasing contrast to that of the boys. The writing was particularly neat and legible, and the uniformity in the answering showed good and careful teaching. The girls were all members of the Irish Church, and were clean and tidy, though children of the poorest parents. There was an infant school in connexion, and eighty-five children were present on the day of Mr. Moore's visit.

Dublin: St. Bride's Parochial Schools.

Rep. p. 175. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the state of the endowment connected with these schools was unsatisfactory. The funds of the parochial day schools, the boarding school, and the parochial almshouse had been "mixed up," and there were no account books to explain the expenditure.

Rep. p. 177. In 1857 the situation and condition of the buildings of the boarding school was very bad, and it was reported to be "in contemplation to abolish the boarding school altogether, and devote the entire funds to the support of the daily schools, an operation which, however abstractedly beneficial, could scarcely be carried into effect without the approval of the Court of Chancery."

Evid., 8971. The Rev. William G. Carroll, M.A., Incumbent of the parish, and patron of the schools, informed us that in 1861 the boarding school was closed, but the master's house was kept up as a residence for the master of the daily school. The managers of the charity considered themselves justified in applying the funds previously appropriated to the boarding-school to the purposes of the daily schools, as those funds were chiefly derived from bequests to "The Charity School," or to "The Parish School."

Evid., 8074. The Rev. Mr. Carroll became Incumbent of the parish and undertook the management of the charity in 1859, and at that time the endowment consisted of £3,000, Grand Canal Stock; house property producing £54 per annum; a charge of £12 8s. per annum against the parochial funds, representing the interest on £250 (the purchase money of a house); borrowed from the school bequests by the Churchwardens; and £1,572 4s. 4d. Government Stock.

Evid., 8097-16. The dividends on the Government Stock were divided in varying proportions between the schools and other parish charities, and the confusion of accounts remarked by the Royal Commissioners was not corrected. The Stock had, at the date of our inquiry, been reduced by sales to the sum of £550 5s. 10d., but Mr. Carroll did not know how much of that sum belonged to the schools.

Evid., 8018, 7994, 8042-3. The proceeds of these sales were applied to the improvement of the school-rooms, to the repayment of sums due to the treasurer, and borrowed by him from the "Poor Fund," to the extent of £50 to the improvement of the church, and also to the cost of painting and repairing the school-rooms, the alms-house, and the school master's dwelling.

Evid., 8061. The charity had also sustained a considerable loss from the reduction of the interest received upon the sum of £3,000 Grand Canal Stock, which produced in 1878 only £67 10s.

Evid., 8071-3, 8260. The schools were placed under the National Board; but a few years ago the salary of the master of the boys' day school was withdrawn, and the School was closed. There were retained only an infants' school, attended at the date of our inquiry by 125 children, and a mixed school, attended by fifteen boys and thirty-four girls.

Evid., 7975-83. The funds of the charity appeared to be vested in "The Minister and Churchwardens." Mr. Carroll was under the impression that when he ceased to be Incumbent, the property would be vested in his successor, but no provision had been made for the appointment of any successor, and it was intended to divide the parish. Mr. Carroll had held the office of Incumbent at the time of the passing of the "Irish Church Act, 1869," and the case of this endowment is but one of the very many which came under our notice, in which the title to property has been seriously affected by that measure, and no legislative provision has been made for its future tenure or for the management of the charity to which it belongs.

Dublin: St. Catherine's Parochial Schools.Church of Ireland Schools.

The property belonging to these schools, consisting of land and endowments, with other estates belonging to the parish, was, by "The Saint Catherine's Parish (Dublin) Estates Act, 1854," vested in the Board of Trustees constituted by that Act. By the same statute it was provided that the Parochial schools should, both as to the expenditure of the funds thereof, and the system of education therein, be managed as theretofore under the directions of the then existing Board of Governors and their successors duly appointed.

The Board of Governors have taken no part in the management of the schools' estate; nor have they any representative, as such, on the Board of Trustees. The annual expenditure upon the Parochial schools has considerably exceeded the income of the school estate. In 1878 sums amounting to £378 12s. were expended upon the schools, while the net income of the endowment was £201 11s. 4d., to which was added a sum of £39 18s., the proceeds of a charity sermon in aid of the schools, and the balance, £137 4s. 8d., was supplied out of the income of the parish estate, which amounted to about £600 per annum.

The Act, sec. 15, enabled the Trustees to pay out of the proceeds of the parish estate a sum, not exceeding £100 per annum, in augmentation of the salaries of the curates, in consideration of their visiting and superintending the Parochial schools and discharging certain other duties; provided that the Trustees should be satisfied of the due discharge of the duties.

The Trustees, until a recent period, made annual grants by way of salary to one of the curates, but in 1879 the Board, being dissatisfied with the arrangements made by the Incumbent of the parish with reference to these grants, and also being, as their solicitor stated, "under the impression that the duties (of visiting and superintending the schools) were not discharged," resolved to make no further grants.

The schools, comprising a boys' school, a girls' school, and an infant school, were at the date of our inquiry all held in the same building, which was described as "unsuitable," and in a bad state of repair.

The children attending the boys' and infant schools were all free day pupils. Eleven children were received into the girls' school as free boarders. These were selected by the Board of Governors, were all residents of the parish of St. Catherine, and members of the Church of Ireland; in the selection a preference was given to orphan children. As a general rule the competition for places was not keen. The average cost of each boarder was said to be "little more than £15 a year." The schools were inspected by the Rev. Hugh Hamilton, Diocesan Inspector. The course of instruction was primary.

Dublin: The Parochial Schools of St. Luke and St. Nicholas Without.

The parishes of St. Nicholas Without and St. Luke were, in 1861, united under the incumbency of the Rev. Hickman R. Halahan, who from 1846 had been the incumbent of the parish of St. Nicholas Without.

The schools were, at the date of our inquiry, managed by a separate treasurer for each parish, and a joint board of co-opted Governors. There were three schools, a boys' school, a girls' school, and an infant school, all held in the same building, No. 20 New-street. There were on the roll at the date of our inquiry 338 children, and the daily attendance was 212. The schools were stated to be flourishing, the school-rooms and playgrounds good, the buildings in perfect repair, and the schools generally in a very efficient state. The Governors only met as occasion required, about three or four times in the year, but Mr. Halahan visited the schools almost every day, and their condition may be attributed largely to his "indefatigable energy."

The funds of the two parishes were kept distinct. The property of the schools of St. Nicholas Without consisted of five houses, producing £36 a year; £1,895 5s. 10d. Government Stock, invested in the name of "The Minister and Churchwardens," £844 9s. 4d. in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery; and a rentcharge and annuity amounting to £34 13s. 5d. None of the capital had been sold, and some of the stock had been purchased by the Minister and Churchwardens since 1857.

The present treasurer for St. Luke's parish was appointed in 1861. At that time the funds of St. Luke's Schools comprised three annuities amounting to £23 10s. 8d. per annum, and the dividends upon a legacy of £500, paid by the "Board of Charitable Donations and Bequests," the sum of £1,159 2s. 4d. Government Stock, standing in the name of the "Minister and Churchwardens," and £900 Grand Canal Debentures, producing about £24 per annum. Since 1857 the Governors have purchased a profitrent of £20 per annum for a term of about fifty years, issuing out of premises adjoining the schoolhouse, and have also invested further sums, amounting to £475, in the name of the "Minister and Churchwardens" of the parish.

*Church of Ireland
Schools.Dublin: St. Mary's Parochial Schools.*

In 1857 these schools comprised two boarding and three day schools. At the date of our inquiry the day schools only were in operation. The endowment had decreased, large sums of capital having been from time to time sold out by the "Board of Management," and applied in payment of current expenses. In addition to the moneys so disposed of, the Board, at the suggestion of a former incumbent, expended a sum of £1,661, Stock, in the purchase of the present schoolhouse, and subsequently bought the rent of £15 per annum to which it was subject. The present Incumbent stated that it was very expensive to keep up this schoolhouse, and that he looked upon the purchase as having been a ruinous proceeding. The two houses in which the schools were held in 1857 have been let at rents producing a profit of £55 per annum. The annual income from trust funds enjoyed by the schools, was, in 1879, £74 10s. per annum. In 1857 the income realized from trust funds was over £185.

Prior to the "Irish Church Act (1869)," the Board of Management consisted of the "Minister and Churchwardens" and certain other Governors. It was then thought desirable that the management of all charitable matters should be placed in the hands of the Select Vestry; and, "without deposing the Governors, the Select Vestry were, by resolution, invited to be united with the Governors who were then in existence, and it was arranged that as the existing Governors should die, or cease to reside in the parish, the vacancies among the Governors should not be filled up, and that ultimately the Select Vestry should, with the Incumbent, have the entire management."

The present Incumbent stated that "no provision exists at present" for keeping up the incumbency in St. Mary's parish, but that "it is not at all likely" that no provision will be made for his successor; if such a contingency should occur, a legal question would arise with regard to funds invested in the name of the "Minister and Churchwardens of St. Mary's." He farther stated that he thought it would be an advantage if means existed of "vesting the funds of the institution in a permanent and legal mode."

The average expenditure annually incurred by the Board of Management, in respect of these schools, was between £190 and £200 a year. The number of children in attendance was about 160. The Incumbent was strongly in favour of placing the schools under the National Board. He stated that, if this were done, "they would be more successful; we would be able to have additional instruction, and have superior schools."

Dublin: St. Peter's Parochial Schools.

At the date of our inquiry there were three schools under the same management, viz.:—a boarding and day school for boys, a boarding and day school for girls, and an infant school, which was founded in 1870 under the name of "Mrs. Wray's School," under an order of the Court of Chancery dated 8th March, 1869.

The endowment for the boys' and girls' schools consisted of three bequests, producing £30 8s. 1d. per annum; £200 India Four per Cent. Stock and a sum of Bank Stock, producing together £16 14s. 10d., and house property in Bishop-street, Camden-street, and Kevin-street, producing about £150 per annum. The property was held in the name of the "Minister and Churchwardens," and the rents were collected gratuitously by one of the parishioners. In 1873 the managers of the charity were obliged to purchase the perpetuity of the school premises for a sum of £543. On that occasion a sum of £370 1s. was collected for the special purpose of purchasing the perpetuity, but of this the sum of £240 17s. 11d. was applied to discharge current expenses, and stock previously invested for the schools was sold in order to provide the sum of £428 2s., required to discharge the remainder of the purchase money of the school premises.

The endowment of Mrs. Wray's school consisted, at the date of our inquiry, of £4,500 India Four per Cent. Stock, invested in the names of four trustees appointed under the Chancery order, which provided that they should procure, by lease or otherwise, a suitable portion of the premises then in the possession of the Minister and Churchwardens of St. Peter's parish, known as St. Peter's school, and should establish therein a school for the instruction of poor children.

These schools are not in connexion with any board, but are annually inspected by Mr. Rudkin, the inspector of Erasmus Smith's English schools. The attendance at Mrs. Wray's school in December, 1878, was 126 out of 160 on the roll (153 members of the Irish Church, and 7 Roman Catholics). In the boys' school there were 9 boarders on the roll and 48 day scholars, and in the girls' school 4 boarders and 45 day scholars.

The Venerable Archdeacon Lee, the Incumbent of the parish, informed us that all the schools were strictly denominational, though the foundation of Mrs. Wray's school was not exclusive. There were a National school, a Christian Brothers' school, and a very large Convent infant school in the neighbourhood of the Parochial schools, and he had never heard of any instance where there was an opportunity for parents to choose between a denominational and an undenominational school, in which they preferred the undenominational. In 1878 St. Stephen's schools, also under his management, and chiefly attended by Protestants, had been placed under the National Board, and were practically as denominational after the change as before. He knew no instance of a bona fide mixed education, that is, of education given in any school where the Catholics and Protestants were at all equal in numbers.

Dublin: St. Thomas' Parochial Schools.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the income derived from the endowment of these schools amounted to £102 18s., derived from a mortgage, Government stock, and house property. The Rev. James White, incumbent of the parish, informed us that at the date of our inquiry, there was a sum of about £102 belonging to the girls' boarding school; the day schools had no endowment; a legacy had been received for them from Lady Harberton, but expended in accordance with the provisions of her will.

Rep., Vol. III., p. 82.
Evid., 8138-32.

At the date of our inquiry the girls' boarding school was kept up for twelve pupils and eleven were in residence. Between 200 and 300 pupils attended the day schools, which were managed by three Trustees appointed under Lady Harberton's will, and were only nominally parochial schools. In 1879 it was resolved to take steps to have vested in the name of the Rector, Curate, and Churchwardens for the time being, all the property of the boarding school for its benefit. The house property was stated to be held in fee-simple.

Castleknock Parochial School, County of Dublin.

This school was founded in 1720, by William Crosthwaite, who by his will bequeathed an annual rentcharge of £9 4s. 7d., "for the education of poor children in the parishes of Castleknock, Mulhuddart, and Clonsilla," (now united). In 1831, William Tisdall devised the lands of Pelletstown (after the determination of certain life estates), to the "Protestant Rector of the parish of Castleknock and his successors, in trust for the Protestant parish school of said parish," and he also gave the residue of his "estate and effects to the said Rector of Castleknock and his successors" upon the like trust.

Com. 1834, 8;
Hops, Vol. III., p. 14.

In 1837 the Board of Charitable Donations and Bequests instituted a suit for the administration of the assets of Mr. Tisdall, and in 1855 the fee of the lands of Pelletstown was conveyed to the Rev. Ralph Sadleir, D.D., Rector of Castleknock, and his successors. These lands, at the date of our inquiry, comprised sixty-eight acres, and produced an annual income of about £120. In 1837 the Commissioners handed over to Dr. Sadleir a sum of £191 11s. 8d. cash, and a sum of £423 9s. 3d., New Three per cent. Stock, representing, as Dr. Sadleir stated, "money which had been recovered by the Commissioners to recoup the charity for interest on a mortgage."

Evid., 5750.

A further sum of £80 3s. 5d., New Three per cent. Stock, recovered by the Board of Charitable Donations and Bequests, was also transferred to Dr. Sadleir.

Evid., 5834.

These several sums of cash and Stock had, before our inquiry, been expended by Dr. Sadleir, and the endowment then consisted only of the lands of Pelletstown, and the rentcharge payable under the will of Mr. Crosthwaite.

The endowment was vested solely in the Rector, who was unaided and uncontrolled in his management of it, and discharged the several functions of trustee, manager, agent, and treasurer. He considered himself at liberty to apply the several sums of Stock and cash above mentioned in payment of the principal and interest of money advanced by himself to meet the current expenditure of the school. The stock had remained invested for about eight years, and in 1863 Dr. Sadleir sold out £400 stock, which produced £368 3s. 9d. He said this stock was so sold out "in order to repay him money advanced for the school, which he thought he ought to be paid." In 1865 he sold out the remainder.

In 1876 he purchased for the school from the "Church Temporalities Commissioners" a field belonging to the glebe, the price of which was £140; of this £35 was paid, the balance, £105, being allowed by the Commissioners to remain outstanding on a mortgage at £4 4s. interest, paid by a rent of £5 charged to the schoolmaster for the use of the field. Dr. Sadleir has, since 1853, annually charged against the funds of the school a sum of £80 for the carriage of pupils to and from the school, employing for the purpose two vans, the horses and drivers for which are hired out by himself to the charity at 3s. 8d. a day for each horse and man. An accumulation of these charges was included in the deficit which he paid out of the produce of the sales of stock.

information as to this endowment, and informed, as that there were in their office "several deeds and a considerable mass of papers" relating to it.

A portion of the school estate, comprising 62a. 0r. 20v., was held by Matthew Duffy, at a yearly rent of £184 12s. 4d. The lease was not forthcoming, but from the letters of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests already referred to, it would appear that the tenant is assignee of a lease for lives renewable for ever, dated 20th June, 1815.

Another portion of the lands, comprising 11a. 1s. 37r., was let by Dr. Sadleir to John Rathburne in 1853, as tenant from year to year, at a yearly rent of £30, the Government valuation being £25 15s. The previous tenant had paid a higher rent, and since 1853 no alteration in the rent had been made or contemplated.

At the expiration of Dr. Sadleir's incumbency legal difficulty may arise as to the vesting of the endowment, as the corporate character of the "Rector of Castleknock" was put an end to by the Irish Church Act, 1869.

The children attending the school at the date of our inquiry were, without exception, Protestants, and the great majority members of the Church of Ireland. Formerly "a very large number" of Roman Catholics attended. At that time, however, this was the only school in the parish. There is now, "within a few yards" of it, a National school under Roman Catholic management.

Mr. Moore reports that in arithmetic, grammar, and geography, the answering was indifferent, in spelling and Euclid decidedly bad. The fault was not with the teacher who was an intelligent and hardworking person, but with the manager (Dr. Sadleir.) There were 70 boys and girls present, and these the teacher, with one female assistant, was required to instruct in a course which included Latin, Euclid, algebra, shorthand, book-keeping, singing, and drawing. The school was inspected by the clergyman of an adjoining parish—the reports of that gentleman merely consisting of the usual and well-known compliments to teachers and pupils. The large sum of money spent annually in bringing strong healthy children to school in covered vans would be much better spent in increasing the staff, and providing such an education as would make it worth the children's while to walk. The boys' and girls' schools had been amalgamated.

Cork.—Moses Deane's Endowments.

Rep., p. 145.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, noticed under this head three schools, viz.:—1. St. Nicholas' Parochial Schools, Cove-street; 2. St. Mary's Shandon Parochial Schools, Newsom's-quay; and 3. St. Peter's Parochial School, Peter's-lane. The founder, Moses Deane, in 1796 left some leasehold property to trustees, who were directed to suffer the rents to accumulate until there was enough to give £1,200 for the support of a charity school in each of the three above-mentioned parishes, where twenty poor boys and as many girls might be educated and clothed. A similar direction was given as to the parish of Christ Church, but the Commissioners in their report stated that it did not appear that anything was allocated to that parish.

*Evid.,

The total endowment of these schools consisted in 1857 of a sum of £5,559 17s. 8d., Government Stock, representing the original bequest of Moses Deane with accumulations of interest. This endowment still exists, and produces about £166 per annum. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, stated that the school-house had been erected at a cost of £370, and was then held under a lease for forty years from 1832. The Rev. George Webster, M.A., Rector of the parish of St. Nicholas, informed us that on the expiration of that lease a new lease for forty years from 1862, at a rent of £20, was obtained, and a sum of £6,000 or £7,000 had been raised by subscriptions within the last few years, and expended in enlarging and improving the buildings.

15600-13.*

The schools have been placed under the National Board, and are four in number, viz.:—A boys' school, a girls' school, an infant boys' school, and an infant girls' school. School fees varying from 1d. a week to 2s. 6d. a quarter are charged.

15536-7.

The provision of Moses Deane's will as to free education and clothing is carried into effect by means of what are called "attendance scholarships." The twenty boys and twenty girls "who are called free" get 4s. 4d. a year each from the endowment, with which they pay the usual school fees, and their parents also get 1d. or 1½d. in money for each attendance, with which to buy clothes for the children.

The number on the rolls of the four schools at the date of the return made to us (1st March, 1879) was 215; at the date of our inquiry in Cork (20th October, 1879) it had increased to 306, all being members of the Church of Ireland.

The teaching staff comprised a master and two mistresses at salaries of £25 a year each, and one mistress at £12.

The schools were assisted by large voluntary contributions.

2. St. Peter's Parochial School, Peter's-lane, Cork.

The endowment of this school was returned by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, as being £56 a year from land, and £63 12s. 4d. from trust funds. The former, a devise under the will of Sir Thomas Deane dated 1st October, 1834, is paid to the trustees of the school by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. Of the latter, representing the income of Moses Deane's bequest, a sum of about £56 is paid annually by the Corporation of Cork, to whom £1,107 13s. 10d. was lent many years ago from that bequest, and the remainder is received from about £300, Government Stock, invested in the names of two trustees, the Rector and Treasurer. In addition to these sources of income, the school receives £47 a year from a bequest under the will of Mrs. Elizabeth Smith, proved 6th October, 1829, which endowment was in abeyance in 1857, and £10 12s. 4d. and £9 4s. 7d. per annum derived under the wills of Archdeacon Pomaroy and Mrs. Shearman, formerly attached to a school in Thomas-street which was afterwards removed to Peter's-lane, and is now connected, as an infant school, with the parochial schools.

The school consisted of three divisions, a boys' school, girls' school, and infant school. About five or six years previous to the date of our inquiry the school had been placed in connexion with the National Board. There were 118 pupils on the rolls at the date of our inquiry, viz.:—32 boys, 38 girls, and 48 infants, all of whom were free and members of the Church of Ireland.

Evid., 15354.

The salaries paid to teachers out of the endowment amounted to £85 per annum, the master's salary being £68 16s.

Evid., 15365.

Mr. Moore reports:—

"The answering in the programme was most indifferent, the children being unable to explain the simplest sentences in their reading books. The school-room, though situated in a bad locality, was in good order, and had ample accommodation for the 49 pupils present on the day of my visit. There is a well conducted infants' school in connexion with this school; 38 present."

App. C. p. 277.

3. St. Mary's, Shandon, Parochial School, Newcomen-quay, Cork.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, stated that this was the last school brought into operation of those on Moses Deane's foundation. They stated the endowment to consist of the schoolhouse, erected at a cost of £743 2s. 6d., and £2,101 2s., Government Stock, the annual interest on which was £63 0s. 8d. The Rev. D. H. Powell, Rector of the parish, stated that the endowment now consisted of £2,001, stock, producing £60 0s. 8d. yearly, and a sum of £45 given by the late Earl of Cork and lodged in 1879 with the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. The school-house is subject to a yearly rent of £90, the payment of which, with £40 the master's salary, practically exhausts the endowment. The school was in connexion with the National Board, and was a mixed school for boys and girls.

Rep., 166, Vol. III., p. 284, Evid., 15423-26.

The number of pupils on the roll at the date of our inquiry was 49, all members of the Church of Ireland.

Christ Church Parochial Schools, Cork.

These schools were among those originally intended to be benefited by the bequest of Moses Deane; but they have received no portion of his property. The endowments, in 1857 and at the date of our inquiry, consisted of an annual sum of £15 Irish, derived from lands under the will of Mrs. Shearman, and the school-house, erected at a cost of £1,800, raised from charitable funds and subscriptions. A sum of £50, of which £32 was invested in a savings bank in 1857, did not appear to be forthcoming at the date of our inquiry. The schools consisted of a boys' school, girls' school, and infant school, all in connexion with the National Board. It was stated to us that the parish had each year to make up about £80, by subscriptions, for the support of the schools.

The number of pupils on the roll at the date of our inquiry was 143—boys 57, girls and infants 86, all Protestants.

Cd. Antrim.—Carrickfergus Parochial School.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, stated the endowment of this school to consist of a rentcharge of forty guineas a year, granted by the will of Ezekiel D. Wilson dated 2nd November, 1819, for a schoolmaster to instruct forty poor boys and twenty poor girls of the parish of Carrickfergus, such schoolmaster to take the children to church on Sundays, and to be qualified to teach psalmody. The school-house was erected in 1849, on a free site granted by Lord Blayney. The governors of Erasmus Smith's schools contributed a sum of £200, and a further sum of £200 was raised by subscription, to defray the cost of the building.

Rep., Vol. III., p. 428.

In 1857 there were 163 pupils on the roll, viz.:—83 boys and 79 girls, all free.

The Very Rev. George Bull, D.D., Dean of Connor, Rector of Carrickfergus, informed us that he, as Rector, had had the management of the schools for twenty-four years. The house was an excellent one, and kept in repair by the Churchwardens, who received £8 per annum from the Church Education Society, which was expended in repairs and other outlay. The girls' school, though still held in the same building, had been disassociated from the boys' school, and received no part of the endowment. The number of pupils on the roll of the boys' school at the date of our inquiry was fifty, of whom thirty were stated to be members of the Church of Ireland and twenty Presbyterians. All were taught the Scriptures, Church Catechism, and singing, and received a thoroughly sound English education. The girls' school and an infant school were under the National Board. The Christian Knowledge Society, in return for an annual subscription of £5, gave books and other prizes to the value of £10. The schools were inspected by the Diocesan Inspector. The master received a salary of £40 a year (being the amount of the endowment, less "income tax and some other small expenses,") pupils' fees of 1d. per week each, amounting to about £6 a year, and results' fees, amounting to about £2 per annum.

II.—MISCELLANEOUS SCHOOLS CONNECTED WITH THE CHURCH OF IRELAND.

Bethesda Female Orphan School, Upper Dorset-street, Dublin.

Rep., Vol.
III., p. 69.
Evel.,
1856-66.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported the endowments of this institution to consist of portion of the site, a number of legacies, then represented by the capital sum of £1,743 10s. 4d. Government Stock and £238 19s. 5d. Bank of Ireland Stock, and a house in Cuffe-street held at the yearly rent of £7 18s. These endowments remained unchanged at the date of our inquiry, when the Stock produced an annual income of £80 19s. 6d., and the house a profit rent of £12 3s. 1d. In 1877 Miss Isabella Coddington bequeathed to the Institution a sum of £229 7s. 3d., Government Stock, which stands in the names of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, who pay over the dividends to the Trustees. Dormitories in a house adjoining the school were rented at £18 per annum.

Evel.,
1856.

The school is confined to boarders belonging to the Church of Ireland, and is in connexion with the Bethesda Protestant Episcopal Church; at the date of our inquiry it was supporting, clothing, and educating 29 girls, of whom 19 were free, 6 paid £12 a year, and 4 paid reduced rates varying from £3 to £4 a year. Almost all were children of a respectable class, and children were admissible if either of their parents was dead.

With the exception of the income arising from the endowments above mentioned and the fees of the paying pupils, the institution was entirely dependent for its support on voluntary contributions.

The funds of the institution were invested in the names of two trustees, Sir Arthur Guinness (now Lord Ardilnau), and James Robert Stewart, Esq., and the affairs of the Charity were managed by a committee of ladies under the presidency of the Chaplain of the institution.

Evel.,
1851.

The pupils were received between the ages of 7 and 13, and received such a course of instruction as to qualify them for the position of governesses. On leaving the institution they usually went to the Lincoln Training College in England.

1853-4.

The children were stated to be well fed and well clothed; for four months in each year they were sent to a house in the country kept for the purpose, and held at a rent of £13. The average cost of maintaining each pupil (including all expenses) was less than £24 per annum.

1863.

The teaching staff of the institution consisted of a matron, at a salary of £35 a year, and a resident governess at £30 a year, with an allowance to each, for diet, of 10s. a week.

1866.

Examinations were held twice in each year by the Diocesan Inspector, and premiums for proficiency good conduct and general tidiness were awarded according to the Inspector's report.

The income of the institution for the year ending 31st December, 1878, appeared from the balance sheet to be £764 12s., and the expenditure £681 1s. 9d.

Mr. Moore reports:—

"From the situation of this orphanage it is impossible that it should be open enough to secure the health of the inmates. . . . At the time of my visit 8 of the 29 girls were either in scurvy or just recovering from that disease. Every precaution was taken to prevent its spreading. Considering existing circumstances, the answering in English was fairly good, though the spelling and geography were decidedly below average. The house seemed to be kept in good order; most of the work is done by the girls."

Com. 1854-
8, Rep., Vol.
III., p. 60.

The endowments of this institution at the date of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, consisted of £9,961 11s. Government Stock, and £520 Bank of Ireland Stock; a re-charge from land of £92 6s. 2d. devised by General Barroughs in 1824, and an annuity of £25 a year bequeathed by Miss Every in 1831, in addition to which the institution was in receipt of an annual Parliamentary grant of £500 a year. The Commissioners further reported that the charity was entitled to a bequest of £2,000 left by the will of Mary Handy in 1848, subject to a life interest of her brother.

The Rev. John Digby Cooke, the chaplain, wrote to us that some difficulty was experienced in procuring payment of the bequest at the termination of the life interest, but that in 1866 the representatives of Mr. Handy paid over to the Trustees £1,724 14s. 5d., in satisfaction of the claim for the sum of £3,000 which had been bequeathed. This sum was applied by the Board of Trustees to meet expenses incurred in repairs of the building.

At the date of our inquiry the capital stock was stated to be diminished, portion having been sold out to meet current expenditure. The practice of applying capital for current expenses was commented on by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, but Mr. Cooke informed us that the only fund the board had no power to dispose of was "Barrett's Trust Fund," amounting to £1,000, and that the rest of the capital could be sold out whenever required.

The charity was under the management of a Board of Governors, consisting, at the date of our inquiry, of:—The Archbishop of Dublin, Mrs. Alexander, Gibson Black, Mrs. Black, The Hon. Mrs. Prooke, Rev. Dr. Carson, Mrs. Carson, Miss Darby, Very Rev. Dean Dickinson, Lady Harriett Fowler, Miss Henn, Ion Trant Hamilton, M.P., Edward H. Kimshan, Mrs. La Touche, Miss La Touche, William La Touche, Her Grace the Duchess of Leinster, Mrs. Lloyd, Lady Marsh, the Bishop of Meath, the Countess of Meath, Viscount Monck, Lady Mary Monck, Hon. Mrs. Trench, and the Dean of St. Patrick's.

This board met once a month, three being a quorum. The pupils were admitted from five years of age, and were not allowed to remain in the institution after seventeen. They were taught, boarded, and clothed at the expense of the institution. The petition and certificates for admission should show that each child is destitute and without relatives capable or willing to support her. All the children were Protestants—Roman Catholics not being admissible.

The girls received a primary education. Some were sent to be trained as teachers, others went into shops and places of business, and others were sent out as domestic servants. All the domestic duties of the establishment were performed by the girls, who took the different offices in turn.

The number of pupils in 1857 was 104; this number was afterwards reduced to sixty on account of a deficiency of funds, but had recently been increased again, the number on the roll at the date of our inquiry being seventy-three. The staff of the institution consisted of a chaplain who received £100 a year, a matron receiving £34, a schoolmistress receiving £28, and a workmistress receiving £16 a year. There was an examination once in each year to test the proficiency of the pupils.

The accounts of the institution were sent in each year to the Government, certified by five members of the board.

The governors farmed about eight acres of land which they held as yearly tenants at a rent of about £8 an acre, from the produce of which they supplied the institution with milk and vegetables. In addition to the yearly income derived from the endowments and the annual Parliamentary grant, the governors received subscriptions (which amounted in 1878 to £292 13s. 6d.), and the proceeds of charity sermons (which averaged annually from £70 to £100).

The school was inspected by Mr. Moore, who reports:—

"The institution was cleanly and orderly in every department, and the children looked cheerful and healthy. I examined three large classes in reading, spelling, arithmetic, grammar, and geography. The reading and spelling were creditable, and the writing legible, but the working in arithmetic—simple and compound rules and simple proportion—was decidedly bad, while the answering in grammar and geography showed very little knowledge of these subjects.

The entire work, including cooking, milking a number of cows, &c., of this extensive establishment is done by the orphans, and the way in which this work is divided, joined to the fact that the schoolmistress has no assistance in teaching 75 girls, fully accounts for the low state of instruction. The head girl in the kitchen has no lessons for the fortnight she is so engaged. The laundry girls (5 in number) have no lessons on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays; on Wednesdays and Fridays they have an hour and a half if the weather is wet, if not they are taken out to walk. There are numerous other duties which take away the girls from their school work, and I merely state these cases as examples.

Each girl should work six hours a day, three being devoted to industrial work, the remaining three to school work. By this means a thorough English education might be imparted, and at the same time all would be trained in household work. A trained and paid matron should also be appointed."

Ralph Macklin's Schools, Molesworth-street, Dublin.

Rep.
Vol. III., p.
58.

The Royal Commissioners 1854-8 reported that "Ralph Macklin's Endowment" consisted of securities producing an annual income of £190 3s. 11d., which were bequeathed by the founder, in 1821, for the purpose of establishing an institution to be denominated Ralph Macklin's Sunday and Thursday Poor School, under the direction of the Governors of the Magdalen Asylum, aided by the curates of the parishes of St. Ann, St. Werburgh, and St. Andrew, in the city of Dublin.

Evid.,
7498-550.

There were on the roll of the school, in 1857, 55 children, of whom 42 were Protestants of the United Church, and 11 Roman Catholics, and the state of instruction was reported to be "very satisfactory." The school was then held in Camden-street, in the parish of St. Peter.

Evid., 7504.

The Rev. H. H. Dickinson, Dean of the Chapel Royal and Vicar of St. Ann's parish, informed us that though not officially connected with these schools, he was acquainted with all the circumstances of their history, that they were at the date of our inquiry situated in St. Ann's parish, and that he superintended the religious instruction. He stated that the Governors met once a month, and that one of the clerical Governors visited the schools daily. There had always been a quorum of three at the meetings, and for special business he had known eight Governors to attend.

Evid.,
16483.

At the suggestion of Dean Dickinson, the following arrangement was arrived at in 1874, between the Governors of the school and "St. Ann's parish," with the approval of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests.

Evid., 7500.

The endowment having been originally placed under the control of the clergy of the three parishes of St. Ann, St. Werburgh, and St. Andrew, and, as it was thereby supposed, having been intended for the benefit of those parishes, the situation of the schools being outside the limits of those parishes and the supervision by the clergy being consequently difficult and irregular, the Governors leased from the Select Vestry of the parish of St. Ann, at a rent of £1 a year for twenty-one years, school premises which had been erected by the parish at a cost of over £2,000, and on receiving £150 a year from parochial contributions they undertook to provide a free education for the children of the parish, the Governors continuing to exercise full control over the school, and inscribing Ralph Macklin's name upon the door.

Evid., 7521.

There were three departments, for boys girls and infants, and the classes were attended by children from St. Ann's, St. Werburgh's, St. Andrew's, and other parishes. There was an average attendance of 153. The poor children were educated free, but others paid fees to the amount of 5s. quarterly for each child. The education given was rather better than that in most parochial schools, and there were classes preparing for the Civil Service. Although there was no limitation in the will expressly authorizing an exclusive denominational teaching, the schools had always been conducted as Church schools.

The master received £150 a year; the assistant master, £30 a year; the mistress of the girls' school, £75 a year; and the mistress of the infants' school, £42 a year. The salaries had all been greatly raised since 1868. There were also two assistants in the girls' and infants' schools, at £12 a year each, and a drawing master who received £5 a year.

The four "Catechist Governors" received £20 a year amongst them. With reference to this item of expenditure it is to be remarked that, when the schools were originally moved to Camden-street, the Governors were in the habit of paying £20 a year to a clergyman as catechist to the school. This payment they were obliged to discontinue from want of funds, but since the removal to Molesworth-street the payment has been renewed and divided among the four curates of the three parishes named in the founder's will.

About £30 a year was required for repairs.

Evid., 7524.

There were two Roman Catholic children and thirteen Dissenters attending the schools, and they were obliged by a by-law of the Governors to receive religious instruction. In this respect the rules of the school had been altered since 1858. The original bequest contained no provision that religious education should be compulsory; it directed that the school should be open on Sundays and Thursdays only, but the Court of Chancery, on the application of the Governors, sanctioned an enlargement of the scheme.

Evid., 7561.

It did not appear that the parishioners of St. Werburgh's St. Andrew's or St. Peter's parishes, were consulted prior to the removal of the schools from Camden-street to Molesworth-street, except that a letter on the subject was addressed by the Select Vestry of St. Ann's to the Select Vestry of St. Andrew's parish, to which a reply was sent declining, on the part of the latter, to have anything to do with the transfer.

Evid.,
7564-73.

Mr. John Alexander stated that he had resided near the schools when they were in Camden-street, had taken a great interest in them, and had opposed the removal on local and general grounds. He added that public meetings had been held, and remonstrances made, but that "the clergymen, who were the trustees, took the whole thing into their own hands, and paid no deference to the feelings of those who put themselves forward to oppose the removal." The legality of the removal was questioned on the grounds that the Rev. MacNevin Bradshaw, curate of St. Andrew's, had publicly refused to sanction it, that the school had been transferred from a poor district to a rich one, that a freehold site had been exchanged for a twenty-one years' leasehold, and that, at the time of the removal, the original schools, in Camden-street, had £150 to their credit in the bank, while St. Ann's parochial schools were in debt to the amount of £800. The exclusive religious instruction given in the schools, particularly in compelling Non-conformist children to learn the Church catechism, was also objected to.

It appeared from the evidence of Mr. Robert Sexton, treasurer of St. Ann's parish, that in 1857 the parish schools had standing to their credit, in Government stock, £1,263 12s. 10d., but that amount was sold out, and, with the proceeds and an additional sum of £1,000 collected in the parish, new school-houses were erected. In 1866 the schools with the adjoining premises were mortgaged for £2,000 to meet the cost of building, on the premises adjoining the schools, "The Molesworth Hall," which was not used for teaching purposes. The site of these buildings was purchased by the "parish of St. Ann" in the Landed Estates Court. At the date of our inquiry £1,700 of the mortgage debt was still due, but the treasurer informed us that the Molesworth Hall was valued at £2,500, being half the value of the entire premises which were comprised in the mortgage.

Mr. William Digges La Touche, one of the Governors, stated that the curates of the three parishes named in the founder's will were not properly Governors at all, but were allowed, according to the directions of the will, to assist in the management of the school. He had approved of the transfer of the school, on the ground that the charity gained a larger endowment and a more efficient school. The money produced by the sale of the Camden-street premises had been handed over to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, who had invested it, and paid the Governors the annual interest. He stated that the Governors had considered the proposed transfer on his motion, and that a majority of them had assented to the step; that the clergy had had nothing to say to it further than that Dean Dickinson was Chairman of the Select Vestry of St. Ann's, which had offered £150 per annum and a free house.

The Governors had always considered Ralph Macklin's school as exclusively a Church of Ireland school, and Mr. La Touche was of opinion that the rule of the National Board with respect to religious instruction would not work well in it. He desired to see the school maintained "as a purely denominational school, but with its doors open to all." He did not suppose that the Vestry of St. Ann's would "hold the Governors to the twenty-one years' lease, but would allow them to hold on," as they had found the school so useful in their parish.

Mr. Moore reports that the building was most suitable, and in good repair. He could not say that the answering of the boys was good. The senior class, though supposed to be learning Euclid and algebra, failed in the easiest questions. The general answering in English history was very poor, and the working in arithmetic inaccurate. In writing and drawing there was more than average proficiency shown. He thought that, with an assistant teacher a drawing master and a French master, the 42 boys present should have answered much better. The answering of the girls was highly satisfactory; they read extremely well, and answered intelligently in spelling, geography, English history, and arithmetic. There were 29 present—all members of the Irish Church.

Green Coat Hospital, St. Ann's, Shandon, Cork.

"The Trustees for the Green Coat Hospital" were incorporated by Act of Parliament in 1717. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, stated the net income of this endowment to be £132 19s. 6d., chiefly derived from an estate in the county of Dublin. A sum of £200, formerly belonging to the charity, was expended on repairs by permission of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and a house in Cork the property of the charity, formerly producing £18 a year, had been allowed to go to ruin, and at the date of our inquiry, produced only a ground rent of about £2. The property was vested in certain persons named in the Act and their heirs, and the Bishop of Cork, the Mayor of Cork, and the Minister and Churchwardens of the parish, all for the time being.

The present income was stated by the Rev. Francis de M. St. George, the rector of the parish, to be "about £153 a year from all sources."

The purposes of the trust were the establishment of two schools in which 100 children of both sexes should be placed and educated in the principles of the Protestant religion, the maintenance of a house for a master and mistress, with a convenient library, and an almshouse for eighteen decayed housekeepers of the parish.

The Secretary stated that there was always a certain number of Governors who, for ordinary purposes, were available. He was in the habit of summoning about a dozen for each monthly board meeting.

The schools comprised a boys', girls', and infants' school, of which the last had been only lately re-opened; "it was closed for some time, as some of the Governors, wishing to economise, thought that the infant school was not within the scope of the charity."

The terms of the trust require that the master shall be appointed with the approbation of the rector, and shall attend the services of the parish church.

The Rev. Dacre H. Powell, Rector of St. Mary's, Shandon, who is also one of the Trustees of the Green Coat Hospital, thought that the latter endowment should be united with the St. Mary's Parochial School endowment, and one "large and efficient school" established for the two parishes. This would necessitate the placing of the Green Coat Hospital in connexion with the National Board, as on no other terms would Mr. Powell consent to the union. To test the opinion of the trustees upon the subject of the proposed amalgamation Mr. Powell, at a meeting of the Board held in April, 1879, moved that the Board "should, as a preliminary measure, ask the Commissioners of Charitable Bequests whether they would allow the Green Coat Hospital to be put under the National Board." The resolution was defeated by a majority of three—eight members voting for and eleven against it.

The schoolhouse is described by the Rector as "a very good building," but not at present in a satisfactory condition, the trustees not having sufficient funds to put it in "respectable order."

Mr. Moore reports that the answering of the fifteen boys present was fairly good in the usual English subjects, though there appeared to be a considerable want of life in the school. The pupils were all free; were children of the poorest parents, and all members of the Church of Ireland. The answering in the girls' school was much better than that of the boys. In arithmetic, grammar, dictation, and history the head-class made most creditable answering, while their writing was neat and legible. The second class answered well also, and read clearly and intelligently. There were sixteen girls present, eleven members of the Irish Church, three Presbyterians and two Methodists. In the infant school there was an attendance of sixteen.

Limerick.—Blue School, Bow-lane (now Cathedral Grammar School).

*Rep., Vol
III., p. 359.*

The origin of this school appears, by a letter quoted in the report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, to have been a bequest by the Rev. John Moore, in the year 1717, of a house in Smithfield, Dublin, called "The White Hart," for the use of a charity school in Limerick. On the 20th October, 1724, a grant was made by Mrs. Alice Craven to the Bishop, Dean, Mayor, and Recorder of Limerick, of five houses in the city of Limerick "for the schooling, clothing, and binding to trades twenty poor Protestant children for ever. Such children to be nominated by said Alice during her lifetime, and after her death by her relations, in manner and under conditions in deed specified." On the 17th June, 1729, Mrs. Alice Craven bequeathed to the same trustees the sum of £40 yearly for ever, chargeable on two of these five houses "in trust, and for the charity school of Limerick, as by one deed bearing date the 20th October, 1724, made between me the said Alice Craven, of the one part, and the said trustees of the other part, may appear." In the year 1787 the house bequeathed by Mr. Moore is said to have produced a rent of £17 a year, which was paid to the use of the Blue School, but the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, could find no trace of any such house. They reported the income of the school to consist of £27 derived from Mrs. Craven's property, £11 1s. 6d., interest on £200 borrowed by the Dean and Chapter of Limerick, and £21 8s. 10d., dividends on Government Stock purchased by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests out of money recovered by them for this charity.

10318.*

After the passing of the "Irish Church Act, 1869," the £200 borrowed by the Dean and Chapter was paid to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and was invested by them in the purchase of additional stock. At the date of our inquiry the total income was only £42 8s. 2d. a year, consisting of £10 rent of one of the houses in Limerick, £27 8s. 2d. dividends paid by the Commissioners, and £5 rent paid by the dean and chapter for a portion of the schoolhouse.

*Evid.,
10345-51.*

The agent, at the date of our inquiry, Mr. George A. Dartnell, J.P., stated that he became agent in 1872, and that he knew nothing of the charity funds before that year, except that the previous agent returned an arrear of £143 8s. 10d., due by the Commissioners and since paid, and a further arrear of £161 16s. 3½d., due for rent of another of the houses in Limerick, which had not been looked after for a number of years and was abandoned in 1873 as irrecoverable.

The Mayor did not appear to have acted as a trustee since the passing of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vic., cap. 108), and the office of Recorder of Limerick had been abolished, but the Rector of St. John's parish was "considered to be joint trustee with the Bishop and Dean." The trustees had, however, no fixed time for meeting, and since the appointment of the Very Rev. Thomas Bunbury as Dean, in 1873, he had undertaken the entire management of the fund.

The school had ceased to exist for some years before Dean Bunbury's appointment, and the endowment was applied by him to the foundation of a grammar school, held in the Blue School house, but not subject to any of the conditions prescribed by Mrs. Craven.

The master received £35 a year from the charity, £90 a year from the Dean and Chapter for the education of choir boys, or £4 a year for each boy if the number exceeded five, and £6 6s. a year for each of the other pupils. There were no free pupils. The pupils attending the school, at the date of our inquiry, all belonged to "a good class in life," none were poor children; two of them were Roman Catholics. The Dean "wanted to qualify" the school to obtain prizes under the Intermediate Education Act.

Mr. Moore reports:—

"This is, in every respect, an intermediate school, and for such no locality could be more unsuitable than Bow-lane. The school-room itself is in good order. The twelve boys present were arranged in two classes. The answering of the junior class was by no means satisfactory; in a sentence for dictation they missed the easiest words, while their answering in English, Latin grammar, and history was very poor. The senior class made very good answering in English, Latin grammar, and arithmetic. The boys are prepared for the Irish Universities, the College of Surgeons, &c., and have in times past been fairly successful. There are on roll eleven members of the Irish Church, two Roman Catholics, and one Protestant Dissenter."

Waterford Diocesan School.

The Waterford Diocesan School was established upon the determination of the diocesan schoolmaster's salary, by his commutation in 1872. The Right Rev. Dr. Day, Bishop of the United Dioceses of Cashel, Emly, Waterford, and Lismore, stated that he found that by the closing of the diocesan school the Protestant inhabitants of Waterford would be left utterly without any means of education suited for gentlemen's sons, and he induced the dioceses of Waterford and Lismore, upon the retirement of Mr. Valentine, the diocesan schoolmaster (vide supra p. 53), to give up for the purposes of education the sum of £496, the portion of Mr. Valentine's commutation money which was retained by the Representative Church Body for the benefit of those dioceses. The Bishop collected and invested subscriptions amounting to a further sum of about £500, and thus established an endowment of nearly £1,000, producing £40 per annum. A master was appointed, and a hired house taken for a day-school, which was then opened and thenceforward carried on under the name of the "Waterford Diocesan School."

The Bishop hoped soon to have a schoolroom built in connexion with the Protestant Hall, Waterford, and with this endowment and the pupils' fees to maintain a good day-school, giving a classical education. He also proposed to connect with this school the "Downes Exhibition" of £15 per annum, which by deed dated 27th September, 1787, was charged by Dr. Downes upon certain premises in Waterford, and was tenable in the University of Dublin by a student educated in "Waterford Endowed School." The premises which, in 1787, were occupied by the school then bearing that title, were those of the "Corporation Free Grammar School," in Stephen-street, Waterford, which, with the endowment, had before our enquiry been diverted from their original use, and were occupied by a school in connexion with the Catholic University (vide supra p. 63). The amount of the exhibition continued to be paid by the agent of the Downes property, upon which it was charged.

Co. Antrim.—Trinity Church Infant School; Belfast.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, stated the endowment of this school to consist of a sum of £3,600, bequeathed by the will of Sarah Wilson. This statement is incorrect, as appears by the following extract from the will of Miss Wilson, dated 8th April, 1846, and proved 18th October, 1846:—

"I Sarah Wilson, . . . do appoint my brother William, . . . my sole executor, . . . and do hereby bequeath the following sums as bequests out of my disposable properties (which are in all about £3,600) . . . which I would wish my brother William to dispose of in part as follows:—First to finish the Infant school-house, outside and within, which is built beside Trinity Church, Belfast, and to assist in other matters connected with said infant school as my brother may consider most likely to benefit the surrounding poor, paying part of the teacher's salary (if he, my brother, approve, &c.) . . . I have stated these various sums to be given as specified herein but with this limit (if my dear brother approves), as I wish him to possess a discretionary power that there may be no disagreement about my affairs when I am gone."

Evid., 16148-83.
 In exercise of the discretionary power vested in him by the will, the executor, Mr. William Wilson, annually contributed a sum of £20 towards the teacher's salary, until "about ten years ago," when the Trinity Church Schools, which had previously been under the Church Education Society, were placed under the National Board. Since then, with the exception of £30 subscribed by him for enlarging the schoolhouse, Mr. Wilson had not contributed any sum to the school.

Returns.
 The school buildings (which constituted the only endowment) were erected in 1846, at the expense of Mr. Wilson, who by deed vested them in five trustees, of whom he himself was one. It appeared by the manager's return that a ground rent was paid for the site.

Roman Catholic Schools.

V ROMAN CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

There are no endowments of public origin (excluding aid received from the National Board, results fees paid by the Intermediate Education Board, contributions from local rates and the statutory endowment of St. Patrick's College, Maynooth) which appeared, at the date of our inquiry, to be enjoyed exclusively or to any large extent by Roman Catholics, and all the Roman Catholic Schools to which we have to refer are of private foundation. The list of such schools is imperfect, and we were unable to obtain any detailed information as to many large and important Roman Catholic institutions which appeared to be in possession of extensive and valuable buildings and other property, and to be similar in character to schools of other denominations included in our report and in that of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8. In many instances, those to whom our inquiries were addressed either did not reply to our applications for information, or informed us that the institutions under their charge were not endowed and did not come within the scope of our Commission.

We obtained some general information as to the provision made throughout Ireland, chiefly in recent years, and almost entirely by the exertions of the Bishops, Clergy, and Teaching Orders, and from the voluntary contributions of the members of the Roman Catholic Church, for the education of the children of that denomination.

For higher education, Diocesan colleges and schools, and colleges under the management of Teaching Orders, have been established. These are, in compliance with the requirements of the Intermediate Education Act, open to pupils of all denominations, but are almost exclusively attended by Roman Catholics. Of the Diocesan Colleges, St. Patrick's College, Armagh; St. Malachy's College, Belfast; St. Patrick's College, Carlow; St. Patrick's College, Cavan; Killaloe Diocesan College, Ennis; St. Colman's College, Fermoy; St. Columb's College, Londonderry; St. Macarten's Seminary, Monaghan; St. Finian's College, Navan; the College of the Immaculate Conception, Sligo, and St. Jarlath's College, Tuam, upon which detailed reports will be found infra pp. 119 to 124, may be regarded as examples. In addition to these, St. Brendan's Seminary, Killarney; the Diocesan College, Limerick; St. Mary's Seminary, Mullingar; the Rapnos Diocesan Seminary, Letterkenny; St. Mel's College, Longford; St. Colman's College, Newry; St. Kyran's College, Kilkenny; St. Peter's College, Wexford; St. Patrick's College, Thurles; St. John's College, Waterford, and others were mentioned in returns, in the evidence, or in the "Catholic Register," and appeared to be established and maintained upon a similar system, as to some extent were also All Hallows' Missionary College, and Holy Cross College, near Dublin. The colleges and schools under the management of Teaching Orders, which give a higher education, are numerous, and were stated to include several boarding schools with even larger numbers of pupils than Armagh Royal School. Of these, St. Stanislaus' College, Tullamore, under the Jesuit Order, and the French College of the Holy Ghost, Blackrock, Dublin, which were visited by Mr. Mahaffy, and are noticed in detail in his report (App. A, pp. 251, 2), are instances. The Jesuit Order also maintains Clongowes Wood College, Kildare; the School of the Sacred Heart, Limerick; St. Xavier's College, Dublin, and other schools of a superior class. A higher education is also given by the Vincentian Fathers, the Carmelite Fathers, and the Marist Fathers, and at the Catholic High School, Waterford (established in the buildings of the former "Corporation Free Grammar School"); at St. Francis' Academy, Clonmel; at the French College of the Holy Ghost, Rockwell, Tipperary, and at many other similar establishments. We were not informed, except in a few instances, of the mode in which the buildings and lands of these institutions were held, but in most cases they had been acquired and the schools were maintained at the cost of the religious orders, aided by pupils' fees, and in some cases by voluntary subscriptions.

For primary education the Roman Catholics have largely and generally availed themselves of the National system of education, wherever their schools could be placed under the National Board retaining the management and the teaching in their own hands; the schools being practically denominational. The Model Schools, established by the National Board in the chief towns, were, however, disapproved of by the Bishops and Clergy, as were also the mixed or "undenominational" Endowed Schools, where the managers and teachers were not Roman Catholic, and we found that such schools, although open to Roman Catholics if willing to attend, were attended almost exclusively by Protestants. The Rev. Daniel Fitzgerald, P.P., who was appointed by the Roman Catholic Bishop of Limerick to give us information as to Mount St. Vincent's Orphanage, informed us that the Bishop's approval would not be given to any school, or branch of a school, which had not a Roman Catholic teacher, and that the Roman Catholic clergy did not wish Roman Catholic children to receive instruction from Protestant teachers, and preferred that the children of their denomination should give up the benefits of a school rather than that they should receive even secular teaching from Protestants.

The primary education attainable in the schools which have been placed under the National Board has been very largely supplemented, both in quantity and quality, by the establishment of Roman Catholic schools under Teaching Orders. Of these schools those maintained by the Order of Christian Brothers are the most important, and have been the most successful. Their importance and excellence may be measured by the condition of the "Christian Schools, Cork," described infra p. 126, and the information respecting the schools of the Order generally which we obtained will be found infra, p. 125. The schools of the Presentation Order are similar to those of the Christian Brothers.

The education of Roman Catholic girls is largely conducted in convent schools, some of which, for example the Loretto Schools, give a superior education, and prepare pupils for the Intermediate Examinations. The primary female schools are generally in connexion with the National Board. Of Convent schools, Mr. Moore visited and examined two not in connexion with the National Board, and three in connexion with it. In all these he states that the zeal and industry of the nuns were beyond all praise. The school-rooms were in excellent order, and beautifully clean, the girls were neat and tidy, and, where boarders were kept, the household arrangements were nearly perfect.

Though the list of Roman Catholic primary schools includes many such institutions as the "Christian Schools, Richmond-street, Dublin," to the building of which the "Catholic Association" contributed £1,500; the "Christian School, Renskillen," the site of which was purchased for £1,100 and is vested in the Roman Catholic Bishop and Parish Priest as trustees; the "Mount Zion Christian Schools, Waterford," erected at a cost of £4,000, raised by subscription; and the Convent National school, Kinsale, built and enlarged by funds collected for the purpose, these institutions were not regarded by their managers as endowed schools. Even in the case of the Roman Catholic Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, Dublin, we were unable to obtain any information, though the Annual Report of the Institution for the year ending May 31, 1880, showed that it had an income of £11,450 19s. 10d., of which £945 5s. 3d. was received from "Rents," £776 16s. 3d. from "Interest and Dividends," £614 9s. 8d. from special trust funds, and £1,046 8s. 2d. from "Bequests."

In dealing with the Roman Catholic schools we have therefore accepted a narrower definition of "Endowed Schools" than that which regulated the admission of the schools of other denominations either to our Report or to that of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8.

ROMAN CATHOLIC DIOCESAN COLLEGES.

Armagh: St. Patrick's College.

This institution was opened in 1838, having been built by the Most Rev. Dr. Crolly, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Armagh. By his will (proved 5th May, 1849), reserving a site for a convent, he devised the buildings, offices, and five acres of land, held in fee-farm at a rent of £31 10s., upon trust for the maintenance of the college, to trustees of whom the Roman Catholic Primate was, at the date of our inquiry, the chief. The college was intended chiefly to prepare candidates for entrance at Maynooth, but pupils intended for lay professions were also received. All the clergy and many of the laity of the Roman Catholic diocese of Armagh were stated to have been educated at the institution. The staff of teachers consisted of three clerical professors and two lay teachers. The course included Greek, Latin, French, Mathematics, English, and book-keeping.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that there were 36 boarders and 12 day pupils in the college, the number on the roll being 52. The annual charges were then £20 for boarders and £1 for day pupils. At the date of our inquiry there were 51 boarders and 6 day pupils on the roll. The total fees for boarders, "including necessary extras," were £31 5s., and the day pupils' fees were £4 a year.

The Rev. Patrick Boyle, Head Master of the college, stated that it would be impossible to teach a larger number of pupils with the existing staff. The want of increased accommodation was so much felt that the present Roman Catholic Primate had got plans drawn to enlarge the house, at an estimated cost of £7,000, but "he could not well ask his people for means to build in years like these." There was not accommodation for a day school. Nearly £400 had been spent, within a period of two years, on permanent improvements, of which £300 came out of the profits of the school, and £90 was given by the Primate, who also, in 1878, gave £91 5s.—£30 as a donation for premiums, and £61 5s., being a sum which he received in charity to apply to any purpose he liked—as a donation to the seminary. Forty-seven acres of land, held at a rent of about £144, were used as a farm in connexion with the college.

All the pupils were Roman Catholics. The Managers had never had any applications from persons of other denominations, which Mr. Boyle accounted for by saying that the endowments in Armagh were so good that the boys of other denominations were not induced to come to his college.

Belfast: St. Malachy's College.

Rep. Vol
III, p. 424.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this college was founded by Archbishop Golly, as a diocesan school for candidates for the priesthood, and that the endowment comprised the buildings and site, containing 11a. 1r. 13r., held under a renewable lease. The number of students then attending was 58, of whom 24 were pupils in the seminary, and 34 were pupils in an English department connected with it.

Evil.

The Rev. Henry Henry, President of the College, which is now known as "St. Malachy's College," informed us that the buildings had been erected by subscription, and that the institution was not now exclusively for the training of candidates for the priesthood, but was an intermediate school, not strictly denominational, some gentlemen of different denominations having been educated there. The whole endowment was invested in the buildings and land. Some money had been bequeathed to the Bishop for the education of candidates for the priesthood, but he could give the benefit of the bequests to students studying elsewhere, though in 1878 it was applied to assist seventeen ecclesiastical students at St. Malachy's College. The numbers attending in 1878 were from 160 to 170, of whom about thirty were "nominally going to the Church," but received their theological instruction after leaving the College. From fifty-six to fifty-eight were boarders. There were, "owing to peculiar circumstances," three free pupils at the date of our inquiry, but as a rule all paid fees, which for boarders were £33, and for day boys from £3 to £6 per annum. There were separate commercial and classical courses, and special classes for those going to the College of Surgeons, and as solicitors' apprentices. The teaching staff consisted of five clergymen and five paid lay teachers. The President received £90 per annum; three others of the clerical teachers salaries of about £60, and the fourth was "paid by a chaplaincy," all receiving board, lodging, and attendance. The lay teachers, who were non-resident, received salaries varying, according to the extent of their duties, from £130 to £20 per annum. Additional accommodation for day pupils was, in the opinion of the President, required.

Mr. Mahaffy reports that he found much careful teaching, and fair answering in most of the elementary subjects. In dictation the boys were very good, and also in Euclid and arithmetic. The rector regretted that the want of endowment prevented him from adequately teaching natural science, for which he had good appliances bequeathed to him by the late Roman Catholic Bishop. But all attempts to obtain any answering in subjects outside the intermediate course were idle. . . . Ventilation was neglected, and little care was shown to supply the boys with means of recreation.

Carlow: St. Patrick's College.

Return.

St. Patrick's College, Carlow, was founded by the Most Rev. Dr. Keefe, Roman Catholic Bishop of Kildare and Leighlin. It was opened in 1793 for the education of the Roman Catholic clergy and laity. The President, the Rev. B. W. Burke, informed us that "the subsequent endowments were all for ecclesiastical purposes and all of private foundation. They are generally invested in the public funds. The annual income is £492 7s. 7d. There was no endowment of land." He did not give us any further particulars. The centre building was erected by the founder, Dr. Keefe, and north and south wings have subsequently been erected at the cost of the college. The tenement valuation of the college buildings and premises was £157 per annum. They were held by trustees, of whom the Bishop was the principal. The teaching staff consisted of five clerical and four lay resident professors, with non-resident professors of Greek, music, and drawing. The President and Professor of Divinity were appointed by the Roman Catholic Bishop of Kildare and Leighlin, the other professors by the President, subject to the Bishop's approval. Their salaries amounted in all to £680. At the date of the President's return there were 158 boarders. The pension for lay students was £31 10s., and for ecclesiastical students £30. There were no day scholars. About fifty theological students, selected by the President, received pecuniary aid towards their education and support, to the amount of £10 per annum each, from endowments of private foundation. A bequest of Mr. Quinlan, for the education of members of his family, was enjoyed by Carlow College under a scheme settled by the Court of Chancery.

Cavan: St. Patrick's College.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the Cavan Diocesan Seminary had been in operation since 1839, and was endowed by a devise of 171a. 3s. 29r. from Edward McGovern, and with sums of money amounting to £4,632 18s. 4d., which had been expended on building and in the purchase of the school premises, which were held in fee-farm. Rep. p. 138,
Vol. III, p.

There were then upon the roll forty-nine pupils.

The seminary existing in 1857 has been transferred to another site, and the new institution is known as St. Patrick's College, Cavan.

The Rev. James Dolan, the President of the College, informed us that the general use of the Diocesan Seminary had been to prepare young men of the diocese for the priesthood previous to their entering Maynooth College, and also to give an intermediate education to boys of the diocese intended for lay professions. In the new College students were prepared for the priesthood and entered it direct, the education being given "on the lines of Maynooth College." The landed estate, devised by Mr. McGovern, was situate in the county of Leitrim, but the largest sum ever received from it was £36 a year, and in 1878-9 it produced but £12. A bequest of £400 from the Very Rev. P. O'Reilly was invested in land in Cavan, held in fee, producing about £14 a year, and £100 a year was received from the lands and buildings of the old seminary, which had been let to the Roman Catholic clergymen of the parish, who utilised part of the premises as a day school. In 1869 the Most Rev. Dr. Conaty, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Kilmore, purchased the townlands of Cullies and Drumbo near Cavan, containing 569a. 3s. 21r., held in fee, subject to a quitrent of £9, for £14,000. Part was let to tenants and produced a rental of £360 per annum; the remainder, containing ninety-two acres, included the site of the college, and about fifty acres, being under plantation, were unproductive.

The College was erected at a gross cost of about £20,000, in addition to the £14,000 laid out on land. Of this £34,000 about £10,000 was collected by voluntary subscription from the people of the diocese; over £6,000 was received from the Bishop and Clergy—every parish priest giving £100, and every curate £50; over £8,000 was collected in America; other sums were derived from legacies, and £6,050 was, at the date of our inquiry, still due, having been borrowed for the purchase of the land and the erection of the college. The debt was in course of liquidation from the rents and produce of the land, including fines of £5 per acre taken upon leases, and from the surplus income from the students' fees. The endowment was vested partly in the Bishop and Vicar-General of the diocese, and partly in trustees for the Bishop for the time being. There were fifty-three boarders in the college paying £26 per annum each; none were free, but £51 16s. per annum was spent upon exhibitions or "bursaries."

The teaching staff comprised five priests and three lay professors. The Rev. Mr. Dolan informed us that in all Roman Catholic Ecclesiastical Colleges the ecclesiastical students were, as a rule, kept distinct from the lay students, and the humor stated that "the seniors never mixed with the juniors at all except that they dined with them."

Mr. Mahaffy went over the buildings. The college did not differ in any important feature from that of Belfast (vide supra p. 120) except in the small number of day boys. The institution did not appear to be fully occupied at the time of his visit, owing partly, no doubt, to the prevalent agricultural depression. Evid.,

Clare: Killaloe Diocesan College, Ennis.

The Rev. John Egan, President of the Killaloe Diocesan College, Ennis, furnished us with returns from which it appeared that the College was founded in its present form by the Right Rev. Dr. Power, Coadjutor Bishop of Killaloe, on the 8th January, 1866, the Very Rev. Dr. McRedmond, now Parish Priest of Killaloe, being its first President. The buildings, which consist of a plain dwellinghouse, with three schoolrooms and three dormitories attached, stand on something less than two acres of land. They are quite inadequate to the requirements of the College. These buildings will soon be vacated, and the College transferred to new and commodious premises which have been erected by subscription at a cost of £20,000. There were, besides the president, four masters, two of whom were clergymen, and two laymen. During the years 1879-80 the average number of boarders had been 48, and of day boys 98; the pension for the former being £30 per annum, with £4 for extras, while the day boys learning English only paid £4, and those learning classics paid £6 a year. The course of education was that required for the Intermediate Examinations.

Cork: St. Coleman's College, Fermoy.

Return.

This College was founded in 1858. The buildings were commenced by the Most Rev. Timothy Murphy, D.D., Roman Catholic Bishop of Cloyne, and completed by his successor.

The College stands on a site of two and a half acres, held at a rent of £55 per annum. The buildings were erected at an expense of from £20,000 to £25,000, chiefly collected throughout the diocese on the authority of the Bishop, but partly derived from funds at the disposal of the Bishop, which he devoted to the completion and furnishing of the College, which was stated to possess no endowment other than the buildings and "Intermediate Result Fees." Some money had been given from time to time, and, if not required immediately, was invested in Great Southern and Western Railway Stock; but the institution had been enabled to meet its current expenses only by the bequests received. The Rev. James Canon Wigmore, D.D., the President, with six resident clerical teachers, two non-resident masters, and four resident lay tutors, constituted the teaching staff. The salaries were paid out of the profits of the College; the President received £100 per annum; the salaries of the professors and tutors varied from £60 to £40 each. The course of instruction included classics, mathematics, modern languages (French, German, and Italian), natural philosophy, and English, and was adapted for pupils seeking to enter universities, professions, or the Civil Service. There were about 140 students, of whom 120 were boarders. The fees for boarders were thirty-one guineas per annum; for day scholars, £6 6s.; free "hursaries" at Maynooth, Paris, and Rome, were open to deserving theological students nominated by the Bishop. All the pupils, at the date of the return, were Roman Catholics; but occasionally a few Protestants had attended.

The College was managed by a Board of seven members, and the property was vested in four trustees. The Bishop, as patron, appointed the President and clerical professors.

Londonderry: St. Columba's Catholic College.

Return.
Ennis,
1880-1-3.

St. Columba's College was opened on November 3, 1879, by the Most Rev. F. Kelly, D.D., Roman Catholic Bishop of the diocese. It was erected principally by the Roman Catholic Bishop Priests and laity of the diocese, and had no endowment other than its site, purchased by the Bishop for £2,500, and buildings estimated to cost about £10,000, which were valued at £175 per annum. The Rev. John Hassan, D.D., President, receiving a salary of £70 per annum, with two resident professors receiving £60 and £30, and a visiting teacher with a salary of £120, all appointed by the Bishop, formed the teaching staff. At the date of the president's return there were upon the roll twenty-three boarders and thirty day scholars, all Roman Catholics. The fees for boarders and day boys over fifteen years of age were £30 and £8 respectively, and were £28 and £6 a year for boys under that age.

Monaghan: St. Macarten's Seminary.

Return.

The Rev. Peter McGlone, the President of St. Macarten's Seminary, informed us that the erection of this seminary was commenced in 1839, and the school was opened in 1849, under the direction of the Most Rev. Charles MacNally, D.D., Roman Catholic Bishop of Clogher. He stated that the only endowment was an income from the lands of Laccs, in the county of Monaghan, producing £30 per annum, enjoyed under the will of Dr.

MacNally. The institution was enlarged and completed by the present Bishop, the Most Rev. Dr. Donnelly, who, within the three years before our inquiry, had expended upon the buildings over £5,000. The funds were subscribed from time to time by the Roman Catholic Bishops, Clergy, and laity of the Diocese of Cloghar. The school had ceased to be a purely ecclesiastical training school, and now also takes in boys intended for lay pursuits. The theological and lay pupils learn the same classical and mathematical courses. Nineteen pupils were sent up to the Intermediate examinations of 1879, all of whom passed, eleven obtained prizes, and five gained exhibitions. The building is a fine one. There were, at the date of our inquiry, 41 intern pupils, and 10 day scholars; all were Roman Catholics; no others had ever applied for admission. There was accommodation for, perhaps, eighty boarders. The ordinary pension for boarders was £25 per annum, and for day scholars £5. The cost of the building had been about £90,000. The site, with about thirty acres of land, utilized for the purposes of the school, and part of which was acquired within the past ten years, was held by lease, subject to rent. The Bishop was the superintendent and responsible authority of the school. The teaching staff consisted of a president, three priests, and a lay professor appointed by the Bishop. The president's salary was £50, and those of the other professors £30 per annum, with board and residence. The course of instruction included Classics, English, French, and Mathematics, as prescribed in the programme of the Intermediate Education Board. Natural philosophy and chemistry had been taught, but it was reluctantly proposed to discontinue these subjects for want of suitable apparatus. There had been forty-four or forty-five boarders at one time; but on the average the seminary had not been more than half full. There were no free pupils, nor any receiving pecuniary aid towards their education.

Meath: St. Finian's Seminary, Newen.

St. Finian's Seminary was founded in 1803 by the most Rev. Dr. Plunkett, Roman Catholic Bishop of the diocese, and erected from private contributions. It possessed no endowment except the buildings and site, valued at £120 per annum. The teaching staff consisted of the president, receiving a salary of £60, and six clerical resident professors, receiving a salary of £50 each, all appointed by the Bishop. There were in the College, at the date of the president's return, 45 boarders and 50 day pupils, all Roman Catholics. The boarders paid £30 per annum each, and the day pupils £4. There were three students whose board and tuition were paid for by the trustees of the "Kells Bennett Charity Fund." The buildings were not well suited to the requirements of the establishment, and the president thought it would not be advisable to expend any large amount upon them, but that it would be better to erect a new building.

Sligo: College of the Immaculate Conception.

This College was founded in September, 1857, by the Most Rev. Laurence Gillooly, D.D., then Roman Catholic Coadjutor Bishop of Elphin, who, in the return which, as patron of the school, he forwarded to us, stated that it had no endowment whatever, public or private. It had been recently transferred from Summerhill, Athlone, to the Bishop's residence at Sligo, and the buildings, containing accommodation for about fifty boarders, with a residence for the professors, were erected chiefly by the Bishop and by private donations, and were maintained at the cost of the Bishop, "the patron and proprietor of the institution." The course of instruction was commercial and classical. All the pupils were Roman Catholics, the boarders' pension being £30, and that of day pupils from £4 to £8 per annum.

Galway: St. Jarlath's College, Tuam.

St. Jarlath's College was founded in 1817 by the Roman Catholic Bishop Clergy and laity of Tuam. The buildings consist of the "Old College," originally built to be used as a bank, and afterwards purchased by the College authorities, and the "New College," erected at the cost of the funds of the institution about 1860. The land on which the College stood contained five acres, and part of it was purchased by the Most Rev. Dr. McEvilly, now Roman Catholic Bishop of Galway, when president. The College had no other endowment. The priests of the diocese paid annual contributions for its maintenance of from £1 to £2 each. The course of instruction comprised all branches in connexion with the Intermediate Education examinations. The teaching staff consisted of the president and four professors, all appointed by the Archbishop, of whom the president received a salary of £30 per annum. There were in the institution, at the date of the president's return, seventy boarders and twenty day scholars, all Roman Catholics. The boarders paid £25, the day scholars £4 per annum. Some of the pupils received aid from the Archbishop in the payment of their pensions. Some free places in the college of Maynooth and in the Irish College, Paris, were open to the pupils on leaving the institution.

Achoery Diocesan School, Ballaghaderreen.

Return.

This school was founded in 1832 by the Most Rev. Dr. MacNicholas, Roman Catholic Bishop of Achery. It was exclusively a day school, and at the date of the master's return was attended by twenty-three scholars, all Roman Catholics, paying £4 per annum each. The school was held in a building which had been formerly part of the wing of the Roman Catholic church, and it possessed no endowment except the premises, which were valued at about £10 per annum. The master was appointed by the Bishop, and the pupils were educated principally with a view of entering Maynooth College, or preparing for the examinations under the Intermediate Education Act.

From St. Brendan's Seminary, Kilkenny; St. Colman's College, Newry; Holy Cross College, Clonliffe, Dublin; St. Patrick's College, Thurles; All Hallows Missionary College, Drumcondra, Dublin; St. Ignatius' College, Galway; St. Kyran's College, Kilkenny, and St. Mel's College, Longford; we received no replies to our applications for information.

From the Presidents of the Diocesan College, Limerick; St. John's College, Waterford, and St. Peter's College, Wexford; we received letters stating that these Colleges had no endowment.

From the President of Clongowes Wood College, Kildare, under the management of the Jesuit Order, we received a letter informing us that it was not an endowed school.

From the President of St. Vincent's College, Castleknock, Dublin, which is under the management of the Vincentian Order, our Secretary received the following reply to our application for information:—

"Sir,—I beg to assure you that it is quite a mistake to suppose that the moneys given in the beginning, or received subsequently, from private individuals towards our 'building or grounds attached' were bestowed so as to impose any obligation on us to devote the property to 'educational purposes.' On the contrary, we are quite competent to dispose of these buildings and lands to any private purchaser, and to devote the proceeds to any other even non-educational house or work of our Institute in these countries. That being so, it is hard to be ranked amongst endowed schools—at least to be asked to take the same without being offered the advantages of such institutions. Since we came here, for over forty years, no Endowed School Commission up to this has thought of placing this college on its list. Under these circumstances, I hope you may kindly excuse me from filling up the form you sent.—I am, Sir, your faithful, obedient servant,

"(Signed), M. O'CALLAGHAN."

Mr. Mahaffy visited the French College of the Holy Ghost, Blackrock, which is maintained by a religious order as a private school, and is apparently the largest boarding school in Ireland. The Principal informed us that it was a private school, and did not come within the scope of our Commission.

*App. A., p.

Mr. Mahaffy also visited St. Stanislaus' College, Tullamore, which is under the management of the Jesuit Order, and found at the College 164 boarders, no day boys. The teaching staff comprised the rector, vice-president, and 20 assistant teachers. The average charges to the pupils were £55 per annum. The buildings, and a considerable farm at a low rent, were entrusted by the Order to the rector. Everything was richly and completely appointed, the buildings were in thorough repair, clean, and well ventilated. There were three school libraries, besides a reference library for the higher school, and a masters' library. There was a good collection of physical instruments, and every boy in the school was taught natural science.

ROMAN CATHOLIC PRIMARY SCHOOLS.

Schools under the Order of Christian Brothers.

*Evid.,
6233-613.*

The members of the Order of Christian Brothers selected for teaching are generally educated at the Training College, or "Novitiate," Belvedere House, Drumcondra, Dublin, where they undergo a probation of eleven years, and are annually examined as to their ability to teach, and other necessary qualifications, before becoming life members. All the teaching and training is within their own body, which is self-governed under their Superior-General. A sum of £40 a year is allowed for the maintenance of each teaching Brother. All private property brought in by the members of the Order goes to the general funds of the institution and is expended in supporting the executive governing body. Returns from each establishment are annually sent to the Superior-General, who afterwards sends visitors or examiners who test their accuracy, both as to the numbers and proficiency of the pupils and the other matters stated, and who report to the Superior-General upon the condition of the schools. At the date of our inquiry the Order had, in Ireland, about 90 buildings, containing nearly 300 schoolrooms, and their schools were attended by about 34,000 pupils. A list of the "Christian Schools," taken from "The Catholic Registry, 1880," will be found infra p. 129. The school-books of the Order, "represent their own opinions on the subject of education, and embody the spirit of their system, by presenting religion not in an isolated form but in its natural connection with science and literature." The course of education is primary, but provision is made for giving more extended instruction to the advanced pupils, and to those displaying special aptitudes. The course includes reading, writing, grammar, book-keeping, geography, drawing, arithmetic, geometry, mensuration, algebra, and natural philosophy, and in seaport towns navigation is taught.

We were informed that many of the pupils had raised themselves considerably in life, and the Rev. Mr. Swan, for twenty-five years teaching in one of the Dublin schools, knew of sixty of his own former pupils whose aggregate salaries at the time of our inquiry amounted to £10,800 per annum. The average length of the pupil's course was about six years in each school. The number under each master was nearly 100; but in the lower schools they were a little more numerous. Monitors were employed to assist in the teaching, and "the science of education" was taught to those who had in view teaching as a profession.

Hevey's Endowed School, Mullingar (infra p. 202), and the Dempsey Male School, Kells (infra p. 201), though not appearing to be exclusive foundations, have been placed under the charge of the Christian Brothers, who also conduct the education in the Artane Industrial School, Dublin, and in some other institutions which we have classified as "Miscellaneous Schools."

Mr. Moore visited seven schools conducted by the Christian Brothers. He reports that they were carried on according to a fixed system, the chief point of difference being that in some the boys remained longer at school than in others, and received instruction in more advanced mathematics, science, music and drawing, and sometimes in French and elementary classics. While the Brothers devoted their principal energies to elementary education, they gave advanced instruction to boys showing special abilities, and many of their pupils were thus fitted for high positions in after life. He believed the efficiency of the schools would be increased by the employment of regular paid monitors, but in most cases the want of funds rendered this impossible. In Cork and Limerick, where the Brothers had numerous wealthy supporters, paid monitors were employed with the greatest advantage, and those schools were the best which Mr. Moore visited. The programme of instruction, though differing in detail, was very similar to that of the National Board where advanced subjects are taught. He found the boys, as a rule, well and intelligently instructed, especially in Euclid and algebra, which were much better taught by the Christian Brothers than in National schools. The reading books contained extracts of a religious nature unfitting them for use in a mixed school. The school buildings were by far the best which Mr. Moore inspected. The Brothers seemed to have studied the science of teaching. Their ability as teachers was of the highest order, and the discipline maintained was almost perfect.

This school was erected and supported by church collections, donations, and annual subscriptions. A sum of £1,500 was received for its erection from the Catholic Association.

In 1878 there were eight teachers, and the number of pupils on the roll was 812, the average daily attendance being 640. The children were charged one penny per week each, but probably only about two-thirds of the number paid it. The pupils' fees were expended upon repairs of the buildings and school requisites.

Cork: "Christian Schools."—1. Peacock-lane. 2. Blarney-lane. 3. Sullivan's-quay.

The Rev. James Bernard Duggan, Superior of the Order in Cork, informed us that at the date of the Royal Commission, 1854-8, the schools of the Order in that city contained ten departments, while the endowment was not much over £250. Shortly afterwards a drawing school was erected by subscription, as a memorial to one of the Brothers, and soon afterwards a private donor added to the schools at an expense of over £3,000. The other endowments at the date of our inquiry were the lands of Coolavookig, devised by Dr. Barry, producing £360 16s. 8d. per annum, and £36 per annum, the interest upon £800 bequeathed by Mr. Kelly and lent on mortgage. The lands of Coolavookig were held in fee, and were occupied by one tenant holding a lease for three lives and forty-one years after the death of the last life, at an annual rent of £400 Irish. The term of forty-one years (according to the register of the death of the cæteræ que via, recorded in the abstract of title kept by the Superior) began to run in 1863, and the lease would therefore expire in 1910. The lands were supposed to produce about £700 a year. Within the past twenty-five years a number of bequests for the education of the poor had been from time to time expended in the erection of cottages, which had been found a most useful and profitable investment, producing between 7 and 8 per cent upon the outlay. These at the date of our inquiry consisted of several houses and tenements in Peacock-lane, Blarney-lane, and Sullivan's-quay let to weekly tenants, and producing an annual profit rent of £236 18s. 4d. A profit rent of £17 13s. 4d., arising out of a house and land at Ballincurragh, near Cork, and a house in Dominick-street, Cork, producing £9 per annum, also belonged to the schools. The endowments were quite distinct from the general property of the Order, and the income did not pay more than half the expense of maintaining the schools, the rest being subscribed by the citizens. The property of the schools was vested in two members of the community as trustees, in accordance with the will of the donor of the Coolavookig estate. There were twenty-three Brothers engaged in teaching, each receiving a stipend of £40 per annum, and all residing in the principal school buildings, Peacock-lane.

There were three schools, the number of pupils on the roll was 2,053, and the average attendance from 80 to 85 per cent. A charge of one penny per week was paid by such of the children as could afford it. There were twenty school-rooms, including the drawing school and a large examination hall, supplied with mathematical instruments presented by friends.

Peacock-lane schools consisted of twelve rooms, and the examination hall, and were attended by 1,000 children; there were five rooms in the Blarney-lane schools, and three in the Sullivan's-quay schools.

About twelve months since, the Brothers finding themselves overworked, paid monitors were introduced at a cost for the year 1878-9 of £117 5s. 3d. The pupils were generally of the lowest class, but had often raised themselves to very respectable positions. Four Brothers daily attended at Blarney-lane schools, and three at Sullivan's-quay.

The local director examined the schools daily. Five members of the Order were appointed by the Superior-General to examine them annually, and the Superior, or his deputy, also examined the accounts. The annual examination of the three Cork establishments occupied a fortnight or three weeks, every boy being examined. Prizes were given from the school pence by the local teachers. The more proficient boys were taught every branch of English, algebra, Euclid, and natural philosophy; for some time two Brothers had been teaching French; and at the Intermediate examinations, 1879, twenty-eight pupils had passed, twelve getting prizes. There was also a very large singing class, taught by one of the Brothers.

We were informed that there were very few National schools in Cork, the number of religious establishments being very great. Besides the Christian Brothers, the Presentation Brothers also had three schools very largely attended; and the whole primary education of the Roman Catholics of the city was practically in the hands of the religious Orders.

Mr. Moore reports of the Peacock-lane school:—

"Of the excellent and truly useful schools conducted by the Christian Brothers this is, I think, the most efficient both as regards the course of instruction—which includes English, French, mathematics experimental science, drawing, and music—and the quality of the instruction given in these various subjects. Of the boys in the senior class, 39 in number, about 15 had no mistake, and no boy had more than two mistakes in dictation. In arithmetic, the answering was all that could be desired, whilst in geography, grammar, Euclid, and algebra, it was excellent. No praise can be too high for the neatness and legibility of the writing. The other boys examined, about 100 in number, answered most creditably. All the boys in the senior room are instructed in experimental science, and about 100 are learning French. The Brothers have built a physical laboratory and a drawing school, both well adapted for the purpose. The instruments in the laboratory were well chosen to give the pupils a thorough knowledge of the principles, and also to awaken in them a lively interest in the subject of natural science. The singing—in parts and by solo—both of sacred and secular music was beyond all praise.

The Order had other schools in the county of Cork, at Charleville, Middleton, Youghal, Doneraile, and other places, which were generally supported by collections made in the parishes.

Kerry: "Christian School," Dingle.

The endowment of this school consists of a perpetual annuity of £32 6s. 2d., charged upon the lands of Rathglissane, near Charleville, co. Cork; of twelve shares of £100 each in the Provincial Bank of Ireland; and of £500 Government New £3 per Cent. Stock in the hands of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. The two first mentioned endowments are vested in a single trustee—Daniel O'Brien Corkerry, Esq.—who is the executor of the late Archbishop O'Sullivan. The annuity was acquired by purchase for £550, of which sum £500 had been bequeathed to the school by the Rev. Eugene McCarthy, of Ballyheligue, and the remaining £50 was a gift of the Christian Brothers. The trustee was not able to state how the endowment represented by the twelve Provincial Bank shares had been acquired. The sum of £500 in the hands of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests formed portion of a sum of £10,538 9s. 8d. ("The Clarissa Hussey Charity Fund"), bequeathed by Clarissa Hussey for charitable purposes. By a scheme settled by the Court of Chancery in 1873, it was provided that the sum of £500 Government New £3 per cent. Stock, portion of this fund, should be transferred to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and that the dividends should be applied in providing "food and clothing for the poor Roman Catholic male children attending the schools at Dingle, under the care of the Christian Brothers." A rentcharge of £40 devised by the will of the Rev. Dr. Foley, proved 20th December, 1849, for "clothing the poor children attending the Dingle National school," is now also received by the trustees of this school (the National school having been discontinued before 1857), and is applied towards clothing the poor children in attendance.—Vide infra, p. 160.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the endowments of these schools consisted of a sum of £750 Government Stock, granted by the Rev. Richard Walsh in 1824; £200 bequeathed by Martin Honan in 1848; and £900, amount of invested savings and collections; these endowments producing altogether an annual income of £55 10s. In the returns furnished to us by the Rev. James P. Welch, the Superior of the Order in Limerick, it was stated that the Rev. Richard Walsh's grant of £750 was then invested in "Railway Stock," producing a net annual income of £33; that Mr. Honan's legacy of £200 and the £900 accumulations were invested in Great Southern and Western Railway Stock, producing an annual income of £55, and that, in addition to the foregoing, the schools had also become entitled to a sum of £3,000 Government Stock, bequeathed by Mr. James Tuthill, of which £2,000 had been sold out, and the proceeds invested upon a mortgage for £1,300, bearing interest at 5 per cent.; to a legacy bequeathed by the Rev. H. Brahan, which produced an annual income of £27, and to an annuity of £36 per annum devised by Miss White. The total income of the schools from the various endowments at the date of our inquiry, therefore, appeared to be £270 per annum.

Two schools—St. Michael's, Cecil-street, and St. Michael's, Pery-square—mentioned by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, as schools belonging to this endowment, had been discontinued before the date of our inquiry.

St. Michael's school, Sexton-street, the largest of the four schools above mentioned, was inspected by Mr. Moore, who reports—

"This was the first school taught by the Christian Brothers which I visited, and every thing I saw pleased me very much. The relation between teacher and pupil seemed all that could be desired, as there was perfect and prompt obedience without any sign of fear. The discipline was admirable, the Brothers being able to arrange the boys in any desired way almost with a word.

"The course of instruction embraces a thorough English education, mathematics, French, vocal music, and elementary science.

"I examined more than 200 of the boys in one subject or another, and the answering in every case was highly satisfactory.

"In the senior room I gave some sixty boys long sums in addition of money, which they worked with surprising rapidity and accuracy; in diction I read out a paragraph from the morning paper which a large number wrote without a single mistake; the answering in Euclid was good, and the writing, both in copy-books and in home-exercises, particularly good. I have rarely heard better singing (by note) than in this school. There were 672 boys present."

Waterford: "Christian Schools."—1. Mount Zion Schools. 2. St. Patrick's Schools.

Evid.,

The Rev. John S. O'Flanagan, director of the Christian Brothers' Schools, Waterford, informed us that the Order had two schools in Waterford—"Mount Zion Christian School," and "St. Patrick's Christian School." A sum of £3,338, a legacy given by Mr. Power for the benefit of the schools, was invested, and the interest was annually remitted by the Superior-General to the local director; but though Mr. O'Flanagan believed the money to stand in the names of the Bishop of the diocese, the Superior-General, and the local Superior at Waterford, all for the time being, he had no certain information on the subject. The site of St. Patrick's School, until three years before the date of our inquiry, was subject to a rent of £18 per annum, payable to the Dean and Chapter of Waterford; but the perpetuity was then purchased for £350, paid by the Bishop out of a legacy. The site of the Mount Zion institution was held by trustees under a lease for 900 years, at a rent of £2 5s. 6d. per annum. An endowment, formerly producing £110 15s. 5d., had been invested in the purchase of land in Kilkenny, which was afterwards sold; but Mr. O'Flanagan did not know the particulars, except that he annually received out of the present investment £32 6s. 2d. for teachers, and £18 9s. 2d. to provide books for poor children. A sum of £40 2s. 4d. per annum, bequeathed by Mrs. Mary Power for the education of poor boys, was also paid to him by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and was applied towards payment of the teachers' stipends, which were £40 per annum each. Some houses on the Mall, Waterford, were, in 1837, left by Mr. Joseph Power for the schools, and produced £50 per annum until the title expired in 1864. Some smaller bequests, which had been invested in railway shares, had been treated as income for the community, and sold. Since 1857 a new schoolhouse had been built at an expense of £4,000, collected throughout Ireland, principally in Waterford. The charity also possessed an endowment of £6 9s. 8d. from the rent of a house in Stephen-street, Waterford, which was divisible between the two schools. The community had expended £1,100 from their own funds upon the schools.

Belfast: St. Malachy's School, Oxford-street.

Return.

This school was founded in 1874 by the trustees of the will of Mrs. Magill, who bequeathed £2,400 to establish schools, under the management of the Christian Brothers, in Belfast. The sum of £1,771, with £300 raised by subscription, was expended in the purchase of the site and erection of the buildings. A sum of £781 balance of the bequest was invested in stock of the Great Northern Railway of Ireland, in the names of the two surviving trustees, one of whom, the Bishop, received the dividends, amounting to about £45 per annum, and paid them over to the local Superior. The schools were kept in repair by the Christian Brothers, "out of school pence paid by the children." There were, at the date of the return, 154 children on the roll—all Roman Catholics.

The Christian Brothers from voluntary contributions maintained two other schools in Belfast, and also defrayed the excess of the expenditure upon St. Malachy's School over the endowment.

The following list of the schools under the management of the Christian Brothers is taken from the "Catholic Registry, 1880":—

MISCELLANEOUS ROMAN CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

Dublin.—SS. Michael and John's National Schools, Essex-street.

Boys' Day School—Girls' Day School—Night School.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that these schools were endowed with funds derived from legacies for the Roman Catholic Free Schools of SS. Michael and John, then producing an annual income of £18 14s. 3d. applied to the boys' day school, and £40 2s. 3d. applied to the night school. The funds of the male and female schools had been kept separate until 1841, when they were amalgamated, and in 1857 the girls' school appeared to receive no benefit from the endowment, of which the management was unsatisfactory, and the principal had been encroached on to meet temporary exigencies.

The head master referred us for information to the Very Rev. N. Walsh, F.R., manager of the schools. We requested the master to hand the returns to the manager to be filled and forwarded to us, but we received no further communication, and were unable to obtain any information, as to the present state of the endowment, which in 1857 represented a capital sum exceeding £2,000.

Mr. Moore found 148 boys, all Roman Catholics, in attendance at the boys' day school; the school-rooms were commodious and in fairly good order. Taking into consideration that the class of children was the very lowest in Dublin, and that they did not come regularly to school, the state of education could not be considered unsatisfactory. The buildings of the female school were in excellent repair, and quite adequate for the number of girls present, who were all Roman Catholics. Considering the class of children attending, the answering showed an amount of work satisfactorily done. Both schools were under the National Board.

Rep. Vol.
III. p. 56.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the endowments of St. Michan's National Boys' and Girls' Schools consisted of school premises of the annual value of £21 3s., held under a lease for ever, at a rent of £23 15s. 4d.; a legacy of £3,000 from Amelia Brady, under her will proved 20th November, 1834, of which part was invested in the purchase of the site and building, and the balance was then represented by £1,233 12s. 4d., Government stock, the bequest being given for erecting one or more school-houses for the education of the poor Roman Catholic children of the parish of St. Michan, under the regulation of trustees, the bequest to revert to the trustees absolutely in case of any interference on the part of the Board of Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests; £100, a "debenture" on North Anne-street Roman Catholic Church, bearing annual interest £4 12s. 4d.; £250, lent by the trustees to the Roman Catholic parish of St. Michan, without security, bearing annual interest £7 10s., and six Hibernian Bank shares, producing an annual income of £9. The accounts had been kept in a very loose and imperfect manner, and the conveyances of the school premises was much defaced.

Evid.,

The Very Rev. James Canon McMahon, Parish Priest of St. Michan's, informed us that he had been guardian and manager of the schools for upwards of twenty years. The boys' school was under the National Board, and was attended by between 350 and 400 pupils. The girls' school was stated by Canon McMahon to be attached to St. George's Presentation Convent, and to be under the care of the nuns, but Mr. Moore found separate female and infant parochial schools also in operation. Canon McMahon had never looked upon the schools as endowed, and had never heard the conditions of the will under which part of the endowment was derived. At the date of our inquiry, Canon McMahon stated that there was £1,000 in Government stock, the interest on which was applied to the purposes of the school; also the debenture of £100 charged on the property of St. Michan's Roman Catholic Church. The stock stood in the names of the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin and Canon McMahon. The Archbishop drew the dividends. Canon McMahon was not aware how the Government stock had been reduced, and the reduction had not taken place during his connexion with the schools; but his predecessor, the Very Rev. W. Hamilton, had built a library and either borrowed or got some money for the purpose, as he considered it a matter connected with the schools. The interest upon the debenture was "balanced" by a payment to the clergyman in charge of the school of "£10 a year out of the school funds to enable him to pay for his lodging." Latterly apartments were given to him in the school-house in lieu of that payment, and these apartments were set off against the interest on the debenture and on the £250 mentioned in the report of the Royal Commission, 1854-8. Canon McMahon stated that the reference in that report to the Hibernian Bank shares was a mistake. There were some bank shares standing in his name, but they were held in trust for an orphanage in Wellington-street and were not connected with St. Michan's School.

Since 1857 there had been some bequests for the school, which were entered in the account produced by Canon McMahon, but had been treated as income and expended. There were two houses on the school ground let to tenants, the rent derived from which was applied to pay the ground rent of the school. The senior master in the boys' school received £20 a year, and the assistants in the several schools received salaries amounting in all to £70 a year, which were paid in addition to the salaries received from the National Board. These payments were made out of the endowments of the school, supplemented by the proceeds of an annual charity sermon.

The attendance at the girls' school was 600. The average expenditure on the schools exceeded £500 per annum. One penny a week was charged to the children, but paid only by about ten per cent. of the pupils. Canon McMahon said that if the charge were enforced, the children would stay away from school, and the parents would say they could not pay it. Almost all the children attending were Roman Catholics. At the date of our inquiry there was one Protestant pupil. Canon McMahon personally inspected the school. There were Christian Brothers' schools also in the parish largely attended.

Mr. Moore reports:—

"The boys' school-house is, from its situation, naturally gloomy, but a plentiful supply of white-wash would make a vast improvement. The answering of the boys in the National programme was fairly good, and the discipline maintained by the teacher excellent. The 140 boys present were all Roman Catholics.

"The answering of the 35 girls present on the day of my visit was not so good as that of the boys; however they read distinctly, and spelled very well. There is a good Convent school almost next door, and the teacher informed me that her girls were those only who could not attend regularly at that school.

"There was also in connexion a large infants' school, at which 81 pupils were present."

Dublin.—St. Saviour's Orphanage, Denmark-street.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this institution, which then occupied No. 44, Jervis-street, Dublin, was endowed with £461 10s. 3d., under the will of Geoffrey Waldron; £107 Government Stock; and £203, trust funds invested in the purchase of the site, which was subject to £5 rent, the estimated annual value of the premises being £9 14s. 9d.; the net income from the existing trust funds was £17 1s. 1d. They reported that the state of the establishment could not be too strongly condemned, and that the institution was "little better than a nuisance."

Rep., Vol.
and 108.

The Rev. John P. Prendergast, the guardian at the date of our inquiry, expressed his desire to "remove the unfavourable report" of the last Commission. He informed us that he, as guardian, had given the house in Jervis-street to the Dominicans in exchange for the house in Denmark-street now occupied by the Orphanage, which was held in fee, the Orphanage continuing still liable to pay the rent of £5 a year for the Jervis-street premises.

Return.

The Rev. Mr. Prendergast had never seen the title deeds of the premises, which were "with the solicitor," nor could he procure them. The other endowments, at the date of our inquiry, consisted of £13 17s. per annum paid by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Requests, and of some Government Stock, standing in the names of the Rev. Robert A. White and Rev. John P. Prendergast, and producing £9 15s. 10d. per annum. The receipts of the institution averaged about £720 per annum from the endowment, collections and subscriptions, and the expenditure was of about the same amount.

All the inmates of the Orphanage were boarders and Roman Catholics, the greater number free, small pensions being paid with some. The guardian received 10s. per week, and was entitled to £100 on retiring after ten years' service. The pupils were educated in the National schools adjoining the Orphanage.

Mr. Moore reports that the house was very old and not built for an orphanage, but that the best possible use was made of it, such as it was. He found thirty-eight boys in the institution. They were regularly examined with the other pupils in the National schools, and were, in addition, thoroughly instructed in instrumental music, having among themselves a well-trained brass band.

County of Dublin.—"The Catholic Institution for the Deaf and Dumb," Cabra.

This institution, established at Cabra, near Dublin, is under the management and control of a president (the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin) and a committee of twenty-six members, elected annually by the subscribers. Children are admitted between the ages of eight and fourteen years. Those capable of instruction are retained for a term of about four years, those deficient in intelligence are returned to their friends. The female department, St. Mary's, is under the care of the Dominican Nuns; the male branch, St. Joseph's, is under the care of the Christian Brothers. On 31st May, 1880, there were 170 girls and 210 boys under instruction. Information as to the funds, then producing £57 8s. per annum, was refused to the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, and we received no information from the managers, but we append the published balance sheet of the institution for the year ending 31st May, 1880, from which it would appear that an income exceeding £3,000 per annum is now received from permanent sources, and that the annual receipts exceed £11,000, but that large sums are disbursed for "interest" and "rents." The sums received for "pensions" include payments by Boards of Guardians out of local rates for the maintenance of indigent deaf mutes. The annual report stated that "the entire amount expended by Boards of Guardians in Ireland, for the support and education of deaf and dumb and blind children in approved institutions during the year 1876, amounted to no more than £8,840. The State contributed absolutely nothing."

County of Dublin.—Female Orphanage, St. Clare's Convent, Harold's Cross.

Rep., Vol. III., p. 23. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the endowments of this institution then consisted of donations and subscriptions invested in £4,603, Government Stock; accumulations invested in £300, Kingstown Railway Shares; a site held for a residue of 900 years, and land held under a renewable lease at a rent of £60.

Evil, 5614-6709. App. to Ev., Vol. II., p. 595. The funds existing at the date of our inquiry were £910 2s. 11d. Bank Stock, which was purchased in 1865-6, and was worth over £2,700; £1,256 16s. 8d., Government Stock; £1,410, Grand Canal Stock; £500, Dublin and Kingstown Railway Debentures; and £176, City Debentures. The Canal Stock was the investment of a legacy received since 1857. The nuns frequently sold out portions of their stock when the expenses exceeded the income, and the £300 Kingstown Railway shares existing in 1857 had been replaced by the £500 debentures, which were purchased with moneys received from bequests. The City Debentures were very recently purchased. A legacy of £200, which had been left to support an orphan girl to be nominated by the Parish Priest of Rathmines, was now included in the general funds. A sum of £574 had been laid out in 1874 in the purchase of four acres of land adjoining the convent, held in fee, and cultivated under the superintendence of the nuns for the benefit of the institution. The buildings were erected by subscriptions and donations, and kept in repair at the expense of the institution.

Evil, 5614-6709. Mr. John C. Kelly informed us that he was nominally treasurer, but only received the half-yearly dividends for the nuns. The accounts were kept by the lady superintendant. There was no lay committee of any kind. Unless otherwise directed, small legacies, of which a great number had been received, were used as income. The head-rent, payable for a portion of the convent premises, had been purchased from the Church Temporalities Commissioners.

Returns. At the date of our inquiry there were about sixty-eight pupils, all boarders and Roman Catholics. Some of the pupils were free. For about twenty-six, sums varying from £12 to £16 per annum each were paid, and twenty-seven received support from the Commissioners of the Patriotic Fund, at the rate of £17 per annum each. The receipts from that fund and from the other paying pupils were included in the accounts as "subscriptions." The Rev. Mr. Grant, by direction of the Commissioners of the Patriotic Fund, annually visited the Convent, and Lord Waverley had also visited it in 1873. The annual income received from the endowments in that year was £815 11s. 1d. The children received a plain English education; they were generally orphans who had lost both parents, and were of a respectable class. On leaving the institution they were apprenticed or sent into situations, usually as cooks, for which they received a special education.

Mr. Moore reports that the institution impressed him most favourably in every respect. The household arrangements were perfect, and though the domestic work was done entirely by the girls, their answering in ordinary English subjects was very creditable; the writing was excellent, the arithmetic as good as in any girls' school which he had examined; and the needlework, both plain and fancy, was about the best he had seen in any school.

County of Dublin.—Convent National School, Clondalkin.

Anne Frances Caldbeck, by her will proved 26th March, 1846, bequeathed a legacy which realized £3,298 11s. 4d.—“For the foundation and establishment of a branch of the religious community of the Sisters of Charity, for the education of the poor Roman Catholic children and visitation of the sick poor of the parish of Clondalkin.” The endowment had not come into operation in 1857, “owing to delay in carrying out the trusts of the will,” but the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that a Convent with ample school accommodation had been commenced and was nearly finished.

1854-8,
Rep., Vol.
III., p. 34.

The buildings were completed and the school was opened in January, 1858. The amount expended upon the buildings—including the amount of the Caldbeck bequest—was £16,000. The only other endowment of a permanent nature enjoyed by the school was stated to consist of a share in a sum of £500 Government Stock, invested in the name of the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, the interest of which was divided equally between the Clondalkin male and female National Schools. The teaching staff consisted of the community of Presentation Nuns and five mistresses—the latter were paid by the National Board.

Return.

At the date of our inquiry, there were 300 pupils upon the roll, all of whom, with one exception, were Roman Catholics. The majority of the pupils were taught free of charge, and “to as many as possible” clothing and partial support were afforded.

The Male National Schools were under the management of a teaching order; there was also in the village of Clondalkin a “Parochial” National School, under the management of the Incumbent of the parish, exclusively attended by Protestant pupils.

King's County.—Convent National School, Tullamore.

Mr. Moore found 452 girls present at this school, all Roman Catholics; the answering in the “National Programme” was extremely good, and yet the girls could not explain the most ordinary sentences in their reading books, or give the meanings of common-place words. A few of the girls of the better classes were prepared for the Intermediate Examinations.

Cork.—St. Vincent's Orphanage, Wellington-road.

This institution was founded by and built and maintained at the sole cost of John Nicholas Murphy, esq., n.r., and was opened in 1877; the conditions of admission are that the children must be healthy, of the better class, destitute, having lost both parents by death, and not over seven years of age; the orphanage is intended for Roman Catholic girls only. There were thirteen children in the institution in 1879, the number to be increased as really deserving cases offered; there was accommodation for forty girls, and a convent residence for the nuns in charge, with a site of nearly two acres, all held in fee-simple. No payment was received for any pupil. The institution was under the care of the Sisters of Mercy. The amount of the endowment, which was to take effect after the founder's death, was not stated, but Mr. Murphy informed us that it would be all ready money to be invested by trustees. There was no land except the site of the buildings. The children received a good English and French education, with teaching in music, drawing, and needlework.

Cork.—Presentation Brothers' National School, Douglas-street.

Mr. Moore reports that the school-rooms, though in good order, were very much overcrowded, and the ventilation very defective. The answering in arithmetic, algebra, and Euclid did not appear equal to that of the pupils in the Christian Brothers' School, and the reading was “only passable.”

Limerick.—Romborough-road Industrial School.

The Rev. Patrick A. Martin, the acting manager of this institution, stated that it had been in operation for four years. There were five managers—the Roman Catholic Bishop of Limerick, and four others. The education was conducted by the Christian Brothers, five teaching and two lay brothers being engaged. Mr. Martin stated that the school had “no endowment.” The buildings were commenced about seven years since; "the shell cost £3,600," and the funds were raised by voluntary contributions, one donor having given £1,000. The site was believed to be vested in three trustees, of whom the Bishop and the Superior-General of the Christian Brothers were two. There were 128 pupils in the school, of whom 100 were committed and paid for under the Industrial Schools Act. In the year before our inquiry the income was £2,304 10s. 11d., of which £1,303 8s. was received from Government, £317 1s. 5d. from rates, £400 8s. 9d. from subscriptions and donations, and £283 12s. 9d., from payments for voluntary inmates.

Limerick.—Most St. Vincent's Orphanage.

In 1853 the Sisters of Mercy purchased the site of this institution for £1,500. The buildings existing in 1857, the cost of which, to the extent of £1,000, was received from bequests, were in 1877 extended at a cost of £4,837 8s. 2d., of which £3,171 19s. 8d. was raised by subscriptions and a bazaar, and the balance remained due at the date of our inquiry. The buildings were stated to be not surpassed by any in Ireland. The other endowments consisted at the date of the Royal Commission, 1854-8, of £90 per annum, derived from land under the will of Peter Arthur, and £13 16s. 11d. derived from a bequest by Maria Carroll of £461 10s. 9d., secured by mortgage.

Rep., Vol.
III., p. 342.

The Rev. Daniel Fitzgerald, r.e., who was deputed by the Sisters of Mercy to give us information as to the institution, stated that the annual income derived from Arthur's devise was about £100, and that the property was still subject to the terminable charges mentioned in the Royal Commissioners' Report. The Roman Catholic Bishop of Limerick was sole trustee of a bequest of £500 which produced £25 per annum, which Mr. Fitzgerald described as "Dr. Carroll's bequest," but he was unable to state the particulars of the investment. Mrs. Hogan had given £1,000 to be invested and the interest to be annually laid out for the use of the orphanage. The Bishop had invested the sum, and it produced £45 per annum. Some house property was in 1859 acquired from a donor named Ahern, and in 1871 some landed property was given by a donor named O'Gorman to the Bishop and others in trust for the institution. The rents, amounting from the Ahern property to £25, and from the O'Gorman property to £10 per annum, were collected by agents named Nash and Kenny, whose accounts were annually audited by the Bishop. Mr. Fitzgerald handed us a list of the deeds relating to the site of the institution, from which it would appear that the premises occupied about eight acres, and were held in fee, under conveyances to the present Roman Catholic Bishop of Limerick, the Most Rev. Dr. Butler, in trust for the orphanage, dated respectively 27th May, 1867, and 10th November, 1868. He also produced a fee-farm grant dated 31st December, 1860, to the Most Rev. John Ryan (the late Bishop), and others, of part of the landed property held in trust for the institution. Several of the trustees were dead, but Mr. Fitzgerald stated that the Bishop intended to have a conveyance made to new trustees immediately.

The endowments of the orphanage were supplemented by annual collections, payments (about £100 per annum) received from relatives of pupils, about £50 yearly received from the produce of industrial work, and State payments for 130 children committed to the institution under the Industrial Schools Act. The schools were under the National Board, by whom the salaries of five mistressess, amounting to £56 per annum, were paid. The Sisters of Mercy assisted gratuitously in the teaching; the higher classes learned vocal and instrumental music, French, &c. The average number of pupils on the roll was 283, 238 boarders and 45 day pupils, all Roman Catholics.

Mr. Moore reports that the orphanage was in every respect in a highly satisfactory condition. The dormitories were large, airy, and scrupulously clean; the lavatories were constructed on the most approved system; and the answering of the girls in their respective courses was very good. The singing was uncommonly good.

This College has been recently erected with funds raised by subscriptions, the proceeds of the sale of the houses and premises Nos. 78 and 79, St. Stephen's-green formerly occupied by the "Wesleyan Connexional School," and money borrowed for the purpose. It is vested in and managed by trustees appointed by the Methodist Conference, and the buildings afford accommodation for 100 boarders, the residence of the "Governor" and attendants, and 200 day-pupils. At the date of the return made to us there were 60 boarders and 152 day pupils on the roll, the fees for boarders being from 36 to 48 guineas, and for day boys from 6 to 12 guineas per annum. The course of instruction included Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Mathematics, French, German, Natural Science, Music, and Drawing, with the usual English course, and a course for boys preparing for commercial pursuits. The teaching staff consisted of the Head Master, who received a salary of £250 per annum, and five resident and ten visiting teachers. The authorities of the college stated that it had no endowment, and they did not regard the buildings as bringing it within the scope of the Commission. They declined to permit Mr. Mahaffy to inspect the institution.

The Rev. Robinson Scott, n.n., Principal of the Methodist College, Belfast, stated that £9,000 was set apart to aid in the education of the sons of Wesleyan ministers, and that the proceeds of that fund were available not only for the college in Belfast, but also for the Wesley College, Dublin, as either institution might be selected by the fathers of the pupils whose education was assisted.

Belfast.—Methodist College.

The Rev. Dr. Robinson Scott, Principal of the college, stated that this institution, which was opened in the year 1868, contained a Collegiate department for the residence and instruction in Theology of candidates for the Wesleyan ministry (who usually entered the Queen's College at the same time, and there received instruction in secular subjects), and school departments into which boys were admitted as boarders and as day pupils. There was a junior department for boys and girls from seven years of age upwards; and there were also classes for girls who attended as day pupils. As regarded the Collegiate department, Dr. Scott said that their "position was that what was already provided by the State they would avail themselves of, and what is not they would provide for themselves," and that accordingly they supplemented the secular instruction imparted by the Queen's College by Theological training in their denominational College.

The plot upon which the college stands, and which lies close to the Queen's College, contains about fifteen acres, held in perpetuity, at a rent of £311; but on a portion of it the trustees have erected a terrace of houses, which they have let to various persons. A sum, which at the date of our inquiry had nearly reached £60,000, had been raised by public subscription, of which upwards of £37,000 had already been expended on the buildings; these were expected, when completed, to cost £3,000 more. The remaining £20,000 was regarded as invested capital.

There were also special endowments in the Collegiate department, for instance:—The "Fowler endowment" of £1,000, to establish a scholarship for young men in training for the ministry, £500 to endow the "Mercier Scholarship," and £500 given "by a lady to provide scholarships for two ministers' daughters." A sum of £9,000 was set apart, out of the amount raised for establishing the college, to aid in the education of the sons of ministers, either in this college or in Wesley College, Dublin, as the parents might desire.

The total number of pupils in all departments for the four years preceding our inquiry had been 276, of whom about 20 were in the Collegiate department, and about 50 were boarders in the school department. There were about 80 pupils in the girls' department.

In the school department the pupils were of all Protestant denominations. There had been one Roman Catholic pupil; he had not been required to attend religious instruction.

The staff, under the Principal, consisted of the head master and seventeen teachers, besides the drawing master. The masters also taught in the girls' department, under the superintendence of ladies and a matron. Into the junior departments, in which two mistresses taught, children were admitted from seven years of age, but boys were not taken as boarders under ten years of age.

Dublin.—Presbyterian Schools, Dominick-street.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, mention three schools as in connexion with the Presbyterian Church in Dublin, viz., Ormond-quay Presbyterian Boys' School; Strand-street Presbyterian Orphan Girls' School; and Mary's-abbey Presbyterian Boys' School. The endowments of the first of these—the Ormond-quay School—were stated to consist of house property and Government Stock derived under the will of Cornelius Dehany, dated 29th June, 1732. The Strand-street School was stated to be entitled to house property in Blessington-street, producing £46 per annum; to a mortgage for £461 10s. 9d. of lands in the county of Tyrone, producing £19 17s. 1½d. annually; to a sum of £3,721 14s. 2d. Government Stock, bequeathed by the will of Mrs. Magee, dated 22nd June, 1846; and to a further sum of £1,230 under the will of Mrs. Magee, subject to the life interest of a person who, in 1857, was still living. The Mary's-abbey School was stated to be entitled to a re-charge of £3 13s. 10d. under the will of Joseph Leeson, dated 30th April, 1741, and to a sum of £86 2s. 3d. in the savings-bank.

At the date of our inquiry the Mary's-Abbey Congregation had removed to Rutland-square, and the school had been discontinued. The Rev. William B. Kirkpatrick, M.D., senior minister of the congregation, stated in a letter to us, in answer to our circular, that it was intended to reopen the school as soon as sufficient funds could be procured to provide a suitable school-house, and that meanwhile the endowment was allowed to accumulate.

The endowments of the Ormond-quay and Strand-street schools had been amalgamated, and the schools removed to their present site in Lower Dominick-street.

Return.

The Dominick-street school was, at the date of our inquiry, in connexion with the National Board, and consisted of three divisions—a boys' school, girls' school, and infant school. There were on the rolls of the boys' and girls' schools 57 boys and 64 girls, of whom 2 were Roman Catholics, and the rest were stated to be Protestants of various denominations. Four boys and 17 girls were free. The charges of the paying pupils varied from 1s. to 5s. per quarter. The master of the boys' school received £38 a year (£38 paid by the National Board, and £20 from the endowment). The mistress of the girls' school received £40 a year (£30 from the National Board, and £10 from the endowment), and the teacher of the infant school received £35 a year from the National Board, and £4 from the endowment. All had in addition to these salaries free apartments, with results and school fees.

These schools were inspected by Mr. Moore, who reports:—

"The boys' school was formerly conducted at Strand-street. The present premises are very commodious, and in excellent repair. The answering of the boys was very bad in spelling and grammar, also in arithmetic; in geography it was somewhat better, and in reading and writing all the classes showed fair proficiency. The teacher was only eight weeks appointed, and he stated that the school was in a bad condition when he came. There were 28 present. The roll is made up of 19 Presbyterians, 2 other Protestant Dissenters, 16 members of the Irish Church, and 1 Roman Catholic.

"The answering in the girls' school was better than that of the boys, though the mistress is no longer in charge than the master. I am sure that in a few months this will be a flourishing school. Twenty-five pupils were present. The roll is composed of 28 Presbyterians and 10 members of the Irish Church.

"There is an infant school, with an average attendance of 55."

Dublin.—Unitarian Daily School, 112, St. Stephen's-green.

*Rep. Vol.
III., pp. 62,
90, 94, 125.*

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that a boys' and infant school, then held in Essex-street, East, Dublin, was possessed of endowments consisting of school premises valued at £10 per annum, of landed and house property producing a net annual income of £26 18s. 3d., and of trust funds amounting to more than £2,000, and producing a net annual income of £109 9s. 4d. The Essex-street school, under the rules of the trustees, was a school "for secular education only, open to all religious denominations; every facility to be given to children to attend such religious instruction at other times and places as is approved of by their parents." Among the "endowments not in operation," mentioned in the same Report, the "Strand-street Charity School" was stated to be entitled to a sum of £2,320 13s. 7d., derived from various bequests, "for schools in connexion with the Unitarian congregation, Strand-street," but the school was stated to have been "discontinued in order to allow funds to accumulate for the payment of law expenses incurred in the suit of the Attorney-General v. Drummond." It appeared that this suit had been instituted for the purpose of depriving the Unitarian congregation of funds originally derived from Trinitarian donors, but long enjoyed by the Dissenting congregation. These funds were secured to the Unitarian schools by a retrospective statute, the "Dissenters' Chapels Act, 7 and 8 Vic., c. 45," but were charged with the costs of the litigation, and at the date of the Royal Commission, 1854-8, the schools were in abeyance.

Return.

At the date of our inquiry, the costs above-mentioned having been long since paid, we found these endowments, with those of the Essex-street school, to be enjoyed by a day school held in the buildings of the Unitarian Church, St. Stephen's Green. It appeared from a return furnished to us by the Rev. D. D. Jeremy, "Chairman of the Managing Committee of the Stephen's Green Congregation," that the school of the Unitarian congregation formerly assembling in Eustace-street was founded in the year 1718, but was closed in 1843, and was reopened, in 1847, as a day school, at 32, Essex-street, East. It was "started for the education of boys only, but for many years it has been a mixed school, having become combined with the school of the Strand-street congregation." "About 1868 the school was removed to 112, St. Stephen's-green, as the premises at 32, Essex-street were no longer considered suitable."

In the year 1863 the Unitarian congregations removed to St. Stephen's-green, and erected a church there, with the school-rooms which are now occupied by the day school underneath. From the funds of the "Strand Street Charity School," a sum of £1,511 13s. 4d. was contributed to the cost of the site and buildings.

The school is managed by trustees and the "Treasurer of the School Fund," under the control and superintendence of the "Managing Committee of the Congregation." For the year ending May, 1880, there were sixty boys and sixty-eight girls on the roll, "Unitarians, Jews, Protestants of different denominations, and Roman Catholics." A very few paid one penny per week, the rest were free. The education was in an English course, according to the National Board system. The head master received a salary of £72 per annum from the endowment, and two female assistant teachers received £40 and £18, respectively, of which the sum of £31 was contributed by the school endowment, and £20 by the "Strand-street Charity School Fund."

Mr. Jeremy stated to us that the existing endowments enjoyed by the Stephen's-green School consisted of "Damer's annuity, £18 9s. 3d.; Bamber's annuity, £3 13s. 10d.; Delany's bequest, (the house No. 17, Cork-street), producing £3 11s. 9d.; No. 32, Essex-street (the former school-house), producing £17, and the following money funds, viz.: £266 3s. 1d., Bank stock; £1,000 invested on mortgage, at four and a half per cent, and £3,941 18s. 3d., Government Stock, producing £190 7s. per annum. Of the Government Stock, £751 5s. 11d., producing £22 10s. 10d. per annum, was stated to belong to the "Strand Street Charity School Fund," being the balance of the sum of £3,320 18s. 7d. mentioned in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, after deducting the sum of £1,511 13s. 4d. (cash) expended in building the church and school-rooms. Mr. Jeremy mentioned that a further sum of £1,419 7s. 4d. stock, producing £14 14s. 2d. per annum, was available for settling up former pupils in trade when out of their apprenticeship, but had been accumulating for many years. This appeared to be a portion of the endowments mentioned by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, as belonging to the Essex-street school. A house in Clothworkers-square, stated to belong to the same endowment, did not appear to be now producing any income for the charity.

Dublin.—Singleton School, 23, Summer-hill.

Among the "Endowments not in operation" mentioned by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, the "Eustace-street Girls' School" was stated to be entitled to landed property in the county of Wexford and a rentcharge on premises in Dublin, devised by the will of Hannah Singleton, proved 14th June, 1780, producing a net annual income of £135 14s. 4d., and to sums of £5,414 16s. 1d., Government Stock, and £600, Bank of Ireland Stock, representing various donations, bequests, and accumulations of income, and producing an annual income of £216 8s. 10d., devoted to "the establishment of a school for the poor girls of the dissenting congregation of Eustace-street." The school was, in the same report, stated to have been "discontinued in consequence of the above mentioned funds having been temporarily withdrawn to be applied to the liquidation of costs incurred in the suit of Attorney-General v. Drummond;" but the school was "expected to be shortly opened at 23, Summer-hill."

At the date of our inquiry the school had been opened at 23, Summer-hill, and was in operation as a girls' boarding school in connexion with the Unitarian congregation, St. Stephen's-green, and in the full enjoyment of the endowments. The stock was, however, stated to have been increased by accumulations, and at the date of our inquiry was represented by a mortgage for £3,000 on lands in the county of Tipperary, sums of £2,783 8s. 8d. Government Stock, and £600 Bank of Ireland Stock, and the income of the institution was stated to be—from land £147 18s. 6d., and from trust funds £275 4s. 4d. per annum.

There were fourteen girls on the roll, all boarders, and all maintained out of the funds of the charity. With the exception that none were to be Roman Catholics, there were stated to be no restrictions as to religion, but all the pupils attended the Unitarian Church, St. Stephen's-green.

Dublin.—Methodist Female Orphan School, 36, Harrington-street.

This school was founded in 1804 by Solomon Walker, for the maintenance, education, and instruction in the Established religion of poor orphan girls, the number if possible to be ten. The present school-house was built in 1853, at a cost of about £700, collected by subscription. The endowment consisted of the investments of Solomon Walker's original gift of £8,000, with accumulations and some small legacies, represented at the date of our inquiry by £3,195 0s. 4d. 4 per cent. India Stock, standing in the names of James H. Swanton, William Brown, Samuel McComas, John L. Jones, and James Booth; with £497 9s. 4d., like stock, standing in the names of John O. Bousall, George Sykes, and James Booth, representing a legacy of £500 from Dr. James Barrett.

The Secretary's return stated that there were eleven pupils in the institution, all Protestants, receiving a plain elementary English education. The mistress and matron received each a salary of £20 per annum, and the endowment was supplemented by subscriptions and collections in the Methodist Churches, producing with the endowment a total annual income of about £200. The school premises were held under lease for ever, subject to a head rent of £7 4s. per annum.

The origin of the existing connexion between the institution and the Methodist denomination did not appear, and seemed to be at variance with the terms of the foundation.

272

Mr. Moore reports that the object of the institution was the training of destitute girls as servants, and that it afforded accommodation for ten boarders. He found nine present, who read and wrote well, their working in arithmetic was very fair, and the domestic arrangements were satisfactory.

SCHOOLS OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Rep. p. 140.

Five schools, viz.:—the schools at Brookfield, Clonmel, Lisburn, Mountmellick, and Newtown, were reported by the Royal Commissioners, 1834–8, to be under the care of the quarterly meetings of the Society of Friends, and to be governed by committees of members of that Society. The school at Clonmel had been discontinued, and the class of pupils who formerly attended it were sent to Mountmellick at the date of our inquiry. The schools at Brookfield and Lisburn were both under the control of "the quarterly meeting of Ulster," while those at Mountmellick and Newtown, to which children other than those of Friends were admitted at the discretion of the committee, were under the control of a committee of forty-two members, twenty-four elected by the Leinster quarterly meeting, and eighteen by that of Munster. The daughters of members of the Society belonging to the two latter provinces were educated at Mountmellick, and the boys at Newtown. The provinces of Leinster and Munster have the right of sending a few pupils to the Lisburn school, if the school is not filled by children belonging to the province of Ulster.

The object of this institution was stated to us to have been "to educate, in a manner consistent with the Christian principles of the Society of Friends, a number, commensurate with its means, of children of persons in low circumstances, who may be descended from Friends, though not in membership, and who are not brought up in connexion with any other religious society, the boys to be instructed in husbandry or other handicraft, and the girls in domestic labour suitable to their sex, in addition to such literary instruction as may contribute to their advantage and usefulness in after life."

Rep. p. 141.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854–8, reported that there were then in the school twenty-nine boys, and twenty-three girls, all boarders, and that twenty of the former and sixteen of the latter were free pupils.

At the date of our inquiry the school buildings, which could accommodate fifty boys and forty girls, were occupied by thirty-one boys and twenty-five girls.

The boys taught in the school were instructed in practical farming, and all the pupils received a good English education. There were also classes, in connexion with the

The property was returned by the Royal Commissioners, 1854–8, as consisting of £1,443 11s. 6d. cash, and of the school premises and lands, then comprising forty-nine acres.

Annual Report
1875–9.

The following "Inventory of effects belonging to the Institution, on the 31st of 3rd month, 1879," appears in the Annual Report of the school for that year:—

| Brookfield Property including Farm. | | Brought forward. | | £10,977 15 4 |
|--|--------------|---|--|--------------|
| Buildings, and Meeting-houses. | £5,277 13 8 | Furniture. | | 417 9 1 |

| Carried forward. | £10,977 15 4 | | | £11,494 17 4 |

It appeared that the sum of £6,377 13s. 8d., entered as represented by the "Brookfield property," was the total amount which had been "charged to capital account" in respect of that property, from the date of the original purchase of the site in 1836; the lands attached to the school contained, in 1879, about 83 statute acres, of which the site of the buildings and ten acres were held under lease for 99 years, the lease of the rest had expired, and it was held at will. The sum of £2,000 was lent on mortgage, at 5 per cent., and produced £100 per annum; the sum of £1,085 2s. 8d., "legacies invested at interest," had been lent to "a firm in Belfast," with whom "the Institution keeps an account," and produced in the year 1878-9, £46 3s. 8d. The North-Eastern Railway Stock, valued at £900, "represents a donation received from Thomas Richardson, in 1838," of which the annual produce (amounting in 1878-9, to £41 1s. 3d.) is to be applied, under the provisions of a deed of settlement, as follows:—"In keeping up a library for the use of the children of the School, and in the purchase of maps, globes, tools, philosophical apparatus, and other like articles; and in making arrangements for Lectures on subjects connected with Art, Science, Natural Philosophy, History, or general Literature, or in any one or more of the said objects, as the Committee of Management shall, for the time being, think most likely to promote the general improvement of the children, and in case the Committee shall be of the judgment that no further expenditure is, for the time being, desirable in or about any of the aforesaid objects, it shall be lawful for such Committee to apply the annual produce, for the time being remaining unapplied, for the general benefit of the children, or any portion of them, or for the encouragement of the apprentices, for the time being, of the school, or any of them, as the Committee shall think most advantageous."

In addition to the property mentioned in the inventory, William Greer, a member of the Society, left a sum of £3,000 payable after the death of his wife, to establish another school for the children of Grange and Richhill. After Mrs. Greer's death, in 1861, the managers, considering that they could not support two schools in the province, obtained the sanction of the Court of Chancery to a scheme for applying this legacy to the purposes of the Brookfield School. The Court authorized the expenditure of £1,000 out of the capital, but that authority was never acted on, and the whole sum was invested. The principal was stated to have been since increased by £500. The annual income, which is brought into the general account, in 1878 amounted to £204 12s. 9d.

The Superintendent stated that a bequest of a farm at Lisnabilla, near Moira, containing about twelve acres, was made as an endowment, "but, owing to the mismanagement of certain parties, the school never derived any advantage therefrom."

Return.

The account of the school-farm was separately kept, the work of the boys being charged against the farm, and the value of the produce used for the school being credited to it. Each boy must take his turn in working for five hours a day on the farm, but it did not appear that the pupils had been remarkable for their success as farmers, after leaving the school, or that any large proportion of them became farmers. A "practical farmer" (who was under the control of the superintendent, and had charge of the pupils while learning agriculture), a ploughman, and a labourer were employed on the farm. The superintendent managed the cropping, and the buying and selling of cattle.

Evid.
9246-75.

The teaching staff consisted of the superintendent (whose duties included those of headmaster, besides the oversight of the whole institution), three apprentices, bound for five or six years, and receiving salaries, increasing annually, with premiums of £6 6s. each on leaving the school, and a visiting teacher of Latin and French.

Evid.

Mr. Moore reports that the general management was good, and the state of education satisfactory. The boys laboured four hours a day on the farm, and four hours in school, besides which they had an hour and a quarter's study at night. He found their answering in reading, arithmetic, and grammar very good, and showing intelligent teaching, while the answering in spelling and geography was satisfactory. The girls answered well in all the English subjects, with the exception of geography. There were twenty-eight boys and twenty-two girls in the school on the day of his visit.

It appeared from the same report that “the subscriptions had decreased very seriously during the past ten years, owing to the death of many warm friends and liberal supporters of the school. On the other hand, the salaries and other charges increase almost imperceptibly, while the rates of interest from investments have diminished considerably of late years. The Committee have, therefore, felt it imperative to reduce the number of children, by letting some of those who have been in the school for a considerable time go home and to situations, even though not quite ready for leaving school, so as not to exclude those who are seeking admission.”

2. Antrim.—Ulster Provincial School, Lisburn.

Rep. p. 141,
ib. Vol. III.,
p. 451.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this school was endowed in 1761 by John Hancock, a member of the Society of Friends, who bequeathed £1,000 to be laid out on lands, the rents of which were to be devoted to the support of a school for persons of his own persuasion. The trustees accordingly purchased lands containing 140a. 2a. 6r., the net rental of which was, in 1857, £76 18s. 6d.; they also took a lease for ever of twenty acres of land, at a rent of £23 15s. 10d., and built a school-house at a cost of £1,300, raised by subscriptions among the Society of Friends. The annual value of the school premises was, in 1857, estimated at £35 14s. 2d., and the institution was then possessed of trust funds derived from legacies and donations, amounting to £5,279 13s. 2d., invested in Government stock and other securities, and producing an annual income of £207 17s. 1d. The school was attended in 1857 by twelve boys and thirteen girls, all boarders.

Evid.,
9353-513.

The management of the school was regulated by the following rule:—

“This institution was established for the purpose of affording a sound English education to the children of Friends of the province of Ulster; to be conducted with a strict regard to the moral and religious training of the pupils, in accordance with the principles of the Society. This institution shall be under the control of a committee of eighteen men and twelve women, to be appointed by the quarterly meeting.”

The Committee met once a month.

Prospectus.

At the date of our inquiry the school was attended by 28 boys and 17 girls as boarders, and by 8 boys and 1 girl as day scholars—54 pupils in all. The premises had been recently rebuilt and enlarged, and were capable of accommodating about 100 children, boys and girls. The charges for boarders were—To “members out of the Ulster Quarterly Meeting,” 26 guineas, and to all “non-members” 30 guineas per annum; the children of members of the Ulster Quarterly Meeting were admissible at a minimum charge of £12 per annum, and the children of Friends not in affluent circumstances always had a preference. In compliance with the will of the founder, ten children of Friends were to be taught gratis as day scholars, if so many should offer, and one boy was boarded and taught gratis, “and endeavours used to qualify him for a schoolmaster.” Friends of Leinster and Munster were at liberty to send a few children to the school, paying the full expense each child might appear to cost the institution. The charge for day scholars was £4 10s., and for “non-boarders,” who had their dinner at the school, £6 per annum. The charges to boarders had been recently raised to the amount above stated, and some of those who had been in the school at the time of the change still paid the former rates, varying from £7 10s. to £20 per annum.

Evid.

We were informed that, a few years ago, the state of education was not satisfactory, the number of scholars was reduced to a very low ebb, and the amounts they paid were so small, that it was seen that the school might have to be closed, but a very vigorous effort was made, by engaging a superior head master and in other ways, to improve the education. To carry out this plan, the Committee found it necessary to raise the charges, otherwise the school would have had to be closed from want of funds. The expectation of the Committee that by educating the children "in a better style" than before the receipts would be increased, had been realized, and the re-organization of the school had succeeded. The newly-erected school buildings were described as "large, fine, and valuable. The children were generally from the middle classes; the chief aim was to give a good commercial education, but the pupils were taught some higher branches. About thirty studied French, and some German; a few learned Greek, and some, including several of the girls, were learning Latin. In preparing the boys for commercial occupations, their education was directed with a view to their being employed largely in manufacturing works, and for that purpose they were instructed in inorganic chemistry. There were also classes in connexion with the Science and Art Department, but there was a want of sufficient apparatus for teaching some branches of Physical Science. The average time spent by each boy in the school did not exceed three years, as they were withdrawn to go into business. The Superintendent informed us that "the theory is that a boy makes a better man of business if he goes to it before fifteen, than if he begins afterwards, and, therefore, the school never had a chance of bringing boys on to a very far advanced education. There is hardly one professional man in the Society of Friends in Ulster. They are almost entirely successful prominent business men, and the tendency of the education is to make business men." "The object" of the school "is to give the children, even of the poorest members, such an education as will enable them to earn their living honestly and fairly in life." The average cost of each child to the Institution was about £25 10s. per annum.

The Friends' Schools at Brookfield and Lisburn were, perhaps, the only instances of mixed male and female boarding schools to which our attention was directed in the course of our inquiry. The boys and girls at each of these institutions occupied separate wings of the same building. At Brookfield the superintendent stated that there was no difficulty in keeping up the discipline. Occasionally, in past years, they had some difficulty. At Lisburn, when the present superintendent was appointed, high walls, which previously separated the playgrounds for the boys and girls, were at his instance removed, and at the date of our inquiry the boys and girls played in the same playground, took their meals in the same room, and many of the girls were taught in the same classes with the boys. The superintendent said that his experience of the school where this was allowed had been strikingly different from what he had seen where the opposite was insisted on; the pupils "mixed without any degree of familiarity or inconvenience; and it had been an evident advantage to both sides of the school, of course it required constant supervision, and the continual mixing of the teachers with the children."

"The house is in every respect suitable for a large boarding school, and is kept in thorough order. The answering of the junior class of boys was good in reading, spelling and geography, but deficient in arithmetic and grammar. The arithmetic, on paper, of the senior class was quite up to the average, as also the algebra, but the boys were utterly ignorant of Euclid. . . . The writing was particularly good, and the reading excellent. . . . The answering of the girls in all the usual subjects was extremely good, with the exception of arithmetic, which was rather bad. The writing was neat and legible, and the girls read distinctly, and with a good accent. It is a peculiarity of this school that the boys and girls live in the same house, dine in the same hall, and use almost the same playground, and all this, so far as I could judge, without any evil results."

The Treasurer stated that the bequest of £1,000 from John Hancock was invested partly in lands (the lands of Brough, subject to a head-rent of £3 13s. 10d.) and partly in the purchase of the Lisburn property, on which the school was situated. Two sums of £500 each left to the institution were "bearing interest on deposit"—no money remained invested in Government Stock. The "Lisburn Concerns" consisted of ground-rents in Lisburn, which were valued at £600; the Prospect Hill premises were the original school premises, which were valued at £2,336 4s.; and the new school buildings were valued at £4,837 15s. The Manster fund, £1,200; the Leinster fund, £2,337 8s. 7d.; and the Ulster Fund, £511 10s. 4d., were sums raised by donations from members of the Society in those Provinces, for the support of the school.

The "legacies and money at interest" appeared, as in the case of the Brookfield school, to have been lent upon personal security, and a sum of £480 2s. had been advanced at interest as a charge on the Belfast Meeting House. At the same time the school had borrowed £1,736 4s. 4d. (on which £16 11s. was due for interest) from a "Female Bounty Fund," belonging to the Society of Friends. This sum had been borrowed to complete the new buildings, the committee having decided that it would be better in the interests of the institution to borrow the money than to use their own funds.

3. Queen's County.—Mountmellick School.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this school, which had been opened in 1786, was intended for the education of children of the poorer members of the Society of Friends.

At the date of our inquiry there were 38 girls, all boarders, at the school, of whom 7 were not members of the Society of Friends, being returned as Protestant Dissenters. The highest charge for children of members of the Society of Friends was £35 per annum, but those who were not in a position to pay that sum were admitted at charges varying from £16 to £18, and deficiencies in payments were made up by subscriptions at the various meetings of the Society.

The endowments of the Mountmellick School in 1858 consisted of £60 7s. 9d. per annum, derived from land, and an invested sum of £2,216, producing £84 per annum.

The accounts were at the date of our inquiry kept in conjunction with those of the Newtown school.

Mr. Moore reported that he could not speak too highly of the excellence, in every respect, of this establishment. The course of instruction embraced all the subjects taught in a high class ladies' school, with the exception of music. The senior class wrote an essay on the comparative merits of poetry and prose, in which the composition, writing, and spelling were all that could be desired. He complained, however, of the limited acquaintance with English literature which they displayed, but this, he thought, was fully accounted for by the fact that the Society of Friends prohibits the study of many books which are used as class books in other schools. The success of this and the other schools belonging to the Friends was, he said, entirely owing to the great interest taken in them by the Boards of management, who spare neither trouble nor expense in securing the services of highly qualified teachers.

4. Waterford.—Newtown School.

The endowment of this school (founded in 1798) consisted in 1858 of a house and land, portion of which was let for £90 a year, an annuity of £11 1s. 6d., and £800 amount of legacies invested.

The head master stated that the number of pupils educated in that school varied, having been at one time sixty-four, but at the date of our inquiry it was only forty-eight, which number, however, was larger than that of the preceding two or three years. Of these thirty were Friends, fifteen were Protestant Episcopalians, two were Presbyterians, and one a Methodist.

The charges for nineteen of these pupils varied from £42 to £45 per annum, according to age. Of the others sixteen paid what are called "low rates," that is, sums varying from £16 to £18 per annum; ten paid what is called "full cost," that is, from £35 to £40 per annum, and the other three paid intermediate rates. When Mr. Moore visited the school the number of boarders had increased to fifty-nine.

The wife of the head master occupied the position of mistress of the establishment, and managed the domestic details. The joint salary of the husband and wife was £350 a year. There were also four assistant masters, whose salaries amounted to £345 per annum, in addition to their board and residence in the institution, and a visiting drawing master received £85 a year.

Children usually entered the school at about ten years of age, although, under the rules, they might be admitted at eight, and they sometimes remained until they reached sixteen. We were informed that they generally devoted themselves, after leaving the school, to commercial pursuits.

It appeared that no provision was made for the separate religious training of those children who were not members of the Society of Friends.

The Committee of Management of the school had decided that although in some subjects they considered the boys in their senior class qualified to compete in the junior grade of the Intermediate Education examinations, "it would be more conducive to the intellectual good of the boys if they adhered pretty much to their usual course of study without reference to the examinations under the Intermediate Education Act." They considered that preparing their pupils for those examinations might lead to "certain subjects receiving especial attention to the neglect of others of equal or greater importance." They had arranged to have a special examination of their school conducted in 1880 by Mr. G. T. Sanderson, Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge. Similar examinations had been previously held on two occasions, the last having taken place about four years before the date of our inquiry.

Mr. Moore reported that the school was a model of cleanliness, neatness, and order; that the dormitories, lavatories, &c., were, in every respect, suitable; that the answering in each case was highly satisfactory, as might be expected from the staff of masters employed (four in number, and highly paid) ; but he noticed in masters and boys a certain degree of listlessness which was, he was sure, fully accounted for by the want of competition with other schools, either in games or in scholarship.

There were about twelve acres of land attached to the Institution, used as a grass farm.

p. 366.

In 1858 the endowment of this school consisted of property yielding £32 8s. 6d. per annum. Since that date the school has been discontinued, and the endowment added to those of Mountmellick and Newtown, for the support of which these three endowments were, at the date of our inquiry, managed as a common fund.

We found that the accumulated property belonging to these institutions had been very largely increased, and at the date of our inquiry their income, exclusive of subscriptions and the profits of a farm, which formed part of their endowment, amounted to £355 14s. 4d. The total annual expenditure was upwards of £3,100 a year, of which sum £2,435 6s. 8d. was in the year ending 31st May, 1878, paid by the pupils' fees.

We annex a statement of the accounts, taken from the Report of the Institutions for the year ending 31st May, 1878:—

VII.—NATIONAL SCHOOLS.

National
Schools.

The aid granted to National schools by the Board of National Education out of moneys voted by Parliament did not appear to us to constitute such an "endowment" as was contemplated by our Commission, and therefore we made no specific inquiry as to those National schools which appeared to be wholly supported by grants from the Board, or by such grants with the aid merely of payments from local rates, school fees, or occasional and voluntary local contributions. A very large number of National schools were found to be in possession of free sites, but seemed to have no other permanent endowment; it abundantly appeared that these sites had been acquired, and that the school-houses had been built, under the greatest variety of circumstances, and we found it quite impossible, with the means at our disposal, to trace the titles to these sites and buildings. As we thus found ourselves unable to make any detailed report upon the property of those National schools which were endowed with sites and buildings only, and they were already under State control and efficient inspection, we thought that no commensurate object could be attained by our prosecuting further inquiries concerning them. There remained, however, a great number of National schools which possessed considerable endowments, other than or in addition to their sites and buildings, and we have endeavoured to include all such schools in our tables. We found that very many Endowed schools of various classes had, since 1857, and especially in recent years, been placed by their managers in connexion with the National system of education. We have already referred (supra, p. 105) to the "growing tendency," since the passing of the Irish Church Act, 1869, to place Protestant schools under the National Board. The great majority of the Roman Catholic primary schools (excepting the "Christian schools") mentioned in our Report are National schools; of the five convent schools visited by Mr. Moore, three were National schools, and as the result of his examinations, he strongly advised that the schools not under the National system should avail themselves of its "numerous advantages"—in short, we found many instances of primary schools of almost every class included in our Report whose endowments were supplemented and whose efficiency was increased by the aid given and control exercised by the National Board. By placing their schools under that Board, the managers are enabled to ascertain the qualifications of the teachers, to secure regular inspection, and to obtain an adequate supply of books and school requisites, while the teacher's emoluments are supplemented by direct payment of salaries or by results' fees.

With the rarest exceptions, so far as the attendance of pupils afforded any indication, we found that the schools thus placed in connexion with the National Board retained their denominational character, and that the managers continued to exercise their powers, as before. The schools were of course open to all denominations, but wherever the population was sufficient each separate communion had its own school, generally under the management of its own clergy. We received evidence from several Protestant clergymen that they were enabled to give religious instruction in a manner satisfactory to themselves in their schools when in connexion with the National Board, and the large number of Convent schools, and schools under the management of the Roman Catholic Clergy, which we found under the National Board, appeared to show that the Roman Catholics also found the system, to a large extent, satisfactory.

The objections of the Roman Catholics to the "Model schools," (of which 4 were in operation in Dublin and 26 in the provinces in the year 1879), were, however, strongly stated. The Rev. James O'Laverty, P.P., of Holywood, who had been the manager of a National School since 1869, stated that the parents of Roman Catholic children were taught that the Church disapproved of a school in which their priest had no participation whatsoever in the management, nor any right to interfere, and upon this principle the Model schools, which are under the direct management of the National Board, were objected to by the Roman Catholic Bishops, and formally disapproved of by the Roman Catholic Synod of Thurles. We were further informed by the Rev. Felix Hackett, O.C., of Enniskillen, that the system of the Model schools was objected to because it was a State institution, and because the education was taken out of the supervision of the clergy. Even where the head teacher of a Model school was a Roman Catholic, it was nevertheless objected to by the Bishops as a school for any children other than those of the teacher himself, and the Clergy were not allowed to give religious instruction in the Model schools under the existing regulations. There were, therefore, no schools above the rank of primary National schools receiving State aid which were approved of by Roman Catholics, and the Model schools were attended chiefly, and except in Dublin almost exclusively, by Protestant pupils.

In the National Schools under private management, we found that while the rules and principles of the National Board were adopted by all communities, and the schools were undenominational in the eye of the law, each school appeared in practice to be regarded by all parties, at least in cities and towns, as identified with some one denomination. In Armagh, for example, it was stated that each school was under the management of a clergyman; the Protestant children were stated to be afraid to attend an evening school held in the Roman Catholic district of the town, and the Roman Catholics complained that their children were "interfered with" on their way to their "National" School.

Evid.,

The Sullivan National Schools, Holywood (vide : infra, p. 170), afforded a notable instance of the difficulty of conducting National schools under undenominational management. They were founded by the late Dr. Robert Sullivan "for promoting National or unsectarian education," and a scheme for carrying out the design was sanctioned by the Court of Chancery, prescribing that "no person should be entitled to act as a member of the Committee until he should signify in writing to the trustees of the testator's will for the time being his approval of non-sectarian education as intended by the testator." Differences at once arose in the selection of the Committee, and soon resulted in the withdrawal of a large number of Roman Catholic children, who were transferred to a new National school which was established in the same neighbourhood under the management of the Parish Priest.

A further instance, of a peculiar character, will be found in the case of the schools of the parish of Raham, in the county of Cork, (vide : infra, p. 159). An endowment of lands vested in the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, which were devised by a Protestant clergyman "for the promotion of Scriptural Education in the parish of Raham," has been, under the management of the Commissioners, divided among four schools, one of which is a "Parochial School" under the management of the Incumbent of the parish, attended by Protestants and Roman Catholics, while the other three are "National Schools," exclusively attended by Roman Catholics.

Mr. Moore inspected about thirty Endowed National Schools. He reports :—

p. 262.

"It is absolutely necessary for the efficient working of a primary school that the teacher should be properly trained, that there should be a thorough and minute system of inspection, and a definite and fixed programme of instruction. It is to the observance of these three principles that the prosperous condition of the National schools is due. . . . The teachers in National schools have been in most cases educated in such schools themselves, and so have an accurate acquaintance with the system, besides which many of them have gone through a thorough course of training in the Marlborough-street Training Schools. They seemed, on the whole, an intelligent and competent class of persons, and much superior as teachers to those of the Church Education Society.

"The system of inspection is effective for two reasons—(1.) A large sum of money in the shape of results fees depends on the result of the Inspectors' examination; a good teacher in a contributory union being able to make from 10s. to £1 by each scholar. (2.) It is most minute, since the mark of every pupil in each subject must be recorded in the report, thus the only way in which the system could fail would be through the incompetency or neglect of District Inspectors.

"The general tone is undoubtedly lower than in corresponding schools in England, and the deficiency is, in part, attributable to the Inspectors. The English Inspectors are, as a rule, of high University distinction, for two reasons this is not the case in Ireland—(1.) The salaries in Ireland are lower, and the duties more arduous. (2.) The course of examination for Irish Inspectorships includes so many subjects and requires such a limited acquaintance with them, that the University candidate has no better chance of success than the National school teacher.

"The programme of instruction is as definite and fixed as could be desired, and . . . most admirably drawn out. . . . Paying teachers by results fees has had a beneficial influence in improving the reading, writing, and elementary arithmetic."

In his general remarks upon the various educational systems which came under his notice, he says :—

p. 263

"In the condition of premises, the most common abuse was the improper state of the out-offices; they were, with very few exceptions, built on wrong principles—that is to say, in such a way as to render their cleanliness a matter of great difficulty, in some cases almost an impossibility. In this respect the National were not any better than other Schools, though it is in the power of the Board to refuse grants in cases where the premises are not in proper condition. Managers do not pay sufficient attention to the neatness and comfort of their Schools; they are generally quite satisfied if the roofs are sound and the walls fairly clean. . . . These remarks do not apply to the Christian Brothers' or Nuns' schools, where nothing is left undone to inculcate principles of tidiness and order."

The Tables taken from the Report of the Commissioners of National Education for 1879, give a summary of the number of National Schools and of the attendance of pupils for that year.

VIII.—THE COMMISSIONERS OF CHARITABLE DONATIONS AND BEQUESTS FOR IRELAND.

Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests.

"The Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland" do not undertake the actual management of any schools, and do not appear to have the means of doing so. Their functions have been confined to the administration of property, and are of very limited range.

Many schools of the various classes included in this report possess endowments consisting of funds and securities held by the Commissioners, who "do not in those cases administer the funds, but simply remit the dividends to the local administration" of the schools to which the funds belong, and do not further interfere. In several other cases, principal sums representing endowments appeared to have been recovered through the action of the Commissioners, but they were paid over to the trustees of the schools concerned, and the Commissioners exercised no further supervision over their subsequent administration; in some instances, such as that of Castleknock Parochial School (supra, p. 109), we found that the capital of trust funds thus paid over had been expended.

We met with two schools endowed with landed property which was vested in and managed by the Commissioners, viz.—“Bertrand’s Female Orphanage, Dublin,” and “Dr. Hall’s Charity, Limerick.” In the course of our inquiry as to these institutions our attention was called to the defective nature and extent of the Commissioners’ powers, and to the inadequacy of the means of control and management at their disposal. The numerous instances of the mismanagement, misapplication, neglect, waste, and failure of school endowments, to which we have been obliged to refer, pointedly illustrate the want of a summary, efficient, and inexpensive jurisdiction, and of systematic supervision, over the property and management of the Endowed Schools in Ireland. A statement of the constitution and powers of “The Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland” will show the defective nature and limited extent of the means existing in Ireland for securing the due administration of the institutions in question, and their marked contrast with those powers which, chiefly by recent legislation, have been made applicable to the Endowed Schools in England.

The Commissioners were incorporated in 1844 by the Statute 7th & 8th Vic., cap. 97, and their powers have since been modified and extended by Acts of 1867 (30th and 31st Vic., cap. 54.), and 1871 (34th and 35th Vic., cap. 102). The Board consists of the Master of the Rolls and the Lord Chief Baron for the time being, and eleven members (one of whom was, by Statute 24th & 25th Vic., cap. 3, substituted for the Judge of the Court of Probate) appointed and removable by Her Majesty in Council; under the Act of 1844 (sec. 2), five of the appointed Commissioners must be Roman Catholics, and (sec. 3) religious questions are referred to committees consisting of the Protestant and Roman Catholic members respectively. At the date of our inquiry the appointed members were the following:—The Right Hon. Mr. Justice Fitzgerald; the Rev. William B. Kirkpatrick, D.D.; the Dean of St. Patrick’s, Dublin; Jonathan Pim; the Archbishop of Dublin; the Right Hon. Lord O’Hagan; the Right Hon. Mountfort Longfield; the Right Hon. Judge Finnegan; the Hon. Judge Townsend; the Right Hon. W. H. F. Cogan, and the Right Hon. Lord Ebury.

Under the original statute five Commissioners formed a quorum. The Board then “constantly failed to have a meeting,” but in 1871 the quorum was reduced to three, and they now “generally have an attendance of five.”

The Lord Lieutenant was empowered (sec. 7) to appoint a secretary or secretaries, and other necessary officers, and their salaries, with other “necessary expenses of carrying on the business of the Commissioners,” were (sec. 8) charged upon the Consolidated Fund, but were, by the Act of 1864 (sec. 24), made payable out of moneys to be voted by Parliament for the purpose. All property vested in the previous Charitable Bequests Board, which had been created by the Act, 40 Geo. III., was, by the Act of 1844 (sec. 11), transferred to the Commissioners, and vested in them upon the existing trusts. The chief, if not the only power affecting school endowments which was originally granted was (sec. 12) power to “use for the recovery of every charitable donation, devise, or bequest intended to be applied in Ireland, which should be withheld, concealed, or misapplied, and to apply the same, when recovered, to charitable and pious uses, according to the intention of the donor or donors;” no proceeding could be taken until allowed by the Attorney or Solicitor General, and no payment could be made for costs (sec. 14) unless first approved of by the Treasury. Practically, therefore, the Commissioners had no power of interfering unless in cases where they were made aware that the endowments had been “withheld, concealed, or misapplied,” they could not in any respect depart from the original intention of the donors in the application of property devoted to charitable purposes, and they could hold such landed property only as had been transferred from the previous Board. Under the previous Board “the solicitors had far too much power over the property. Everything was referred to them, and the consequence was an enormous accumulation of costs.”

By the Act of 1867 (30 & 31 Vic., cap. 54), which was described as “tentative,” the Commissioners were directed (sec. 2) to receive applications from trustees of charities for their advice or direction respecting the management of trust property or questions relating thereto, and they were empowered, if they should so think fit, to give such advice as they might think expedient, which, when given in due form, protected the trustees receiving it from responsibility. This power has been very often made available.

Vic., c. 54.

The Commissioners were further (sec. 3) empowered, under special circumstances, to sanction compromises of claims on behalf of charities, and (sec. 5), where it appeared to them that the institution of legal proceedings was requisite or desirable, they were empowered to direct such proceedings to be instituted; if it appeared desirable that proceedings should be instituted by the Attorney-General, the Commissioners were empowered to certify the particulars of the case to him, in order that, if he should think fit, he should institute and prosecute such legal proceedings as he might consider requisite or proper under the circumstances.

Powers were given by the Acts of 1867 (sec. 6), and of 1871 (sec. 8) to recover by civil bill charitable donations and bequests not exceeding £50 principal, or £20 arrears of annual payments.

By the Act of 1867 (sec. 7), and the Act of 1871 (sec. 6) in the case of any charitable donation or bequest not exceeding £100, or of any annual sum payable for charitable purposes not exceeding £10, if it should be found "unlawful or impracticable to apply the same according to the direction or intention of the donor or donors," the Commissioners were authorised, after giving public notice and hearing all objections and suggestions, to apply or direct the application of the same "to such charitable and pious purposes as they should judge to be best, having regard to the directions and intentions of the donor." Under the Act of 1864 (sec. 8), and Act of 1871 (sec. 7), the Commissioners were empowered to proceed in Chancery for the settlement of schemes for the application of charitable property in such manner as should be deemed nearest and most conformable to the directions and intentions of the donor or donors, in all cases (irrespective of value) where it was found "unlawful or impracticable" to apply the same according to the directions and intentions of the donor.

The Act of 1867 (sec. 9), empowered any person, by deed or will, to assign or bequeath, and empowered trustees to transfer money funds for charitable purposes to the Commissioners, who might nominate persons to administer, distribute, or apply such funds under their directions. They were further (sec. 12), empowered to sanction variations in the investment of securities for money, and (sec. 13), leases, and the application of funds for the raising of money for improvements of charitable estates. Under special circumstances (sec. 14), the Commissioners were enabled to sanction the sale, exchange, or surrender of lands, and (sec. 15) the redemption of rentcharges, securing the due investment of any money arising therefrom.

The Act of 1871 enabled the Commissioners to adopt a summary form of proceeding in Chancery (sec. 9), for the recovery of sums exceeding £20 and not exceeding £200, and (sec. 10) in some other cases, and (sec. 11) extended the power of trustees to transfer property to the Commissioners to rentcharges and annuities. The Commissioners were also empowered (sec. 12) to receive funds in the absence of competent trustees, and (sec. 18) to apply to any court in which any charitable fund remained unapplied for a transfer of such fund to them, and also (sec. 14) in cases of delay to apply for the conduct of administration suits affecting charitable property. They were also (sec. 15) enabled to compel the trustees of charitable donations and bequests to complete their number.

These three statutes appear to contain all the existing provisions for enabling the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests to preserve or recover the property or to enforce and secure the due administration and proper management of the institutions which possess charitable endowments in Ireland, including the great majority of the Schools mentioned in this Report. It will be observed that (except the lands transferred in 1844 from the previous Charitable Bequest Board) the Commissioners have no power to acquire or hold any land. They have never instituted any proceeding by way of inquiry, unless put in motion by someone else, and, except by legal proceedings formally instituted, they cannot recover or prevent the misapplication of charitable endowments, while their power of varying the application of such endowments is limited to cases in which the original scheme has proved "unlawful or impracticable." The Secretaries informed us that they were most anxious to point out any deficiencies in their powers, and stated that the Commissioners had very strongly expressed their opinion that it was advisable to give large powers of adapting ancient bequests to modern requirements, and making changes in the management of charities corresponding to the changes of their circumstances in the lapse of time. The power of taking over trust property was "deliberately confined to stock and money." The Board considered that they had not machinery in their department for managing property, and when the draft of the Act of 1867, which proposed that landed property should be vested in them, came before them, they struck out the clauses, and stated that they would not accept the provision.

The Board, as at present constituted, has not a staff sufficient to deal with all charities; and one reason stated for their refusal to accept enlarged powers "is the economy." The staff of the Board consists of the two Secretaries, a clerk, a writer, and a messenger; and, therefore, even if the Commissioners had more ample powers, they have not the means of exercising them with efficiency. When it was proposed that they should receive and audit the accounts of charities, a minute was prepared showing that they had no machinery for the purpose, the staff being insufficient. They have no direct power to inquire into the condition or management of charities. The Secretary stated that all powers of inquiry, or of an inquisitorial nature were "purposefully excluded as far as possible." They have no power to call for accounts, or statements, to require answers to any inquiries, or to inspect, or to examine on oath. There is no official trustee of charity lands, as in England, nor is there any existing provision for the tenure of fixed property in any mode which would obviate repeated conveyances to new trustees. The provision for the transfer of charity lands to the Commissioners is the only means available to avoid a similar difficulty in the case of personal property. There is no specific obligation upon the managers of any charity to keep proper accounts, or to submit them to regular audit. Though the Commissioners receive accounts (voluntarily furnished) in many cases as a check, they do not make themselves responsible for vouching them. No powers exist here, as in England, of uniting schools, appointing or removing trustees schoolmasters or other officers, of varying or enlarging the powers of visitors, of extending or regulating education, and there is no direct power (except through a scheme obtained under the sanction of the Court of Chancery) of reorganizing, altering, or adding to the trusts of endowments. The more extended powers which the Commissioners possess in the case of charities having incomes not exceeding £30 a year, or capital not exceeding £300, have been very largely availed of, and no reason why those powers should not be extended was stated by the secretaries, except that the staff was not sufficient.

Evid.,
1867d.

We met with many instances—for example, Leamy's school, Limerick, and Dr. Hall's charity, Limerick—where large sums had been spent in repeated appointments of trustees, in the vouching of accounts, and in obtaining modifications of existing schemes through the machinery of the Court of Chancery, where the existence of more efficient and summary powers vested in a central authority, similar to those existing in England under the Charitable Trusts Acts and Endowed Schools Acts, might have been applied with the greatest advantage, while in a great number of cases—for example, the endowments vested in "Ministers and Churchwardens," and in the Roman Catholic Clergy or members of Religious Orders—the tenure of the endowments, as well landed as personal property, appeared to be in a very unsatisfactory position.

ENDOWMENTS UNDER THE MANAGEMENT OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF CHARITABLE DONATIONS AND BEQUESTS.

Dublin, Bertrand's Charity, No. 11, Eccles-street.

Rep.,
Vol. III.,
p. 88.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that Peter Bertrand, who died June 26th, 1806, had by his will devised certain property in land and houses, which in 1857 produced a net annual income of £480 14s. 7d., for the establishment of a charity school for the religious, literary, and musical education of fifteen orphan girls and for apprenticing them in Protestant families under the direction of the ministers of Mary's Abbey Meeting House (Presbyterian), and of the incumbents of the parishes of St. Werburgh and St. Peter, and of St. Nicholas' parish if the school should be in it, and their successors for ever. The property was in 1857 under the management of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, but was then mortgaged for £5,000 which had been charged upon it for the payment of accumulated renewal fines and arrears. The school had not been established on account of the delay attendant on a Chancery suit, the costs of renewal fines, neglect and mismanagement of a receiver appointed by the Court of Chancery, and want of adequate exertion on the part of the former Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests.

App. I.,
p. 314.

The school was opened in 1873 in the house No. 11, Eccles-street, Dublin, taken for the purpose at a rent of £70 per annum, and at the date of our inquiry twenty orphan girls were maintained and educated in it, under the care of a matron receiving a salary of £70 per annum. The management was regulated by a scheme settled by the Court of Chancery, under which, in addition to the ex-officio Governors, the incumbents of St. Peter's and St. Werburgh's parishes and the two ministers of the Presbyterian congregation formerly of Mary's Abbey but now of Rutland-square, Dublin, three other Governors were appointed with a power of co-option.

The children received only a plain English education, the matron being the sole teacher, except that the Secretary to the institution also gave instruction for two hours each week in vocal but not in instrumental music, receiving £16 per annum for doing so.

The property was managed by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests through their agent, Mr. Naffett, and they paid over the income to the Governors, who met once a month and paid the accounts, the supplies being obtained as required for the institution by the matron. The pupils were admitted between the ages of eight and twelve, and were to leave at seventeen. A sum of £50 per annum was, under the scheme, set apart for an apprenticing fund, but up to the time of our inquiry, though several pupils had been taken away by their surviving parents, only one had been apprenticed. Pupils were admitted, if children of Protestant parents and in distressed circumstances, having lost one parent, either father or mother.

The pupils were examined half-yearly by Mr. Rudkin, the examiner of Erasmus Smith's schools. Mr. Moore reports:—

"The institution is in every respect a model. The house was in perfect order, though I gave no action whatever of my visit, and the arrangements all that could be desired. I examined all the girls in the usual subjects, and the answering was of the highest order. The house accommodates 20 inmates, 18 were members of the Irish Church, the remaining 2 being Presbyterians."

Though the institution has thus at length been made efficient, its history affords melancholy proof of the inefficiency of the cumbrous and costly machinery provided for the management of such charities in Ireland.

Mr. William Gernon, one of the Secretaries of the Commissioners for Charitable Donations and Bequests, informed us that the property (which consists of houses and building ground at Portobello and Clanbrassil-street, and the South Circular-road, Dublin), was transmitted to the Commissioners as a "diversorum hereditas," under the 11th section of the Act of 1844, having been previously vested in the Board established by the Act 40, Geo. III. Mr. Gernon "had no doubt that the Commissioners would be very much delighted to get rid of it." The existing Commissioners could not take landed properties, and felt a disinclination to manage those transmitted from the former Board. They had always stated that they had not machinery in their department for managing property. Until they "settled" the property by giving leases, there was not a Board that had not "Bertrand" before it in some shape or form. For ten years it had occupied the constant attention of the Board at its weekly meetings, and was a source of much trouble.

In 1867 a report was prepared by the Secretary and adopted by the Board, giving the history of the charity from its foundation. At the death of the founder in 1806, the property was worth £240 per annum, but subject to a mortgage of £1,000. It was held by lease for twenty-one years from the Archbishop of Dublin, renewable on payment of fines. The brother and administrator or the testator having absconded with a sum of £806, a suit was instituted in Chancery in 1807, a receiver was appointed, and in 1808 a decree for execution of the trusts was obtained. The property was afterwards vested in the Commissioners of Bequests. From 1808 to 1845 there was constant litigation; the rental was wholly absorbed in costs paid to the solicitors of the Commissioners, or incurred in suits brought against them by their tenants and by the mortgagees, in consequence of the neglect to keep down the renewal fines. On 27th September, 1845, only about £1,600 was forthcoming, and no renewals having been taken out for more than fifteen years, the Commissioners were compelled to offer to the Archbishop £6,185, of which they arranged to pay £1,000 in hand, and the remaining £5,185 was charged as a further mortgage on the property, the original mortgage for £1,000 being still outstanding. From 1845, under the management of the present Commissioners, matters steadily but slowly improved; in 1854 the mortgage debt to the Archbishop had been reduced to £2,358, and the original mortgage had been paid off, but renewal fines amounting to £1,058 had again accumulated, and a renewal was obtained on granting a mortgage to the Archbishop for £3,411. In 1859 the mortgage to the Archbishop, having been reduced to about £2,311, was paid off out of a loan of £2,400 obtained upon a transfer of the security to other mortgagees, and an arrangement was made for accumulating the surplus income to pay off the charges. In 1865 the accumulations amounted to £1,762 Government stock, out of which £1,161 3s. was paid in 1866 for a grant in perpetuity, subject to a fixed rent of £190 6s. In 1867 the value of the premises had increased, owing to the general improvement of the neighbourhood, and the lettings, to which we shall hereafter refer, had raised the gross rental to £985 3s. 10d. The profit rent was then £794 17s. 10d., which was expected soon to rise to £819 17s. 10d., which would leave a net income of £750 available for the charity, so soon as the mortgage should be paid off. The Commissioners resolved to postpone putting the charity into operation until this was accomplished, and in 1870 the Commissioners in their twenty-fifth annual report announced that, having cleared off the incumbrances and raised the income to a punctually paid net annual rental of £750, they were about to bring the charity into operation.

A scheme was settled under the sanction of the Court of Chancery, and in 1878 the school was opened, but after a lapse of sixty-six years from the original gift of the endowment. During this period (except in the payment of the original mortgage for £1,000), nothing whatever had been realised or applied to any useful purpose, and the whole income of the estate had been lost, or spent in current outgoings and the costs of litigation and management. The rental had, however, been largely increased, chiefly by lettings made between 1864 and 1867, when a large part of the property consisting of building ground was let upon building leases and several lots of houses were also let by the Commissioners.

Mr. William Hamilton Maffett, the agent of the Commissioners, informed us that the gross rental at the date of our inquiry was £1,024 ds. 10d. We found several instances in which more houses than one had been let together at rents below the tenement valuation, and considerably below the value as estimated by the agent. In one case four houses, which Mr. Maffett supposed to be worth £150 per annum, and the tenement valuation of which was £115, were let for £100 per annum. In another instance seven houses, with a piece of building ground containing a frontage of 200 feet, were let for £120 per annum, the houses alone being valued at £134; these lettings were made in some cases without advertising for offers. Of the building ground a plot containing 3a. 3n. 14r. was let in February, 1866, in one lot, at £150 a year, for a term of 150 years. At the date of our inquiry this holding had been subdivided, and was covered with buildings valued at about £4,000 per annum. Mr. Maffett thought that the house property would have let better in small lots, but the Commissioners got rid of an immense amount of trouble by letting to persons who took the houses for the purpose of making profit from them, and who might manage the houses more cheaply, and have the repairs done more economically. He thought, however, that the lettings could not have been made better on the system which was adopted, though he did not think that system a correct one.

It appeared from the minutes of the Board that Mr. Maffett had generally been consulted in reference to the lettings, and further, that valuations had been obtained, that advertisements had been published in several cases, and that considerable trouble was taken by the Commissioners themselves in reference to the disposal of the property. Several members of the Board of Commissioners thought that letting the house property in small lots would be exceedingly troublesome, "that the tenants would be constantly coming with memorials and giving trouble to the prejudice of the other business in the office," and that letting the building ground in large lots to solvent tenants, with covenants to build, would be more satisfactory. "After most mature consideration the Board thought it better, on the whole, for the Charity, to let the houses to middlemen rather than manage the property themselves."

The conclusion suggested was, that having regard to the insufficiency of the Commissioners' powers of managing such property, they had acted wisely in letting it as they did, but that the income realized for the Charity was far less than the actual value of the estate, or than might have been obtained under more active and less fettered management.

Evid.,

The deductions allowed to the tenants for poor's-rate and water-rate exceeded £50 per annum, and the full poundage was deducted from the rents paid, even where those were mere ground rents, and the premises were occupied by valuable buildings let to under-tenants. Mr. Maffett told us that he knew this mode of calculation to be "perfectly wrong," and that the tenants were entitled to deduct only the proportion which the rents they paid bore to the rents they received from the under-tenants, but he stated that he allowed the deductions by the directions of the secretaries.

Evid.,

It appeared that in 1876 he had claimed to deduct only the proper amount from the rent payable by the tenant of the largest plot of building ground, Mr. Stokes, whose rent was £150, while the valuation of the property, then built upon, was about £4,000 per annum. Mr. Stokes objected, and the Secretary, on the 21st July, 1876, directed Mr. Maffett "in that one gale of rent to settle on the usual terms," and to make a statement to the Board, when they met in the following October. Mr. Maffett treated this as a continuing direction. The matter escaped the secretary's recollection, and the rates continued to be allowed on the full scale without question for three years. Attention was first called to the subject on our examination of Mr. Maffett. The Commissioners then communicated with the Church Temporalities Commissioners, with the agent of the Pembroke estate, and with Messrs. Stewart and Kincaid as land agents of high standing, and finding that the deductions were usually allowed at the full poundage rate upon the rent, the Commissioners directed Mr. Maffett to continue to allow it accordingly, though informed that the practice "involved considerable loss," was not the "strictly legal course," and was adopted for special reasons stated in the replies received. Under the peculiar circumstances of the Bertrand estate, which is let chiefly on building leases at mere ground rents, and in consequence of the high rate of taxation prevalent in Dublin, the Secretary appeared to admit that the course thus adopted might, in that instance, involve a loss approaching five per cent. on the whole income of the Charity.

Limerick.—Dr. Hall's Charity, Nicholas-street.

The Royal Commissioners, 1834-8, reported that this institution was founded by the will of Dr. Jeremiah Hall, who, in the year 1697, bequeathed certain house property in the city of Limerick, for the support of an almshouse and charity schools, and appointed the Bishop, Dean, Mayor, Recorder, and Sheriff of Limerick to be the overseers of the charity. The number of children intended by the founder to be educated was twenty boys and as many girls. The affairs of the charity have, since 1834, been under the control of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. The Royal Commissioners, 1834-8, reported that, at the date of their inquiry, the estate consisted of house property, then worth nearly £200 a year, but stated to be rapidly deteriorating in value. In addition to the house property there was also a sum of £379 Three per Cent. stock, but no annual aid was afforded from that source, and it was "to be presumed that the dividends were allowed to accumulate." The Royal Commissioners, 1834-8, reported that no efficient control was exercised over the schools, and that, besides neglect on the part of those in charge of the endowment, there seemed also to be inefficiency in the management of the charity estate.

We received evidence, at Limerick, from the Dean of Limerick, and Mr. Widdow, the local agent of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, from which the condition of the charity appeared to be very bad. Afterwards we examined Mr. Hercules H. MacDonnell, one of the Secretaries of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, on the subject. He prefaced his evidence by stating that the property belonging to Hall's school only consisted of an annuity of £10, Irish, for the master, £10 for the mistress, and £10 for the repairs of the schoolhouse and the purchase for the pupils of specified books; and that this £30, Irish, a year was the entire of the educational endowment. He submitted that, having ascertained that income to be forthcoming, the inquiry into the property for other charitable endowments was not for our Commission, but was wholly ultra vires. Having been informed in Limerick that a large part of the property from which the educational endowment was derivable had been permitted to fall into ruin, and further that, at one time, the schoolmaster had resigned because there were no funds to pay him, and that at the date of our inquiry it was in contemplation to abandon the school, we thought it our duty to pursue the inquiry. It is, however, but just to add that Mr. MacDonnell stated that he was anxious to afford us the fullest information.

The history of the charity was very lamentable. The property, situate in a decaying part of the city of Limerick, consisted of houses now about 200 years old. On July 22nd, 1828, the Secretary of the then Board of Bequests reported that the building of the institution was nearly in ruins. In 1829 a bill was filed in Chancery, and a receiver was appointed in 1835, who was paid £50 per annum for managing the property until 1843, when it was transferred to the Board of Bequests. In 1845 it was transferred, "in fee simple," to the present Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and in the same year notice was sent to them that a presentment would be made to take down the houses as dangerous. One of the Commissioners took the papers for examination, and another, in June, 1845, was asked to inspect the premises and report on them, which he did in the following October. Ultimately an estimate at £485, for repairing the almshouse and different other buildings, was accepted and carried out. In 1847 the repairs were completed, but, after advertising, only £30 could be got as rent for six houses. From 1847 to 1862 the Secretary could "find nothing but tenants not paying rent, dilapidations, and so forth." He stated that "though this charity was not so formidable as Bertrand's, it had come before the present Board 124 times, besides involving a very large correspondence." In 1862 the opinion of the law officers was taken as to "proceeding for a scheme." "It was this case, and the legal difficulties of it, which led to the legislation in 1867." "The law officers directed a certain course." The Commissioners' counsel "thought there was an omission, and the Attorney and Solicitor-General amended their first opinion." Then they "had further proceedings, and went under a different Act." It was next found that they "should have relations who had an interest in the matter. The Board declined to be relations, because in another case of the same kind they were pulled up by the Treasury, and had a sharp correspondence because they asked the Treasury to pay some costs. There was a sharp conflict between the then Master of the Rolls and Mr. Peel," and, ultimately, a "long statement was sent to the Treasury, stating the necessity of legal proceedings, as, in the opinion of the Board, the Charity could not be managed without a new scheme, and the Board was debarred by the previous decision of the Treasury from running any risk of costs." In consequence of this communication, the Treasury said they would see about having the law altered, and the Act of 1867 was passed. The Commissioners were of opinion that, without an order of the Court of Chancery, they could not apply the funds to repairs. In 1868 the overseers reported that they could not apply a sum of £200, Irish, which under the founder's will was devoted to a loan fund for apprentices; but one of the Commissioners, to whom the matter was referred, thought the loan fund not "impracticable" in the sense which would enable them to vary its application. They also considered themselves bound to accumulate £10, Irish, per annum, directed by the will to be paid for the relief of poor debtors, and it was suggested that these provisions should be varied by the Court of Chancery. Proceedings were taken, but in July, 1870, the Court decided otherwise, and obliged the Commissioners to keep the £200, Irish, for the loan fund, and the £10, Irish, per annum, for the poor debtors; but it authorized them to advance £250 for repairs, which were then urgently needed.

Under this scheme, which was finally adopted in 1871, the local management was placed in the hands of the Bishop, Mayor, and Sheriff of Limerick, all for the time being, and two other overseers. The scheme provided, in accordance with the founder's will, that a widows' almshouse or school for boys and girls to be kept in the almshouse building, a loan fund for apprentices with a capital of £200, Irish, and a fund of £10, Irish, per annum, for the relief of poor debtors should be maintained, and it provided that £250, but no more, should be expended upon the repairs of the house property and the building of the almshouse and school. After paying the costs of obtaining this scheme, no funds were available for carrying it out except £216, Consols, and £256 Government Three per Cent. stock. On November 11th, 1874, the overseers reported:—

Evid.,

"That four houses belonging to the charity had become so dilapidated that the City Engineer required them to be taken down; that it would require £450 to put them in tenable condition, when they would produce from £40 to £50 a year, and the Governors requested that any funds available might be so applied."

Before making any decision, the Board desired their Secretaries to bring the state of the funds before them. On the 18th November they reported:—

"That the £250 allowed by the Court of Chancery in 1871 for repairing the houses had not been sent to the overseers of the charity; that the Board was bound under the scheme to retain for the loan fund as much stock as was then equivalent to £200 Irish, and that the whole charity funds now consisted of £256 11s. 6d. New Three per Cent. stock, and £216 12s. 6d. Consols. It was ordered—That to the extent of £250 the Commissioners will advance the balance of the amount in their hands, after deducting the stock reserved for the loan fund, if the overseers are of opinion that such advance may be made beneficial to the charity property, either by repairing some of the houses and pulling down others, or by finding a lessee who will arrange to put the four houses in repair, receiving the £250, or by such other plan as the overseers may suggest."

The overseers obtained an offer from Mr. McCarthy, a local builder, to take the dilapidated houses, "for a term of years to be agreed on," at a rent of £20 per annum, on condition of his receiving £100 from the Commissioners on putting the premises into repair. On 17th March, 1875, the Commissioners—

"Ordered that Mr. Widdess be informed that the Board will grant a lease of the four houses to Mr. McCarthy, at an annual rent of £20, for the term of 150 years, and will allow him a sum of £100 out of the money now in hands."

In the month of December following their solicitor had drafted the lease, but Mr. McCarthy had taken no step and declined to proceed further; and, the case having been brought before the Board, the solicitor reported that Mr. McCarthy, though frequently applied to both by the agent and the solicitor, had not executed the lease, while the draft had been laid before his solicitor and returned. It was then, for the first time, observed that the offer made by Mr. McCarthy had not specified the number of years for which he proposed to take the lease, and that there was no complete contract in writing which could be enforced. The matter was brought again before the Board on 12th January, 1876, when—

"A further letter from the Board's solicitor, dated 20th instant, was read, stating his opinion that there was no contract with Mr. McCarthy by which he was bound. Ordered (1st)—That the Board will not put the charity to the cost of a doubtful proceeding against Mr. McCarthy. (2nd)—That the Board's solicitor formally advise Mr. McCarthy by letter that, if within ten days he does not execute his lease, the Board will consider the negotiation with him at an end, and will proceed to let the premises to some other person."

Mr. McCarthy would not take the premises, and the Board, on 9th February, 1876, ordered:—

"That the local managers be requested to confer together as to the best way of letting the premises, and that the Board will be prepared, out of the money in their hands, to make an allowance to another tenant, or will apply it to pay for repairs undertaken and executed under the supervision of the local managers."

In the meantime no part of the £250, the expenditure of which the scheme had authorised (except £24, paid to put a house in order after a tenant had been evicted), had been laid out, and the premises had become so ruinous that the overseers on 4th April, 1876, passed a resolution:—

"That in their opinion it would be expedient to remove the dilapidated buildings intended to have been conveyed to Mr. McCarthy, and that the Commissioners be requested to authorise an outlay for the repairs of the almshouse generally."

The houses which Mr. McCarthy had offered to take then became completely ruinous. They were four houses, situated in Nicholas-street, Limerick, adjoining and in front of the almshouse and school, but not part of the same structure, though the almshouse and school were approached from the street by a passage through the dilapidated premises. These houses remained down to the date of our inquiry in ruins and unproductive, though it was stated that if they had been repaired they could have been very easily let for £10 to £12 per annum each.

On 19th July, 1876, the overseers resolved:—

"That a recommendation be made to the proper authority that the mixed school, at present carried on at the almshouse, be changed to an infant school for children from three to ten years old. That the Secretary be directed 'to advertise for and receive estimates on specifications, to be made by a competent person, for the thorough repair of the almshouse and school-rooms in Nicholas-street. That the exact sum available for the Apprentice Loan Fund be ascertained from the Commissioners in Dublin. That the Debtors' Trust Fund is not, nor can be made, practicable; and the trustees are of opinion that, with permission, the fund and accumulations thereon could be utilised in the manner in which Mr. Dawson, the High Sheriff, will explain personally to the Commissioners in Dublin, viz.—in building houses of one storey, high on the site of the dilapidated property belonging to the charity, and adjacent to the almshouse in Nicholas-street."

The Commissioners' agent, Mr. Widdess, got a professional man to prepare a specification, for which he paid £5, and obtained an estimate of between £140 and £150 for the whole repairs of the almshouse, and putting up a new gate in front. This was sent to the Commissioners for their approval, but they never took any step on it. The overseers also, on 26th October, 1876, forwarded to the Commissioners a tender from a Mr. Quin, but no action was taken upon it.

On 26th March, 1877, the overseers unanimously resolved:—

"That the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland be requested to ratify the tender for repairs of the almshouse and schools, Nicholas-street, which was accepted by the overseers, and forwarded to the Secretary of the Commissioners, on the 23rd day of October last, as the building is rapidly falling into decay, and that the Board be respectfully requested to take immediate action in this matter. It was resolved that the vacancies, of which there are two at present, for widows, or any further vacancies which may occur pending the proposed repair of the almshouse, be not filled up until the repairs are executed, owing to the dilapidated state of the rooms. The overseers again wish to record their inability to carry out the working and intentions of the Poor Debtors and Apprentice Loan Funds, and would, therefore, again suggest that steps should be taken to utilize the accumulations of those funds for the improvement of the charity, in the way of permanent repairs to the present property, or rebuilding houses now in a state of ruin."

No notice appeared to have been taken of this resolution, and after a year's delay, on 20th April, 1878, all the six overseers, including gentlemen of different denominations and ways of thinking, unanimously agreed to the following report:—

"We, the undersigned overseers of Dr. Jeremy Hall's charity, are of opinion, that the scheme of the Right Honorable the Master of the Rolls, for the management and administration of the trusts under Dr. Jeremy Hall's will, cannot be advantageously worked out. (1.) As regards that portion of the scheme (clause 4) which relates to the Loan Fund, we are of opinion that it cannot be worked, because there are actually in Limerick no apprentices of a class to whom we should be disposed to make loans, the practice of taking apprentices having been nearly, if not entirely, given up; (2.) but if there were at any time apprentices settling up in trade or business, we have good reason to believe that they would not accept small loans, if obliged to give such security as we should most certainly insist upon. (3.) The uselessness of this branch of the charity is demonstrated by the fact that when the Bishop of Limerick asked the trustees of the Jubilee Loan Fund, some time ago, whether that institution could be made more useful if its capital were increased, so as to enable it to grant a greater number of loans to poor persons, he was answered that it had already the means to give as much accommodation in this way as was prudent and desirable. (4.) The expense of a clerk and fees would assuredly swallow up the greater part, if not all, the sum under this head. Loan funds are now so numerous that deserving young apprentices have no difficulty in obtaining loans at a very low rate of interest with reasonable security. Secondly; with regard to clause No. 5, which states that the Commissioners may allocate annually £10, Irish, to redeem poor debtors, it seems plain to us that the new Debtors' Act renders this provision unnecessary.—Such being our opinion, we suggest that the sums of money devoted to those two branches of the charity should be set free, and made available for rebuilding those houses in front of the almshouse which are now roofless and in ruins. We have reason to believe that a large return would result from this outlay—probably as much as eight or ten per cent.

We further desire to mention that the Alma-house is in pressing need of considerable repairs, and beg again to call the attention of the Commissioners to the specification for this work already furnished to them on the 23rd October, 1876, and to the tender of Mr. John Quin, which we consider should be accepted.

On the completion of the alma-house, including the school-rooms and the teachers' apartments therein contained, we are of opinion that a suitable schoolmaster and mistress should be appointed, there being now, in consequence of the death of Mr. Russell, the former master, to whom a pension of £10 per annum had been paid, sufficient funds to obtain the services of such teachers as would render the schools efficient and attractive.—Dated at the Palace, Limerick, this 20th day of April, 1878.

This report was signed by the Bishop, the Mayor, the Dean, the High Sheriff, and Messrs. Robert Hunt and R. Vere O'Brien, the other two overseers, and was forwarded as their unanimous recommendation to the Commissioners, but the Dean stated that nothing whatever was done upon it.

In explanation of the silence and inaction of the Commissioners during the period from 9th February, 1876, when they "requested the local managers to confer," until 20th November, 1878, when the overseers' report of 20th April, 1878, seems to have been first taken into their consideration, the Secretary said that the Commissioners were "bound by the scheme of the Court of Chancery," "did not want to deal merely with one branch," and "were delaying to get an agreement as to what the new scheme should be." "It was obvious that the school was not working, and would not work, and that eventually it should be suppressed by the Court of Chancery; and then, instead of having two or three sickly branches of the charity, there would be one healthy branch—namely, the alma-house." He also said that "the Board was dealing with all the branches," but the only minute to which we were referred indicating that the Commissioners had considered the project at all was the following, dated 20th November, 1878, which was referred to by the Secretary as "stating all that was done in the matter."—

"Mr. Secretary Gernon informed the Board that this case was standing over for many months and that, as owing to the other business on the paper he had been unable to bring it forward, he had requested the Board to fix this day for its special consideration. He read the scheme as finally sanctioned by the Master of the Rolls, and dated 23rd May, 1871. He stated that of the four branches of the Charity as laid down by the scheme, the asylum was the only one which appeared to have been worked in conformity with it, and that even that had been made exclusively Protestant. As regarded the debtors' branch the changes in the law had rendered it impracticable. The Loan Branch had never been put into operation, and the £200 set apart for that purpose was still untouched, and the overseers had frequently expressed their inability to carry it out. The school had not been carried out on the principles laid down in the scheme, and the Secretary stated that he had received a return setting forth the ages of the children in attendance, from which it appears that some of them were only two, three, and four years of age, and that for a considerable period there had been no schoolmaster, but only a mistress. The Secretary further stated that the Dean of Limerick had expressed a wish that the school should be so reconstructed as to be placed in a position to avail itself of the advantages of the Intermediate Education Act of last session. Mr. Gernon laid before the Board resolutions passed by the overseers at meetings held in July, 1876, March, 1877, and May, 1878. These had set out at length the reasons why, in the opinion of the overseers, the loan branch could not be worked, and suggested that the sums devoted for this and the debtors' branch should be set free and made available for rebuilding the houses in front of the alma-house, which are now roodles and in ruins, and expressing their opinion that a return of eight to ten per cent. would probably result from the outlay; further stating that the alma-house was in pressing need of repairs, and suggesting that on the completion of the repairs of the alma-house, including the school and teachers' apartments, it would be possible from the income of the Charity to obtain the services of a good school master and mistress, and to make the school efficient and attractive. The Secretary stated that with the exception of Mr. Charles Dawson, who had filled the office of High Sheriff of the city of Limerick in 1876, and who had, during his year of office, taken a great interest in the Charity, the Mayor and High Sheriff had not, as a rule, interfered as ex-officio overseers with the working of the charity, although Mr. Hastings, the Mayor for the present year, and Mr. Hunt, the High Sheriff, attended the meeting of the overseers in April, 1878, and had, with the other overseers, signed the resolutions then adopted. The Secretary laid before the Board a communication addressed by Mr. Dawson to the overseers, dated 30th December, 1876, stating his opinion that the school was unnecessary as being in close contiguity to other good free schools, both for Protestants and Catholics, which did not exist in the time of the testator, but suggesting, in the event of its being thought necessary to continue it, that the fact of religious instruction in conformity with the doctrines of the Church of Ireland should be conspicuously placarded on the school premises. Mr. Dawson further expressed his opinion that the loan fund could be rendered most beneficial to young men in Limerick, who had completed their apprenticeship and who were about commencing business, and he suggested that the asylum is the portion of the Charity which ought to be maintained, improved, and extended. The Secretary informed the Board that the income of the charity consisted of an annual sum of about £150, derived from rents of houses, and other deteriorating property, in the old portion of the city of Limerick, and that there was also standing to the credit of the Commissioners in consols, £260 12s. 6d., and in New Threes £314 10s. 5d., and in cash arising from accumulated dividends on those two sums, £44 2s. 6d. There is also an unapplied balance of income in the hands of the local agent, of the present amount of which he was not aware. Ordered—

That the secretary inform the overseers that the Board having carefully considered the present position of this Charity is of opinion that the scheme will have to be revised, and that the Court of Chancery is alone competent to revise it. That a proceeding for this purpose is likely to be attended with considerable expense to the funds of the Charity, which will be much increased if the overseers do not agree on the modifications and changes that are necessary. That the Secretary request the overseers to hold a special meeting to consider the present position of the Charity, and to offer suggestions for the amendment of the scheme, and that in order to guide their deliberations, he inform them that the present views of the Board are, that the loan fund branch has not become impracticable, or that, if it has, it is owing to the overseers not having taken effectual steps to carry it out. That the school as at present conducted is not in accordance with the scheme. That it is not intended on the one hand to be an infant school, nor on the other to be an intermediate one, but that it should be one solely for primary education. That the Secretary throw out, for the consideration of the overseers, whether a portion of the income intended for educational purposes might not advantageously be applied in the establishment of a National school, and in supplementing the salaries of the teachers, and other kindred purposes. That if, for the reasons stated in the communication from Mr. Dawson, or for any other reasons, the overseers should be of opinion that it would not be possible successfully to keep up the school, they ought to consider whether the almshouse cannot be improved, and the benefits of it extended to a larger number of persons. That the Debtors' branch stand over for further consideration."

The Dean informed us that all the Mayors took an interest in the institution, and the statement that, with the exception of Mr. Dawson, the Mayors and High Sheriffs had not, as a rule, interfered, did not appear to be borne out by the evidence. The statements attributed to Mr. Dawson did not appear to have been communicated to the overseers, though apparently in some respects inconsistent with their views.

The substance of the resolution of the Commissioners was communicated to the overseers, with observations and suggestions from the Secretary, in the name of the Board, by the following letter from Mr. Gerson to the Dean of Limerick, dated 25th November, 1878.—

* VERY REV. DEAN SIR,—From the pressing nature of the business of this office, and the number of cases to be brought under the attention of the Commissioners, I found it impossible to get this case forward in the ordinary course. I therefore requested the Board to fix last Wednesday, the 20th instant, for its special consideration. The Board on that day applied itself attentively to the four branches of the charity, as propounded in the scheme formed by the Court of Chancery, and it gave the fullest consideration to the various suggestions and resolutions laid before it by the overseers, especially to their resolutions of April, 1878. I think you will more fully understand the entire case if you will allow me to deal with the four branches separately. First, the Debtors' Branch; this branch may, for the present, be excluded from consideration, as the amount provided for carrying it out will either merge into the general income or will be dealt with by the Board for other purposes, the general subject of similar charities being now under their special consideration. Second, the Loan Fund Branch. It is evident that this branch of the scheme has not been put into operation, but it appeared equally evident to the Board that no sufficiently serious efforts had ever been made by the overseers to give it effect. On the contrary, the Board was unable to disguise from itself, that from the very commencement there appeared to be a decided disinclination on the part of the overseers to work it, and it was of opinion that this, more than any inherent impracticability in the thing itself, has caused this branch of the charity to fail. Had the overseers been in a position to report that they had made active exertions to carry out this portion of the scheme, and that they had been unsuccessful, in that case there would have been satisfactory evidence of its impracticability, but in the absence of this, the Board is unable to arrive at the conclusion that it has become impossible to work it. Thirdly, the School. The Board regards the present position of this branch of the charity as most unsatisfactory, and it is of opinion that, as at present administered, it is not within either the letter or the policy of the scheme. It is, in fact, little else than an infant school. I mentioned to the Board the desire which you verbally expressed to me of having the school so reconstructed as to qualify it to participate in the benefits of the Intermediate Education Act of last session, but while the Board is of opinion that it was not intended to be an infant school, so neither was it intended to be anything but a school for primary education. The Board would wish to suggest, for the consideration of the overseers, whether the portion of the income set apart for a school might not with advantage be applied to the establishment of a good National school, and towards supplementing the salaries of the school teachers, and other like purposes. The Board, however, understands that the real difficulty in the way of maintaining this school is its close contiguity to other excellent schools, both for Protestants and Roman Catholics, and this difficulty may be attended with very considerable expense to the funds of the Board, and probably will be, if the overseers are not able to agree among themselves upon some recommendations which may be considered advisable and satisfactory by the Board, and by the Court. The Board is, therefore, of opinion that a special meeting of the overseers should be convened—care being taken that notice shall be given to each member—that the entire position of the Charity should be carefully considered, and that the conclusions arrived at, which will be the more weighty if unanimous, should be forwarded for the consideration of the Commissioners."

Though the Secretaries appeared to be under a different impression, the Dean stated that there had never been any difference of opinion among the overseers as to the Loan Fund, and in reply to Mr. Gerson's letter they repeated their opinions that the Loan Fund branch was impracticable, adding, as a proof, that the "Jubilee Loan Fund," existing in Limerick, had a considerable sum in hands which could not be lent out with advantage. They also unanimously approved of the proposal to allocate the income intended for the school to strengthen and improve the alma-house branch of the Charity. On 18th December, 1878, the Commissioners ordered—

"That the Board's solicitor be instructed to bring the scheme of 3rd May, 1871, before the Court, with a view to its revision and alteration in such form as Board's counsel may advise; that the petition pray the Court to abolish the present school as unnecessary and impracticable, and to apply the portion of the income heretofore expended on the school towards the support and maintenance of the alma-house; also that the Board shall be at liberty to expend a sum sufficient to put the alma-house into proper repair, and, if necessary, to enlarge the accommodation; that it further pray that the portion of the income heretofore set aside for poor debtors shall also be applied in sustinment of the alma-house; that the loan fund branch of the charity, and the fact of its non-application by the present overseers, be specially brought under the notice of the Court, with a view to its deciding whether it will continue it or alter its future application."

*Evid.,

Proceedings were soon afterwards instituted in Chancery accordingly, and were still pending at the date of our inquiry (April 12, 1880), but "the Vice Chancellor had stopped the case for affidavits as to whether the school could be worked or not."

Meanwhile the alma-house, though temporary repairs were done by the agent, was deteriorating, and the school building was in such a state of repair that the overseers "could carry on nothing with any satisfaction." Dean Bunbury stated that the actual fabric of the alma-house and school-rooms was in want of ordinary repair, "tumbling down, and getting worse and worse every day." Mr. MacDonnell appeared to be under the impression that these complaints related only to the ruined houses, and that the alma-house was kept in sufficient repair by Mr. Widdess, the agent, but that gentleman stated that he had communicated to the Commissioners the state of the property, "particularly the alma-house, and the ruins in front of it; the houses in the occupation of tenants were pretty well seen after." He showed Mr. Gernon the state of the premises, and the condition the alma-house was in, three or four years before our inquiry, but nothing was done in consequence. Mr. Widdess himself did nothing "but some temporary repairs, putting on slates, and clearing gutters;" these repairs were paid for out of the cash in hands accruing from the rents.

*Evid.,

On July 7th, 1879, an affidavit to be made in support of the application for the new scheme was approved of as containing the unanimous opinion of the overseers, and they, at the same time, resolved—

"That the efficiency of the charity may be best promoted by devoting all its available funds to the maintenance and improvement of the alma-house, and with a view to the attainment of this object the overseers recommend that some of the funds of the charity should be applied, without further loss of time, to the rebuilding of the houses in front of the alma-house, from the rents of which a considerable addition to the funds of the charity would arise."

It was also proposed by the Mayor, seconded by the Dean, and resolved—

"That it is absolutely necessary that a portion of the funds of this charity be expended on the repairs of the alma-house."

Evid., 16641.

We called the attention of Mr. MacDonnell to this resolution, and to the circumstances that it was adopted five years after the urgency of the repairs was brought to the notice of the Commissioners, and three and a-half years after Mr. Quin's tender for the execution of them had been unanimously recommended for acceptance. In reply to the question whether anything had been done to repair the houses, he replied—

"There was not, because the Board considered it absolutely necessary to manage the charity by a scheme of the Court."

16631-34.

And when asked why nothing was done upon the request of the overseers of the 26th March, 1877, for "immediate action" on the tender for repairs forwarded on the 23rd October, 1876, he said—

"Because the Board were waiting for some unanimous decision to be come to by the overseers."

"The alma-house and school . . . was in sufficient repair, but the Commissioners wanted the authority of the Court of Chancery to abolish the school, and then they would expend money in re-modelling the house. They naturally said they would consolidate the fund."

At the date of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, the rental of the charity estate was £208 1s., the net annual income from land was £162 12s. 10d., and that from trust funds was £11 7s. 5d. The education in the boys' school was then in amount and quality rather above the average, and the school was, in many respects, conducted on good principles. In the girls' school the standard of education was very low. In 1857 there were forty-five boys and thirty-two girls on the roll, and the master received £36 18s. 5d., and the schoolmistress £21 per annum from the endowment.

At the date of our inquiry the rental was £165 18s. 2d., having been reduced by the loss of the rents of the four houses which had fallen into ruin. The only "trust funds" were the funds mentioned in the minutes of 20th November, 1878. The disbursements were made by the agent, who out of the endowment paid £40 to eight widows, inmates of the almshouse, £20 to the schoolmistress, and £10 to the Dean of Limerick, as chaplain of the institution, under the founder's will. Other outgoings brought up the expenditure to £130 2s. 7d. In the returns made to us it was stated that but one school was now maintained, it was a "mere infant school," and the education was "merely rudimentary." The average attendance was eighteen. The pupils were between the ages of four and eleven years, and all were Protestants. There was no schoolmaster, and the schoolmistress received a salary of £20 under the scheme of 1871.

Cork.—Rahan Parochial Schools: Cotter Endowments.

These endowments are an instance of those of which the accounts are annually submitted to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and we therefore mention here the somewhat remarkable history of the Charity, although the schools benefited by it are "Parochial" and "National" Schools.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, mentioned as an endowment in operation, but in an unsatisfactory condition, "Rahan Parochial School," to which John Rogerson Cotter and Denis Buckley, on 21st March, 1821, granted a site upon which school buildings, valued at £7 8s. 6d. per annum, were erected at a cost of £230 15s. 3d. derived from the "Lord Lieutenant's Building Fund" and other sources. The object of the endowment was stated to be "for a resident schoolmaster, to be a member of the Established Church, to teach children nominated by the Minister or Grantor English and arithmetic, and to children of members of the Established Church the Holy Scriptures and Church Catechism, under regulation of the Minister." Among the "endowments not in operation" the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, also mentioned a devise by Henry Johnston Cotter, by will proved 11th June, 1833, of lands containing 221a. 1s. 29p. and producing a net annual income of £100 11s. 3d., "for the promotion of Scriptural Education in the parish of Rahan." It was reported:—

Rep., Vol. III., p. 296.

Ibid. p. 397.

"The whole produce of estate has been hitherto absorbed by costs in Court of Chancery. There is now (1857) a small balance to the credit of the Charity, which, with the sum payable by the Receiver, will be applied to object of testator without delay."

Among the "endowments lost," the Royal Commissioners, upon the authority of the "Books of Bequest Board," mentioned a bond for £500 given by the same testator for the same object, part of which was "expended on schools in parish of Rahan; the rest lost by insolvency of the obligor of the bond."

Ibid. p. 311.

The lists furnished to us by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests contained no reference to these endowments, and we failed to ascertain what had become of the "balance" mentioned in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, but we found that the landed estate was, at the date of our inquiry, under the management of the Rev. George E. Cotter, who furnished his accounts annually to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and that the net income was, apparently with their sanction, distributed among several schools in the parish of Rahan, including National Schools in which "Scriptural education" was given to children of different denominations. The schools which appeared to receive benefits from the endowments included the following:—No. 1, Rahan "Parochial School." The buildings of this school contained male and female school-rooms, and teachers' apartments, and were valued at about £5 per annum. They were erected in 1824, and were kept in repair at the cost of the endowment, from which the master (who was the only teacher), received a salary of £30. The day school was attended by 15 pupils (12 members of the Church of Ireland and 3 Roman Catholics), and the night school was attended by 24 pupils, all Roman Catholics. The books used were those of the National Board; the Protestant children were instructed in Scripture by the minister of the parish, and the Roman Catholic children who attended the school read the Douay

Version of the New Testament." A Scriptural examination was held annually. It was stated in the master's return that the lands constituting the endowment contained 222 acres, and were let to three tenants at a rental of £118 10s., the Poor Law valuation being £76 10s. per annum. The rents were collected by the agent of the trustee, and lodged in bank, and the disbursements were drawn quarterly, the accounts being forwarded annually to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. No. 2. Kusterry "National Male and Female Schools." These schools were possessed of a site held rent-free for ever, containing 1s. 2s. 0p.; the master also held 3s. 0s. 0p. adjoining, at a rent of £3; he received £26 per annum towards his salary from the endowment, from which "some other expenses for repairs, &c.," were also defrayed. The school premises were stated to have been built in 1876 by the "Rev. George E. Cotter, trustee," and to be kept in good repair from the endowment fund. The secular instruction was "according to the rules of the National Board of Education. At the time set apart for Religious Instruction the Holy Scriptures are read by all those who have attained a suitable proficiency in reading." There were, at the date of our inquiry, 62 pupils on the roll of the male school, all Roman Catholics. The female school was held in the same building, and appeared to be conducted in the same manner. The teacher received £8 per annum from the endowment in part payment of her salary. No. 3. Lazally "National School." This was a "mixed" school, built in 1862, by the Rev. John McCarthy, Parish Priest of Mallow (now Roman Catholic Bishop of Cloyne), with the aid of local subscriptions. The manager, at the date of our inquiry, was the Venerable Archdeacon O'Regan, F.R., Mallow. The head teacher received £8 per annum from the endowment, in addition to a salary of £35, and results' fees amounting to about £22, received from the National Board, and school fees amounting to about £12 per annum. The assistant teacher received £4 per annum from the endowment, in addition to other emoluments received from the National Board, amounting to about £38 per annum. There were, at the date of our inquiry, 112 pupils on the roll, all Roman Catholics. They received, in addition to the usual secular instruction, religious instruction in the "Douay Scripture, Catechism, &c."

Kerry: Dingle National School.—Dr. Foley's Endowment.

This endowment is one now applied for the benefit of a school of a different character from that which was the object of the testator's bounty. It was at one time brought under the notice of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, and was supposed by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, to be held by that Board. This was not the case, except as to one sum of £100, but we mention the endowment here, as its history affords another instance of the mode of dealing with educational charities adopted by the Board, and of the defective provision for the safety and due application of charitable funds. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, mentioned among the "endowments not in operation" the Dingle National School, which was stated to be entitled, under the will of the Rev. Dr. Foley, proved 20th December, 1849, to £40 "rent or annuity paid by Bequest Board, and £60 accumulation invested," also to be possessed of a site containing 1s. 0s. 0p., under a grant from Catherine Fitzgerald in 1834, and of school premises valued at £10 per annum, provided from a building grant of £162 from the National Board and subscriptions amounting to £127 13s. 10d. The object of Dr. Foley's bequest was "for clothing the poor children attending the Dingle National School," and the school was stated to have been "discontinued in consequence of the establishment of a Christian Brothers' School in the town." Of the school-house it was reported:—"The house seems to be generally in good condition; but in consequence of its not having been in operation as a school for several years, and no repairs having been made in it during that period, the windows and slates are becoming defective, but these might be repaired at present at a small expense. The house was occupied for some years as an auxiliary workhouse, and in 1853 a sum of £10 was granted by the Board of Guardians for its repair; but this sum does not appear to have been expended upon it." It was further stated:—"The Christian Brothers attracted to their school all the Roman Catholic children who had been attending the National school; the Protestant children are educated in the Parochial school in Dingle."

In consequence of complaints that this endowment was not applied for the benefit of a school of the class which was intended, we made inquiry of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests in reference to it, and were informed by their Secretary, Mr. Gerson, by letter dated 21st October, 1880, that the Board had not, since 1857, had standing to its credit any sum or annuity for the purposes of the Dingle school, nor had it had "any share in the administration of the charity, save as regards a sum of £100 which was lodged to its credit, under exceptional circumstances, in April, 1854, by Mr. Collis, receiver over the property on which the annuity of £40 was charged."

Letter from
W. Gerson, Esq., 21st
Oct., 1880.

Mr. Gernon enclosed the following minute of a meeting of the Commissioners held on 26th March, 1863:—

"Mr. Secretary Gernon read letter from the Right Rev. Dr. Moriarty, R.C. Bishop, forwarding a cheque upon the Provincial Bank for £188 1s. 3d., which he desired should be placed to the credit of this charity, being a balance received from Mrs. Collis, widow of Mr. Collis, upon foot of an account for rents of houses in Tralee. Read also Mr. Gernon's reply returning the cheque, as contrary to the Commissioners' rule, and desiring to know upon what grounds Dr. Moriarty desired that the Board should receive the deposit. Dr. Moriarty's reply thereto read, stating that £100 had been received by the Commissioners on 16th February, 1854. Minutes of old Board read, also those of 12th January, 23rd April, 5th May, and 28th October, 1853, 19th January and 16th February, 1854, by the latter of which it appeared that the sum of £100 had been lodged for the purpose of securing the Board against costs of preparing a deed to appoint new trustees, but which deed was not prepared, and the money was subsequently paid to the patron of the school at Tralee. Ordered—That Bishop Moriarty be informed that the Board has no authority to accept the money, as proposed by him, and that the lodgment referred to was made under peculiar circumstances, and does not afford a precedent for receiving money in this instance."

Mr. Gernon stated in his letter that the Board, having decided that the annuity was properly payable to the local patron of the Dingle school, and not to the Board, the Commissioners paid over the £100 in their hands to the Rev. Eugene O'Sullivan, the then patron and manager of the school, "with the exception of a small sum required for costs incurred." He explained that the Board declined to accept payment of the arrears and accumulations of the annuity, "it not having at that time the power of accepting money and annuities conferred on it in 1867 by the Act 30 & 31 Vic., cap. 54, sec. 9, and subsequently by 34 & 35 Vic., cap. 101, sec. 11."

Oct., 1860.

It did not appear that after the passing of these statutes any step was taken by the Commissioners in reference to the annuity or the arrears and accumulations. We were informed by the manager of the Christian Brothers' School, Dingle (vide supra, p. 127), that the trustees of that school now receive the annuity, and apply the endowment towards clothing the poor children in attendance at their school.

IX—MISCELLANEOUS SCHOOLS.

County of Dublin: The College of St. Columba, Whitechurch.

This school, founded "for a system of religious education in strict accordance with the principles and formularies of the Established Church, the course of instruction to be of the same nature with the great public schools of England, and provision to be made for the education of Irish speaking clergymen," was stated by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, to possess school premises and lands of the extent of 54a. 2s. 12r., of the annual value of £105. The house and lands were purchased in 1848, the school having occupied Lord Boyne's house at Stackallan from its foundation in 1843 until 1849. There were, in 1857, 31 pupils on the roll, all boarders; the fees charged were £84 per annum. The salary of the Head Master or "Warden," was £200, and the five teachers under him received salaries amounting altogether to nearly £400.

8, Rep. Vol.
III., p. 36.

It was stated to us that the school was founded in 1843, when a considerable sum was raised by public subscriptions, the late Lord Primate being the principal contributor. In 1849, a lease for 999 years of the house and fifty-two acres, subject to a rent of £100, was purchased for £3,500. The remainder of the subscriptions had been expended, before the date of our inquiry, in repairing, improving, and adding to the school buildings, the value of which was stated to be £15,000. The Warden stated that during the "bad times," the Rev. J. H. Todd, D.D., had kept the college up, and "but for the Lord Primate it would have sunk long ago."

Revd., 3512.

The constitution of the college is strictly collegiate. The governing body consists of a Warden and Fellows, who are not to be less than four, and were at the date of our inquiry fifteen in number. The chief business of the Fellows, two of whom are also trustees, is to elect the Warden, who, when appointed, summons and presides over the meetings of the governing body. The present trustees are the Archbishop of Dublin, and Evelyn P. Shirley, Esq.

Rev., 3509-

It was stated that there was no endowment to meet current expenses. The income derived from fees amounted, at the date of our inquiry, to £5,000 per annum, of which about £1,600 was paid to the staff, about £1,500 was spent upon provisions, and £1,400 on rent and household expenses, repairs, &c.; leaving a balance of £400, which was expended on improvements. An exhibition of £84 a year, tenable for two years in Trinity College, Dublin, is attached to the college, being provided by the interest on a sum of £700 raised by subscription in memory of Dr. Todd. This fund was invested in Dublin Wicklow and Wexford Railway Preference Shares.

In the year 1875, £2,000 was expended in building a new school-room, and in the present year a new chapel has been erected, for which a special subscription was raised. The Warden's salary was still nominally £290, but a capitation fee of 25 on each boy had been added, and with advantages in board and house accommodation his emoluments were estimated at £330. The assistant teachers, six in number, received fixed salaries varying from £220 to £100; and amounting altogether to £1,000, in addition to which the Warden thought it would be well to allow them capitation fees: it would appear from Mr. Mahaffy's report, that this has since been done. At the date of our inquiry there were 86 boys on the roll, of whom 7 were day boys. All were members of the Church of Ireland.

The warden stated that of the boys about one-third were the sons of independent country gentlemen, one-third sons of clergymen, and the remainder sons of professional men. He did not take any day boys except the sons of neighbouring gentry, and he limited the admission of pupils strictly to members of the Church of Ireland. The charge for boarders had been eighty guineas per annum, but on the recommendation of the Warden, soon after his appointment, was reduced to sixty guineas, as the number of pupils was found to be declining; and this was the highest charge at any other school in Ireland. The Warden stated that the course was based on the English school system; classics were undoubtedly made the chief subject of study; great prominence was also given to English literature and composition, all the boys learnt French, and a very small proportion German; any boy who much disliked Greek was allowed to substitute for it modern languages; there was provision for teaching a natural science class which, at the date of our inquiry, numbered nearly twenty boys, the subjects being—botany, chemistry, physics, astronomy, and geology. Vocal and instrumental music were also taught, with special reference to Church music. In 1854 the teaching of the Irish language had been discontinued, being considered the less likely of the two objects of the foundation to be successfully carried out, and the funds being insufficient for both.

Mr. Mahaffy reports that the education was conducted in this peculiar way, that each tutor or assistant taught all the subjects in turn, but taking the head class in his own speciality, and the whole school working at the same subjects simultaneously. The tutors also took great part in the discipline of the boys, and in the supervision of the dormitories; they were all English public school men by education, and their position was made so secure and attractive by the warden that he succeeded in obtaining men of good standing and manners, such as are found in good English schools; they also had a direct interest in the success of the school, one quarter of their income fluctuating with the number of the boys. From his first examination it did not appear to him that the "system of having every master teaching everything worked well in science." He found the boys' answering singularly uneven, and the little boys seemed better for their age than most of the older ones. In classics the education was, no doubt, more ambitious than in other Irish schools. Credit was given for essays and for English verse translations, as well as for compositions in Greek and Latin, and this ought to produce better scholars. There were also many special prizes for extraneous subjects, such as Divinity and Irish antiquities, but he did not meet with any remarkable answering. The dormitories were practically full under the active and stirring management of the present Warden, but Mr. Mahaffy thought that the school ought to be far larger. The dormitories and school-rooms were well ventilated, spacious, and very well kept. The only room actually untidy was the boys' library, which looked uncomfortable and little used. There was an excellent racquet-court, and also two Eton five-courts, but the present boys had but little taste for these games, and the courts looked deserted. There was an excellent swimming bath within the grounds, and plenty of water at high pressure from the mountain; nothing was wanting for the boys' comfort but a gymnasium and a workshop.

Mr. Mahaffy remarks unfavourably upon "the harsh system of punishments adopted by the warden."

Antrim; Belfast Academy.

The Belfast Academy was founded as a boarding and day school in 1785, by public subscriptions amounting to £228 13s. 6d. Irish; the original subscribers being called "Patrons." A plot of ground in the town of Belfast, held upon lease, was purchased in the names of three trustees for £1,243 19s. 1d., and the amount of the subscription with a further sum of £700 Irish, borrowed on mortgage from the trustees of a fund left by Mr. Maxwell, for the purpose, amongst others, of educating ministers for the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, was expended in acquiring the site and erecting the school buildings.

Rep., p. 139.

In 1803 and 1822 further mortgages (amounting together to £700 Irish) were granted to the Rev. Dr. Bruce, the then Principal of the academy, to secure advances made by him for the purposes of the institution, on the terms that while he held the office of Principal, interest should not be charged. The Rev. Dr. Bryce, the Principal, who was appointed in 1836, and still held that position at the date of our inquiry, informed us that the loan from "The Maxwell Trustees" was obtained upon an understanding that while the premises were used as a place of education, no interest should be charged, but the deed contained no covenant to that effect, and no record of the transaction appeared in the minutes of the institution. No interest was ever paid upon the Maxwell mortgage, but after Dr. Bruce's retirement in 1822, interest upon his mortgages was paid by his successors. Subsequently to Dr. Bryce's appointment the trustees advanced a sum of £1,400, with which sum they paid the amount due upon Dr. Bruce's mortgages (taking a transfer of the securities), and at a cost of £700 they also procured the conversion of the original lease (then within thirty-nine years of expiration) into a perpetually renewable interest, subject to a rent of £10 5s. and renewal fines amounting to about £2 per annum.

The buildings got into disrepair, payment of the mortgages was demanded, and other attempts to raise funds having proved unavailing, the Principal and masters, in 1834, made an arrangement with the trustees by which they undertook to raise funds to pay off the debts and repair the buildings, upon condition of their being admitted to a share in the management of the academy. A sum of about £1,200 was then collected, and was applied towards payment of the amount due upon the mortgages. The balance was provided by one of the trustees, and the mortgages were assigned to the Principal and one trustee upon trust (subject to the amount advanced by the trustee) for the Principal and masters, subject to regulations for the maintenance of the academy. In 1861 it became necessary to provide for the rebuilding or removal of the institution, and owing to doubts as to the subsistence of the Maxwell mortgage, proceedings were taken in the Court of Chancery, by which an order was made on the 12th May, 1864, declaring the property discharged from the Maxwell mortgage. A scheme for the future management of the academy was adopted in 1876 by which two free scholarships were instituted to be called the Maxwell scholarships.

App K,
p. 336.

Since 1865 the original site of the academy, which had become very valuable but was unsuitable for a school, has been let at a gross annual rental of £955, one tenant paying, in addition to a rent, a fine of £1,500. The rent of another tenant, amounting to £580 a year, was reducible to £180 by payment of £8,000 in instalments payable in 1878, 1879, 1880, and 1881, after which the gross rental of the school estate will be £565 a year. A fresh subscription was opened in 1865, and a sum of £1,328 2s. 4d. was collected, which was lent "on good security at call" until 1876; at the date of our inquiry a charge for debts had been paid off, and there remained a balance of £1,128 7s. 9d.

In 1878 arrangements were made for the removal of the academy to the suburbs of Belfast, and a new site was selected near the Antrim-road, 2A. 2A. 1½p. in extent, at an annual rent of £143 10s.; deducting this rent and the head-rent of the original site from the rental of £555, there remains a net yearly rental of about £400 as an endowment for the new school.

8837.

The contract for the new buildings, which were in progress at the date of our inquiry, amounts to £9,100, and it is proposed to meet the outlay upon them by the fine mentioned above and the balance of the subscription fund. The patrons expect to have about £1,000 surplus, with which they propose to build a master's house.

The management of the Institution is to be regulated by the scheme adopted by the Court of Chancery: subscribers of fifty guineas and upwards are to be Patrons of the Academy, and to elect from their own number a Board of Directors, consisting of a warden, two vice-wardens, a treasurer, a secretary, and six others. The warden, vice-wardens, and three directors are to retire annually, and not to be re-eligible for a year. The Principal and masters are to be chosen by the Directors from a list containing not more than five nor less than three names submitted by the "Board of Masters," and the Directors are to have the power of dismissing the Principal, vice-principal, or any master for immorality, neglect of duty, or incorrigible inefficiency. The property of the school is vested in three trustees, two of whom are chosen by the Patrons, and one by the "Board of Masters": these trustees are ex-officio members of the Board of Directors.

The Academy, when opened in the new buildings, is to comprise four "Schools," viz.: the Classical, Mathematical, English, and Writing School. Each is to be distinct from the others, and governed by its own head master, who will receive all the fees from his department. The Principal is charged with the general superintendence of the establishment, and has a veto on the appointment of the assistant-masters and on the books chosen for use. The present Principal is also head master of the classical school, but the offices are in future to be distinct. M. Jules Festa, formerly French master in the academy, made a statement to the effect that there were to have been five schools (the French school being the fifth), and that his name had been improperly omitted from the scheme settled by the Court of Chancery. It appeared, however, from evidence given to us that M. Festa had been fully heard, through his counsel, by the Vice-Chancellor in 1876, and that the Vice-Chancellor declined to vary his order.

The patrons are entitled to nominate free pupils, or pupils at fees reduced according to a scale by which each subscriber may claim free tuition for such pupils at the rate of 5 per cent. upon the sum subscribed. Subscribers of 200 guineas may found scholarships to be awarded by public competition. At the date of our inquiry only three persons had subscribed sums sufficient to entitle them to nominate pupils to absolutely free places. The Maxwell scholarships are tenable for four years, and entitle their holders, who are persons intended for the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, to instruction without charge in all the departments of the academy.

No religious instruction is given, and no inquiries are made as to the religious tenets of the pupils of the academy.

The new school buildings will consist when finished of seven school-rooms, a library, board-room, museum, gallery of fine arts, and other apartments, with a common hall, and are intended to accommodate from 400 to 500 pupils. It is also intended that the Principal shall receive boarders.

*Evid.,

The fees to be paid by the pupils are for classics, £4 4s.; mathematics, including natural philosophy and arithmetic, £4 4s.; arithmetic alone, £2 2s.; geography, with natural history, £2 2s.; writing, £2 2s.; English, £2 2s. These fees are to be paid to the several masters, £14 14s. being the highest charge for any one boy. There is to be a good natural history museum.

The office of Principal was the only place on the Board of Masters which had been filled. The head masters of the four schools were not to be appointed until the buildings were finished.

The Academy was not absolutely closed at the date of our inquiry; school work was carried on in two rooms temporarily hired for the purpose, but the number of pupils was stated to be about 18 or 19, "only a few boys being kept together under interim assistant-masters." Mr. Mahaffy states that he did not consider it necessary to inspect a school in a position which was so transitory, but that it was evident that this Academy ought to be one of the most important schools in Ireland. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that it was then not in an efficient state, and that the buildings were in a discreditable state of dilapidation, and ill-suited for school purposes.

Antrim; Belfast Royal Academical Institution.

*Com., 1854-8,

The Belfast Royal Academical Institution was founded in 1808 as the result of another voluntary effort on the part of the inhabitants of Belfast to establish a great intermediate school on principles similar to those adopted by the founders of the Belfast Academy. Funds amounting to £25,000 were raised for the establishment of the Institution, and a site of about 7½ acres was granted, in perpetuity, by Lord Donegall, at a yearly rent of £22 15s. 10d.

In 1810 an Act of Parliament incorporated and regulated the institution, the objects of which were declared to be to afford a classical and mercantile education, and to teach mathematics, natural philosophy, logic, metaphysics, belles lettres, moral philosophy, chemistry, botany, agriculture, and other branches of science. A collegiate department was established in connexion with the institution, in which a Professorship in Divinity was founded to prepare students for the ministry of the Presbyterian Church; in 1835 a medical school was added.

8941.*

The Institution as the Presbyterian Theological College received the benefit of a Government grant of £1,500 per annum, until the establishment of the Queen's College, Belfast, but its welfare was affected by the division which took place in the Presbyterian Church in 1830, and on the withdrawal of the Parliamentary grant in 1849 the "Collegiate Department" ceased to exist.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the institution was then much crippled for want of funds, and its efficiency impaired. The whole sum subscribed for its establishment was expended on the buildings and requisites, and nothing was left for repairs and other outgoings. It appeared from the return made to us by the Secretary that at the date of our inquiry the buildings and fittings were valued at about £16,000, additional class-rooms and a laboratory for the science school had been erected and fitted up in 1879 at a cost of about £3,000, and the other property of the Institution consisted of a building formerly used as a barrack, of which a grant in perpetuity was obtained from the Government at a rent of £11 2s. 7d., for the purposes of the former medical school, but which, after the discontinuance of the medical school, was let at a profit rent of £48 17s. 5d., and of a profit rent of £67 16s. derived from house property in Belfast under the will of John Park; part of the buildings of the Institution was let to the science and art department at a rent of £80, and thus an income from endowments, amounting to £176 13s. 5d. per annum, was received.

A donation of 6,000 dollars, invested in "Seven per cent. Bonds of Equitable Trust Co., New York," yielded an income of from £80 to £80 a year, which was applicable to the education of four boys selected from the Belfast Model school. Under the will of the late Mr. John Porter, two exhibitions of £25 each were derived from an investment of £1,700 Government Three per cent. stock, and two exhibitions of £5 each were payable to pupils obtaining Scholarships at entrance into the Queen's College, Belfast.

A subscription of twenty guineas constitutes a "proprietor," and a subscription of £105 confers the right to nominate one free pupil. The amount of subscriptions fluctuates very much from year to year; in some years little or nothing has been received, and again, in other years, to meet some special requirements, large sums have been obtained. Since 1857 over £4,000 had been collected, of which £2,000 was spent on the additional class-rooms and laboratory mentioned above, and the remainder was applied in paying off a mortgage, and upon current expenses.

The Institution comprised six independent schools; viz., the schools for Classics, Mathematics, English, Modern Languages, Writing, and Natural Science. Though mainly a day school, two boarding-houses were attached, which, at the date of our inquiry, were kept by the English and the Classical Master respectively, each house being held by the Master from the Board of Management at a rent of £50, which was expended on repairs carried out under directions from the Board, and under the superintendence of the English Master.

At the date of our inquiry there were 230 pupils on the roll, and 7 assistants, in addition to the masters of the six "Schools."

The master of the English school had seven boarders and the master of the classical school fifteen, though there was accommodation for forty or forty-five in each house. The charge for boarders was limited to £60 per annum.

The masters received no fixed salaries, their emoluments being derived from the pupils' fees, which were payable quarterly at the following rates:—For Latin, Greek, Ancient History, and Ancient Geography, one guinea; for Mathematics, including Arithmetic and Natural Philosophy, one guinea; Arithmetic alone, 15s. to 17s. 6d.; for English, in the Junior Classes, 15s. to 17s. 6d., and in the Senior Classes, 17s. 6d. to one guinea; for French and German, one guinea; for Writing, Book-keeping, or Short-hand, 10s., and for Writing and Book-keeping, or Writing and Short-hand, 13s.; for Chemistry, Geology, or both, one guinea for the Senior Class, and 7s. 6d. for the Junior; Practical Chemistry, one guinea; Biology, one guinea; Botany, 10s. No boy was regarded as a regular pupil of the institution who did not attend at least three schools.

The property and business of the school were managed by a Board of Managers and Visitors, elected by the "Proprietors," and meeting once a month. The masters were appointed by the Board, and each master had exclusive control of his own department, and appointed such under-masters as he thought proper.

We were informed that the non-sectarian principle had been carried out to the fullest extent; that "no cognizance was taken of religious profession," and no questions were asked of either masters or day pupils as to religion; the religion of the boarders was known only to the masters of the respective houses, from the instructions of the parents as to what place of worship their sons should attend. The English Master had had Episcopalian, Presbyterians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics living in his house; they attended their own Sabbath schools and places of worship, and he did not interfere with their religion in any way. Until recently it had usually happened that one of the masters was a Roman Catholic.

The attendance was stated to have fallen off in recent years. The institution suffered some loss by the discontinuance of the Collegiate Department, but the decline was chiefly attributed to the establishment of new denominational schools. The Roman Catholics now have St. Malachy's College; the Methodists have their college; and a Church of Ireland school has recently been established in the town.

Mr. Mahaffy reports that he found "the answering in the various subjects he took up excellent, and that there could be no doubt that the teaching was most efficient." The Senior Wranglership at Cambridge was taken in 1879 and 1880 by former pupils of the institution.

SCHOOLS RECEIVING AID FROM THE IRISH SOCIETY.

Minutes of the
Schools
Rep., p.
163.

The history, nature, and amount of the support formerly afforded to education in the North of Ireland by the Irish Society is stated in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8. In 1856 the Society expended £1,351 in salaries to schoolmasters, £150 in exhibitions, and £333 12s. in repairs of Londonderry Free School. Their expenditure was distributed among ninety schools, of which fifty-seven received grants not exceeding £5 each. The schools were not limited to Londonderry, 266 10s. having been expended in Donegal, and £10 in Tyrone. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that, except in the case of the school at Coleraine, the Irish Society had taken no means to insure any adequate inspection of the schools which it mainly or exclusively supported; that the mode in which disbursements had been made was unsatisfactory, grants having been given without sufficient discrimination in the first instance, and without due regard afterwards to obtain the advantages which they were intended to produce. Coleraine school was reported to be in a very satisfactory state.

Returns.

From returns furnished to us by the Secretary to the Irish Society, it appeared that in the year 1874-5 the Society expended on Foyle College £675, including salaries of masters and exhibitions in Trinity College, Dublin; £400 on Magee College, being £250 for the Professors of Natural Philosophy, and £150 for general expenses; £193 on their schools at Coleraine for boys, girls, and infants, which schools were entirely maintained by the Society; £200 on the Coleraine Academical Institution; and £702 on eighty-eight primary National and Sunday schools, in grants varying in amount from £30 to £8 10s. each. In that year the total expenditure of the Society in support of education was £2,470.

In the following year, 1875-6, they expended on Foyle College £783 5s., on the Coleraine schools £325 10s., and on Magee College £450, and their total expenditure in support of education was £3,148. In the year 1876-7 they expended on Foyle College £719, and, in addition, paid to the late head master £79 for furniture, school fittings, and compensation for loss by a reduction of the scale of fees; they spent £345 10s. on the Coleraine schools; and £500 on Magee College; they reduced the grant to the Coleraine Academical Institution from £300 to £150, and their total expenditure in support of education was £3,797 13s. In the year 1877-8 they expended £773 10s. 7d. on Foyle College; £540 on the Coleraine schools; £450 on Magee College; £250 on the Coleraine Academical Institution; and £270 on Londonderry Academical Institution, and their total expenditure in support of education was £3,039 7s. 7d. In the year 1878-9 they expended on Foyle College £985; on the Londonderry Academical Institution £450; on the Coleraine schools £565 8s. 6d.; on the Coleraine Academical Institution £250; and on Magee College £350, and their total expenditure in support of education was £3,518 10s. 6d.

Professor Leebody, who had been a member of the Board of Management of the Londonderry Academical Institution, stated that the Society's grants were continued during pleasure; that they were occasionally made for three years, at the expiration of which period a new application had to be made. He stated that he had been constantly on deputations from different establishments to the Irish Society, and had invariably found them exceedingly anxious to enter into all claims, and very prompt in rendering assistance to local schemes.

Evid.,
12031.

The Rev. James M. Rodgers, a Presbyterian minister, one of the trustees of the Magee College, and a member of the Board of Management of the Londonderry Academical Institution, stated that, in the opinion of Presbyterians, the district of Londonderry was uncommonly well supplied with educational facilities, for which the Irish Society was very much to be thanked, but that the Presbyterian community thought the proportion of grants made to them by the Society was not very satisfactory, and he contrasted the grants made to the Londonderry Academical Institution with the much larger grants made to Foyle College. He was satisfied with the distribution of grants from the Society amongst the Presbyterian primary schools, and stated that any Presbyterian who established a respectable school in the neighbourhood got a grant from the Society if he asked for it, and if the Society was in funds.

Evid.,
12142-63.

The Rev. Thomas Witherow, a professor in the Magee College, stated that the Presbyterians felt that their interests were not sufficiently consulted in the distribution of the funds of the Irish Society, and that the distinction made between different denominations in the larger grants made to Foyle College, which was "altogether" an Episcopal Institution," than to the Londonderry Academical Institution, which represented the other Protestant denominations, produced a bad impression on the community. He had no complaint to make with regard to the support given to the primary schools.

*Middle-class
Schools.*

The Rev. Andrew C. Murphy, another Presbyterian Minister, complained that the masters of the Londonderry Academical Institution, which he was "prepared to admit was practically a Presbyterian school," received "a very small recognition in the shape of endowment from the Society in comparison with the very large recognition accorded to the Head Master of Foyle College."

Evid.
12174-82.

Mr. Francis O'Neill, a Roman Catholic resident of Londonderry, stated that half the population of the city was Roman Catholic, and that the necessity for higher education having greatly increased, the Bishop had erected St. Columba's College at a cost of about £10,000, collected from the Catholics, as a middle class seminary for the Catholic population of Derry and the surrounding country; that the College, which when finished would, he believed, be as free to Protestant pupils as the Academical Institution was, had no endowment beyond its site and buildings, and that no application had been made to the Irish Society for a grant. He informed us that the Society contributed £10 annually to St. Eugene's Schools, which were conducted by the Sisters of Mercy, and which were in connexion with the National Board, and St. Columbkille's Male and Female National Schools, which were "substantially Catholic," got £20 in 1877, and that these were the only sums given by the Society to Roman Catholic Schools in the parish of Londonderry. Mr. O'Neill stated that one of the greatest grievances under which the Roman Catholics laboured, was the exclusion of their schools from the grants of the Society. He did not blame the Society, but thought the conditions of the charter too stringent, which, as he understood, obliged them not to contribute to Catholic purposes, and the Catholics felt that it was a grievance that there should exist a Society administering Irish property, and not permitted to aid Catholic institutions in the same way in which they aided those of other denominations. He stated that the number of Catholic children attending the poor schools of Derry was considerably in excess of the Protestant children, and was, therefore, more in want of endowments.

Evid.
12342-46.

The Secretary of the Irish Society informed us by letter that the schools endowed with property which were under the management or control of or connected with the Irish Society, were:—1. Foyle College; 2. The Irish Society's male, female, and infant schools at Coleraine; 3. Culmore schools; 4. Balloughry schools; 5. Boghill school.

Letter.

The grants made to the other schools which were assisted by the Society appeared to be continued only during pleasure.

A deputation of the Society visits Londonderry once a year, and inquires into all matters connected with their property, income, and expenditure.

Foyle College, Londonderry.

We have already stated that until the passing of the Irish Church Act, 1869, Foyle College was the "Diocesan Free School" for the diocese of Derry. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, described it as "the best endowed of the Diocesan schools, as considerable endowments from the Irish Society are attached to it," and they stated that "the present handsome and commodious school-house was built in 1814, at an expense of about £13,000, by means of subscriptions from the Bishop, the London Companies, the Irish Society, and the Grand Jury of the county of Londonderry." The school-house was erected in accordance with the Acts of Parliament, 48 Geo. III., cap. lxxvii., and 49 Geo. III., cap. lix. (local), which also contained provisions for the nomination of twenty free pupils by the Irish Society, for the visitation of the school by the Archbishop of Armagh, and for the regulation of the institution. Although the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that they "were satisfied with the state of instruction," the material condition of the establishment was defective, and the school had been "reduced to a state of very great destitution" by the withdrawal of aid formerly given by the London Companies.

Rep., p. 37.

Mr. Maurice C. Hime, M.A., previously Head Master of Monaghan Diocesan School (vide supra, p. 51), was in the early part of 1877 appointed Head Master of Foyle College. He did not commence to discharge the duties of the post until the expiration of a year from his appointment, and during this interval extensive repairs and additions to the school were being carried out.

Rotums.

Mr. Hime stated that all the pecuniary support of Foyle College was at the date of our inquiry derived from the Irish Society, and that the Society regarded the school-house as their property. His salary was paid by them, and the repairs and additions were executed at their expense. The previous Head Master received a salary of £500 a year. Mr. Hime stated that at the time of his appointment the school was not in a "particularly prosperous condition." He petitioned the Irish Society for an increase of salary for eight years, by which time he thought the school would be on a satisfactory basis. The Society, "in consequence of the low condition to which the school had sunk," agreed to give him £850 a year for the two first years of his mastership, and thenceforward to reduce his salary by £50 every successive year until it should be brought down to £500 a year, the former stipend; they also undertook to pay the taxes, amounting to about £30 a year, formerly borne by the head master.

*Miscellaneous

The ordinary charge for boarders was fifty-four guineas a year, for day boys from ten to twelve guineas a year. Fourteen day-pupils held exhibitions called "Irish Society Scholarships," thirteen of which were competed for by examination, and the fourteenth was awarded by nomination. These exhibitions entitled the holders to receive their education without expense. There were also five exhibitions of £30 each tenable in Trinity College, Dublin, and two "House Scholarships" of £20 each tenable in the school, all attainable by competitive examination. All the school fees belonged to the Head Master; the under masters were quite under his control, and it lay with him to arrange with them the amount of their salaries. At the time of our inquiry he had three resident, and three non-resident under masters; whose salaries varied from £170 each for two of the resident, to £37 16s. for one of the non-resident masters, and amounted in the aggregate to £721 16s. a year. The cost of boarding the resident under masters was estimated, in addition, at £40 a year for each.

The school had at the time of our inquiry 106 pupils, forty-seven boarders, fifty-nine day boys. Twenty-two, five of whom were boarders, were Protestant Dissenters, four day boys were Roman Catholics, and all the remaining pupils were members of the Church of Ireland. The Hon. Arthur C. C. Plunket, the agent of the Irish Society, resident in Londonderry, stated that the school was undenominational, and that the unsectarian character of the education was provided for by the by-laws.

Mr. Mahaffy found fifty-two boarders, fifty-two day boys, and seven assistant masters in attendance. He reports:—

"Foyls College may fairly rank beside the Royal schools, on account of its important situation, its high character, and the good endowment granted to it by the 'Irish Society.' There is no school in Ireland, except Enniskillen, as well endowed, but then the Governors only grant the master's stipend quarterly, and refuse to call it an endowment. . . . The accommodation for the boys is very inferior to that of any of the larger Royal schools. As the house is situated on the side of a steep hill, the playground is quite useless for games, and the boys are obliged to rent (for £25 per annum) a cricket ground at a considerable distance. There is no gymnasium. . . . Though the master is anxious to teach natural sciences, which might be very useful to boys preparing for mercantile pursuits in Derry, there is no laboratory. The condition of the latrines is very bad. . . . More class-rooms are much wanted, and altogether the school seems not to have profited as it ought by the patronage of a rich and liberal corporation. The outlay recently made appeared to me almost pure waste. . . . There is required a considerable outlay in permanent improvements. . . . There is a good ball-play, of the Irish kind, and a separate house, conveniently situated, for an infirmary."

"As regards actual management, the house seemed fairly comfortable. The dormitories were well ventilated, but the floors wanted sweeping under the beds exceedingly; the diet seemed fairly good, and the boys cheerful and happy. . . . The present head master has abolished all corporal punishment, and rules by moral suasion. By making himself the companion and friend of his boys, he has succeeded perfectly in making them docile and manageable, and they struck me as peculiarly open and friendly in their manners. But I have doubts whether their intellectual development is equally successful. . . . Except in French I did not find any good answering. The knowledge of classical forms was not accurate, and the answering in science slow and unsteady. But still it is not safe to infer that the teaching was inadequate. . . . The head master has himself paid special attention to Latin grammar, on which he has published an important work, but he finds it difficult to make his assistants adopt his ideas, or rival his energy, and thus the teaching is perhaps not uniform in quality."

Londonderry Academical Institution.

This school, which was founded in the year 1868, was stated in the prospectus issued by the Board of Management, to have for its object "to furnish a sound classical, mathematical, and commercial education, and to secure careful, moral, and religious training on New Sectarial principles." The history of the origin of the institution was stated to us by Professor Leebody as follows:—

"Ten years ago it was felt that Foyls College was not suited to meet the wants of a commercial community. It was, in fact, mainly a preparatory school for Trinity College; and the then master was not disposed to make it anything else. The Irish Society had scarcely the control over it that they have now, and they could hardly interfere. This school was accordingly started to supply the want, and since then the Irish Society have entirely altered the constitution of Foyle College. In fact they have made Foyle College what the people of Derry wanted them to make it." Other witnesses stated that the establishment of the Academical Institution was undertaken in consequence of the dissatisfaction of the Presbyterian community with the then management of Foyle College, and though the causes of the dissatisfaction had been removed, this was not done until after the expense of starting the new building had been incurred, and the reforms were too late to benefit those who built the Institution.

The masters are appointed, and the curriculum fixed by a Board of Management, which consists of (1), subscribers of £50 and upwards; (2), thirteen elected managers; (3), fourteen ex-officio managers, viz.:—the Mayor of Derry; the President of Faculty, Magee College; the Governor and the General Agent of the Irish Society; the Member of Parliament for the City of Londonderry; the Ministers of the seven Presbyterian congregations in the district; and the Ministers of the Independent and Wesleyan Methodist Churches. The school was formed on the plan of the Belfast Academical Institution, and like it has distinct departments or schools, each under a head teacher independent of the others. At present they are five in number, viz.: the English and Classical School, the Commercial and Mathematical School, the School of Modern Languages, the Preparatory School (under a mistress); and the Drawing School.

Each head master of a school was required, on his appointment, to "sign a declaration that he holds the principles contained in the outline of Christian truth adopted by the Evangelical Alliance." It was stated that several members of the Church of Ireland who were candidates for masterships had expressed their willingness to sign the required declaration, but, as a matter of fact, none but Presbyterians had been, up to the date of our inquiry, elected, except the then late classical master, who was a Congregationalist. Practically it was stated that the test would exclude Roman Catholics.

No religious test was required from the pupils. The school opened with prayer each day, after which the roll was called.

Though the Academical Institution was established on non-sectarian principles, the greater part of the contributions came from Presbyterians, and the management was almost entirely in their hands. There was no Episcopalian clergyman on the Board of Management, though there were Episcopalian laymen. As a rule, Presbyterians went to the Academical Institution, while Episcopalsians went to Foyle College, in the governing body of which the Episcopalian element predominated, and the Rev. A. C. Murphy said that, though he was prepared to admit that, practically, the Academical Institution was a Presbyterian School, he believed it was not so distinctly Presbyterian as Foyle College was distinctly Episcopalian.

The transaction of the business of detail, such as payment of accounts, was transacted by a sub-committee consisting of from six to ten members.

A boarding house was attached to the building, and was held by one of the masters at a rent of £42, together with taxes (about £30).

There were ten free pupils at the date of our inquiry, and subscribers had the right to have one boy educated free for three years for every £50 contributed. The endowment consisted at the time of our inquiry of about £5,000, obtained from the voluntary contributions of the citizens of Derry. This sum, together with a grant of £1,400 from the Irish Society, was spent in the purchase of a site and the erection upon it of the school-buildings, which consisted of "those of a first-class school, with a cricket field, gymnasium, and ball-court." The Irish Society contributed an annual grant of £310, which was distributed in salaries to the several masters, and the Society had also granted a sum of £100 for three years towards incidental expenses.

There were two exhibitions given by the Irish Society of the value of £35 each; one "Tillie Exhibition" of £10, and one "City Factory prize" of £10. All these were open to competition among pupils who had been for three years at the School.

The number of pupils at the date of our inquiry was 100—85 day boys, and 14 boarders. The fees for boarders were £48, and for day boys from £5 to £15 per annum according to the number of courses taken up. The number of boarders had at one time fallen as low as two or three, and in less than a year had got up to the present number, which was stated to be still increasing.

Coleraine.—Academical Institution.

This school was founded in the year 1860 by grants from the Irish Society and the Clothworkers Company, with public subscriptions, which, at the date of our inquiry, had reached the sum of £4,337. It had been endowed by the Hon. the Irish Society with £100 a year, and the same Society also granted a farther sum of £100 from year to year. The Clothworkers Company also gave £50 per annum for a scholarship. The institution was under the management of a committee of gentlemen residing in Coleraine and its neighbourhood.

The site of the school contained four statute acres, and was granted by the Clothworkers Company, subject to a nominal head-rent of 1s. a year. Six additional acres adjacent were held on lease from Sir H. Bruce.

The only other endowments were a mortgage of £1,000 on the dues of the River Bann, bearing 4½ per cent. interest, and a sum of £200 given by James Cochrane, the interest to be given as a scholarship, and several small prizes.

The school buildings consisted of six class-rooms, with accommodation for seventy boarders.

The institution, whose staff consisted of the principal, a resident mathematical master, a resident classical master, and four non-resident assistant masters, was divided into the upper, middle, and lower schools.

At the date of our inquiry there were 116 pupils on the roll, 54 boarders and 62 day pupils. Eight of the day boys were Roman Catholics, all the other pupils were Protestants of various denominations, the large majority being Presbyterians.

The fees were—for boarders, thirty-five to forty guineas, with extras amounting to four guineas; for day pupils, from £4, £6, and £8, in the lower, middle, and upper school respectively. Each subscriber of £50 had the "right of presenting a free pupil for seven years."

The pupils were prepared for the universities and for commercial pursuits.

The principal and masters were required to subscribe the outline of religious belief agreed upon by the Evangelical Alliance. The school opened with prayer and reading of Scripture, at which all the boys, except Roman Catholics, attended.

Mr. Mahaffy found 60 boarders and 70 day boys in attendance. He reports:—

"The Academic Institute of Coleraine is a large and flourishing school. When I visited it the boys had just re-assembled after an epidemic of scarlatina, so that the number of boarders was not up to the normal strength. The whole house had undergone thorough painting and whitewashing, and looked very clean. Some defects in ventilation were at the time in process of being remedied. In addition to this improvement the governors should add (1) a detached hospital; (2) a covered gymnasium, which in our damp climate is of the last importance; (3) a proper play-ground, free of rent, and adapted to playing the modern games. . . . There was also a want of a good library for the boys. . . . As regards the intellectual condition of the boys, I found them much more advanced in science and English than in classics or French, and this I attribute mainly to the character and tastes of the Coleraine people, who like the people of Belfast are too essentially 'business people' to understand the value of a classical education, which does not represent immediate money value. The present master is fully alive to this defect, and is doing everything to counteract it, so far as it is possible when many boys will not go on to the universities. They are all taught book-keeping."

"The religious difficulty, here as elsewhere in the north, seems hardly to exist. Boys of various religions meet without any difference, and dogmatic questions are never asked."

"This was one of the schools in which the pronunciation of French was very incorrect, as the practical spirit of the school fully appreciated its uselessness in the preparation for the Intermediate Examination."

Returns.*

These schools are (1.) Holywood National School, and (2.) The Upper School. Both were endowed by the late Robert Sullivan, LL.D., who died on July 11, 1868. The National school was founded in his lifetime and opened on April 28, 1862; the Upper School was established by his executors acting under the direction of the Court of Chancery, and was opened on October 1, 1877. The founder gave a sum of £2,000 in the first instance, as an endowment for the National school, and added a bequest of £4,000 by his will, of which sum he directed that £2,000 should be invested as a perpetual endowment, in aid of the teachers' salaries the payment of the rent and repairs of the school-houses. The remaining £2,000 was applicable to the building of additional school accommodation. The residue of Dr. Sullivan's property, which ultimately realized £8,501 7s. 7d. New 3 Per Cent. Stock, and £452 10s. 3d. cash, and was applied to the establishment and endowment of the Upper School, was bequeathed by him in the following terms:—

"The residue of my property is to go to the executors for promoting in their judgment National or unsectarian education in Holywood. My views on the subject of National or unsectarian education are given in the letter which I addressed to Thomas Greg, esq., J.P., Ballymena, dated 26th September, 1859."

The letter mentioned in this bequest had been written to Mr. Greg, with a request that he would act as a trustee of the fund first devoted to the foundation of the National school; and thus the principles of education adopted in the two schools, have, to a great extent, been the same. Dr. Sullivan in his letter, which is printed at length in the evidence (Vide Vol. II. p. 331) strongly advocated the united and non-sectarian system of education; he directed that the school to be established at his expense should be put under the Board of National Education, and that the principles of the National system, the foundation of which he stated to be "that with regard to religious instruction there is to be no restriction, no compulsion," should be always acted on in the school.

Minor Schools.

(1.) Holywood National School.

Under arrangements made by Mr. Greg, the National school was established in the town of Holywood, subject to the control of a committee, which it was intended should consist "of each of the ministers of religion in the parish; and a layman representing each of the congregations." The Rev. Charles James McAlester, who was at the date of our inquiry one of the trustees of the Sullivan Schools, informed us that at the time of the establishment of the school "there was, in one sense, no Parish Priest in the parish," as the Roman Catholic clergyman who officiated in Holywood "was not a resident in the parish." He was left out "ostensibly on that ground" some of the other members being "quite willing that there should be no Priest on the committee, having an apprehension that, if there were, matters would not work smoothly." It was stated on the other hand, by the Rev. James O'Lavery, p.p., who was at the date of our inquiry the Roman Catholic Parish Priest of Holywood, that his predecessor went to reside there in January, 1862, three months before the opening of the school. However, he was not appointed a member of the committee, nor did it appear that any Roman Catholic layman was placed upon it. In the year 1867, the committee adopted the following resolution:—

Evid.

"That it seems to this committee to be for the interests of the Sullivan School, and in accordance with the principles on which it is founded, that the members of the religious denominations in the parish should be represented on the committee of management; and we, therefore, agree to request Mr. Greg to appoint representatives of the Roman Catholic and Methodist Churches, say the resident Methodist minister and a lay member of his church, and, as the present Roman Catholic clergyman is avowedly opposed to mixed education, two lay members of the Roman Catholic Church."

The Rev. James O'Lavery was the clergyman referred to in the foregoing resolution. Subject to Dr. Sullivan's approval, Mr. Greg consented to the appointment of two lay Roman Catholic members, "reserving to himself the power, in case the admission of so many different denominations into the committee should prove prejudicial to the interests of the school, of withdrawing his sanction." Two Roman Catholic laymen were appointed, but they declined to act, and soon afterwards a large number of Roman Catholic children were withdrawn from the "Sullivan National School," and transferred to another "National school," which, in the year 1869, was established in the vicinity, under the management of the Rev. Mr. O'Lavery, and in which he stated he had since faithfully carried out the rules of the National Board.

Evid.

It appeared that very few Protestants had ever attended the school established by the Rev. Mr. O'Lavery; and on the other hand he stated that he regarded the Sullivan National School as "purely sectarian, that is—Protestant or Presbyterian."

At the date of our inquiry there was but one Roman Catholic pupil upon the roll, who was stated by Mr. O'Lavery to be the child of a parent over whom he could exercise no control. Mr. O'Lavery explained the refusal of the Roman Catholic laymen to serve on the committee of the Sullivan schools as follows:—

"They were not appointed until I made a great deal of noise about the matter, long after the erection of the schools; and then it was only an insult to them to exclude their Parish Priest and appoint them, as if they were Presbyterians, as if, in fact, the laity could rule the Church. It was the general principle in its worst development as far as the Catholic Church is concerned."

He also objected to the constitution of the committee upon the ground that as there were "eight or nine different forms of religion in Holywood," and there were to be representatives of each, "the Catholics would be about three to twenty-seven, and, therefore, it would be perfect nonsense to suppose there would be equality there."

10032-3.

At the date of our inquiry the Sullivan National schools contained three separate departments—for boys, girls, and infants. The buildings had been erected at the expense of the endowment, and comprised "a main room with a class-room attached for each department;" the estimated annual value of the premises was £162. The emoluments of the head master of the boys' school were stated by him as follows:—"Salary from the endowment £20; Board's salary £58; good service salary £13; school fees £100; results fees, say £50," being in all £241 per annum. The head master in the evening conducted a science school in the building of the National school, but in connexion with the Upper School. In the National school there were two assistant masters, and a mistress, whose emoluments amounted in all to £176 per annum, of which only £21 were derived from the endowment. There were no free pupils, the charges being from 1s. 1d. to 5s. per quarter.

App. G, p.

Mr. Moore reports of the boys' school:—

"This is in every respect a first class National school, and the instruction given is of a very high order. The head master, who is a B. Sc. of London University, is a most intelligent person, and peculiarly well fitted to teach and manage the large number of boys under his charge. The answering of the classes which I examined showed not only a knowledge of their programme, but also an intelligence rarely to be met with in primary schools, while the writing of the majority of the boys was excellent. There is a good chemical laboratory, and the head master's pupils have been wonderfully successful at the examinations conducted by the Science and Art Department.

"There were 135 boys present."

186d.

Of the girls' school he says:—

"The answering was highly creditable in reading, spelling, and arithmetic, and the instruction given in drawing and vocal music seemed extremely good. The discipline is strictly maintained, and the school well conducted in every respect.

"There were 62 girls present, and the roll is composed of 68 members of the Church of Ireland, 16 Presbyterians, and 8 other Dissenters."

(2.) The Upper School.

The Upper School was established under a scheme settled by the Court of Chancery, and was opened, as above stated, after Dr. Sullivan's death. It is under the superintendence of a committee, which was by the scheme constituted as follows:—

Evid.,
9930.

"The committee of the Upper School shall, in the first instance, consist of the trustees of the testator's will, and of the persons who at the date of this scheme constitute the committee of the said Sullivan schools. The trustees for the time being of the testator's will shall always be ex-officio members of the committee of the Upper School. In case any member of the committee hereby constituted, or hereafter to be appointed (other than the said trustees of testator's will for the time being), shall die, or resign, or refuse or decline, or become incapable to act, or cease to reside in the parish of Holywood, the trustees of the testator's will for the time being shall appoint such person in his room and stead, being resident in the parish of Holywood, as they or the majority of them shall think fit to be a member of the committee of the said Upper School. The committee of the Upper School shall not, at any time, exceed in number, exclusively of the trustees of the testator's will for the time being, the number of the persons, who, at the date of this scheme, constitute the committee of the Sullivan schools, and no person, appointed as aforesaid, shall be entitled to act as a member of the committee, until he shall signify in writing, addressed to the trustees of the testator's will for the time being, his approval of non-sectarian education, as intended by the testator."

9986-92.

At the date of our inquiry the trustees of Dr. Sullivan's will were James Gibson, Esq., q.c., John Rintoul, Esq., and the Rev. Charles J. McAlester. They originated the proceedings in Chancery, and established the Upper School, in accordance with what they believed "probably would have been Dr. Sullivan's wish"—"to promote the higher education of the humbler classes, who would otherwise have difficulty in obtaining a better education; and, therefore, their scheme afforded great facilities to pupils in the National schools." It was arranged that all pupils of any National school in the parish of Holywood, who had been such for the continuous period of one year before entrance to the Upper School, should be admitted at fees amounting to only one-third of those charged to other pupils; Mr. McAlester stated, however, that none but pupils from the Sullivan National school had availed themselves of the privilege, and he said that hitherto the trustees had been disappointed with the progress of the school, and it had not been a success.

The Upper School was erected in close proximity to the Sullivan National school, and it appeared that the scheme was opposed by some of the inhabitants of Holywood, on the ground that there would be a prejudice against sending the children of the higher classes to the school, and that it should be established as an intermediate school chiefly for the advantage of the middle and upper classes. It was stated by Mr. Anderson, the Chairman of the Town Commissioners, that the funds, which were left by Dr. Sullivan for the purpose of benefiting children of the inhabitants of Holywood, were being applied against the wishes of the inhabitants by the trustees, two of whom resided in Dublin, and that notwithstanding a resolution passed at a public meeting strongly deprecating the application of the residuary fund to any of the expenditure of the existing Sullivan's school, and expressing the belief that the testator's benevolent intentions would only be carried out by erecting as soon as practicable a separate intermediate school on the non-sectarian principle of the National Board for the education of the youths of Holywood.

Mr. Anderson stated that the children of the better classes seemed to object to a school that was considered to be a National school, and the people he alluded to did not like the idea of sending their children to a National school supported in part by poor rates. He suggested that the trustees should even now take a house or school-room elsewhere, or erect a new building in some other locality; he said that though the existing school-house was "just in the centre of the town, and in a very good part of it," it was from its proximity "very much stamped" with the character of a National school.

The head master, Mr. William J. Anderson, stated that at the date of our inquiry there were 27 pupils on the roll, the attendance being about "24 or 25 every other day, and a much smaller number on the remaining days of the week." As nearly as possible one-half of the pupils came from the adjoining National school. He said that while there was any association between the pupils of the two schools—and from the contiguity of the buildings and playgrounds there would be association—the higher classes would refrain from sending their children. He believed, with a separate building, the school would be liberally supported by the higher classes.

The Right Rev. Robert Knox, D.D., the Lord Bishop of Down, also stated that "to all intents and purposes the primary school and the upper school were so intermingled that they hardly formed two separate institutions"; and he thought that if the Sullivan foundation were entirely removed from the primary school, the children of the better classes might probably be obtained as pupils.

The scheme contained the following provision as to religious instruction:—

"That no child or pupil attending the said Upper School shall be required to attend any religious instructions to be given in the said Upper School, unless his or her parent or guardian shall specially direct, it being a fundamental principle of the trust that the said Upper School shall be open to the children of all religious denominations, without any interference whatever with the particular creed of any."

As to the actual management of the school, the Rev. Mr. M'Alester, said:—

"There is better than a conscience clause—there is no religious instruction whatever given in the building. Of course the different children have religious instruction conveyed to them by their parents and others; but in the school there is no religious instruction whatever. It is different in that respect from the adjoining National school."

The Rev. Mr. O'Laverty, on the part of the Roman Catholic inhabitants of Holywood, complained of the uses to which the residuary bequest of Dr. Sullivan had been appropriated, and of the constitution of the committee which managed the Upper School. He urged that the scheme was doing "no good," and was misappropriating money which should have gone to the education of the poor in connexion with the National system. He stated that at the time of our inquiry the number of the committee was ten—six laymen representing several Protestant denominations, and four clergymen, respectively representing Protestant Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and the General Assembly, Methodists, and Non-Subscribing Presbyterians. Mr. O'Laverty's objections to a committee so constituted rested on similar grounds to those stated by him in reference to the original proposal for the formation of the committee of the Sullivan National Schools, and he stated that though he would be prepared to sign such a declaration as the scheme contemplated "under the present arrangement of National schools through the country," he would not do so "for a position in which the Catholics would be only three to twenty-seven" (which he assumed to be the proportion in which they would stand upon the committee). He "did not consider that National education at all."

The buildings of the Upper School formed "one wing of what were known as the Sullivan schools." They comprised three class-rooms, a master's room, and a laboratory, one of the class-rooms being suitable for popular lectures. "There was a play-ground in the rear, with out-offices." The endowment yielded about £240 per annum. The head master received a salary of £100, and also pupils' fees amounting to about £40 per annum. There was one assistant who taught French and German, and received £40 per annum and his travelling expenses, visiting the school for one hour daily. He received the fees of his classes. The subjects of instruction were six in number, French, German, Latin, Greek, Mathematics, and English. The fees charged were at the full rate, £8 2s. for each course, but for Latin and Greek, and for French and German, when taken together, the charge was £3. Since the opening of the school, thirty-four pupils had been admitted to instruction at the reduced rates provided by the scheme, and of these fourteen were in attendance at the date of our inquiry. The head master stated to us that the staff was insufficient. "The trustees wait for more pupils, while parents wait for more masters."

Mr. Moore reports:—

"I examined the five boys present on the day of my visit, in English subjects, Euclid, algebra, App. G, arithmetic, Latin and German grammar, and one boy in experimental physics. The answering in English subjects, Latin grammar, and arithmetic was very good, but the knowledge of mathematics and German was extremely limited."

"This school is for two reasons unsuitable for an intermediate school, first, its proximity to Belfast, which induces the boys to go into the excellent and very successful schools of that town; secondly, it

Armagh; Watts' Endowed School, Lurgan.

vol. III., p.

This school was endowed by Samuel Watts, who died in 1850. By his will, dated 3rd August, 1847, he bequeathed a sum which in 1857 amounted to £7,966 13s. 4d., and then produced an income of £365, upon the following trusts:—

"I hereby declare my Will to be, that my Trustees shall (subject to the directions herein contained) have the direction and control of the instruction to be given in the School, and of the general management thereof, and shall have full power to determine how many of the scholars taught in the said School shall be boarded and reside therein, or whether any of the said scholars shall so reside therein. And the said School, being intended for giving instruction in Classics, Science, and English, and in Agriculture, I hereby declare my Will to be, that no person being in Holy Orders, or a minister of any religious denomination, shall at any time interfere in the management of the said School, or ever be appointed or act as a master, officer, or servant of the said School, and that no catechism of religion nor religious creed be taught, nor opinions of any religious sect or denomination inculcated in the said School, during school hours, provided that the scholars may be instructed in their different religious opinions by their parents and their respective clergymen at home, or at any reasonable time not set apart for the business of the said School."

The property originally bequeathed amounted to £8,207 11s. 8d., but was subject to an annuity of £300 to Mrs. Watts, widow of the deceased, and it did not become available for the purposes of the school until her death. There was a provision in the founder's will that the school-house should not be erected until the accumulations reached £4,000, but in 1873 the trustees, acting on legal advice, and having accumulated about £3,000, commenced the building of the school. We were informed that the expenditure upon the buildings amounted in all to £3,982 18s. 8d., but the original endowment was not infringed upon, the outlay, except about £300 still due to one of the trustees, having been defrayed out of accumulations. The invested capital, at the date of our inquiry, amounted to £8,466 13s. 4d., invested upon mortgages.

The trustees—Mr. John Hancock, Mr. James Anderson, and Mr. John W. Groer—had taken on lease for 1,000 years two and a half acres at £8 per acre, upon which they had built the school. They had also taken, on a shorter lease, for agricultural purposes under the will, seven additional acres, at the rent of £3 per acre. Mr. Hancock stated that the school was carried on in accordance with the principles of the National Board, but that the founder's wish as to agriculture was not exactly complied with, as it was found not successful, and that the seven acres were occupied by the master as part of his remuneration.

Return.

The head master received a salary of £100 a year out of the endowment, and the allowance from it to the assistants was £75, and to the "steward" £30. At the date of our inquiry the head master had two resident assistants, whose total salaries were £100.

There were fifty-six boys on the roll, twenty-four boarders and thirty-two day pupils. No record of the religious denominations of the day boys was kept, but, the boarders were believed to be all Presbyterians.

Evid., 9382-34.

The trustees (who all belonged to the Church of Ireland) had selected a Presbyterian as head master, believing that they were doing what would be best for the public.

3080.

It would appear that the strict interpretation of the will had been departed from in establishing what was practically a denominational boarding school, but it was stated that the boarders' department was paid for by the fees, which were fifty guineas per annum. The charges for day pupils ranged from six to twelve guineas.

The course of instruction was stated in the head master's return to be "The highest classical, mathematical, modern languages and English course for the Universities, &c." Music also, and drawing, were taught as extras.

*Evid.,

An exhibition was given annually to a pupil coming from the Lurgan Model school, also prizes from persons in the locality. The school was very successful at the Intermediate Examinations.

Rosecommon; Elphin Grammar School.

*Comm., 1854-
8, Rep. vol.
III., p. 718.*

This school was founded under the will of the Right Rev. John Hodson, Bishop of Elphin, in 1635. The endowment consisted of 264a. 3a. 15r. of land, one half of the proceeds of which was to be applied to the maintenance of the Cathedral of Elphin, and one half to the maintenance of a grammar school in the town of Elphin, to be approved by the Bishop of Elphin, for the benefit of the children of the inhabitants, those of them whose parents were poor to be taught gratis.

*Evid., vol. I.,
p. 351.*

The lands are situated in the county of Cavan. At the date of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, they were let on leases for the making of which fines had been taken, and only brought to the school about £20 per annum, and the intention of the founder was not carried out until the leases dropped. The funds afterwards accumulated for some years, until 1869, when the school buildings, which had been erected a short time previously out of the funds, were made available.

The management of the funds was vested in the Bishop, Dean, and Chapter of Elphin. The Dean, the Very Rev. W. Warburton, M.A., managed the property on behalf of the Chapter, and generally visited it once a year. The accounts were examined and certified by the Chapter.

The present rental of the property was stated to be £434 15s. 6d., subject to a tithe-rentcharge of £9 per annum. It was held by forty-six tenants, in holdings varying in size from 16 acres to 2 roods 19 perches, at rents varying in amount from £26 to 21s. per annum.

The school buildings consisted of a class-room and the head master's dwelling-house and provided accommodation for about sixty pupils.

At the date of our inquiry there were twenty-five pupils on the roll, all day scholars, nine of whom were Roman Catholics. The fees varied from 1s. 6d. to 10s. a quarter. There were ten free pupils. The master's salary was £110 per annum, with a residence and two acres of land.

The school was strictly denominational. Dean Warburton informed us that the number of the Protestant population in the town of Elphin was forty. He was endeavouring to establish by subscription a lodging-house in the town where the children of Protestant parents of the middle and poorer classes from the surrounding country might be boarded, and could partake of the instruction given in the grammar school. He thought if this scheme was carried out that the school would attract pupils from great distances. He stated that the school used to be well attended by Roman Catholics, but that lately the Catholic school in Elphin had secured the services of a superior classical teacher, and the attendance of Roman Catholics had considerably diminished.

The Rev. Thomas Heany, Incumbent of Calry, near Sligo, about twenty-five miles distant from Elphin, who said that he appeared as the representative of the Diocesan Synod of Elphin, advocated the transference of this endowment to Sligo or Boyle, where, he said, there was a large population, and where it could be "utilized to tenfold advantage." He stated that the Dean and Chapter did not know what to do with the moiety of the endowment which, in accordance with the will of Bishop Hodson, was to be expended on the Cathedral, that they were decorating the building very elaborately and unnecessarily, and that "the Cathedral is very pretty, but there is no congregation."

Dean Warburton stated that, in consequence of Mr. Heany's evidence, the Chapter of Elphin resolved to place on record that Mr. Heany had no authority from the Synod to pronounce himself its representative; that the Chapter of Elphin, so far from not knowing what to do with the money from the endowment, had been obliged to overdraw their accounts to enable them to complete the improvements effected in the Cathedral on a moderate scale, in accordance with the terms in Bishop Hodson's will, and that they were persuaded that Bishop Hodson had bestowed the great boon of the endowment upon the people of Elphin, because having lived amongst them for many years he took a deep interest in their welfare. Dean Warburton was strongly opposed to any alteration in the locality of the school.

The head master of the school was the Rev. Edward Irwin, curate of the parish, a First Honorary of Trinity College, Dublin.

Dean Warburton stated that the school was a classical one to the extent that every boy whose parents desired it received a classical education.

Mr. Mahaffy reports the school is chiefly primary, and of the 17 boys on the roll only two were reading classics, &c., in a special class, for the Intermediate Examinations.

Dublin, Blackball-place; Blue Coat Hospital or Free School of King Charles II.

This school was reported on at considerable length by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8. It was founded in 1672, by Royal Charter, for "the good education and support of Poor Children and Aged and Impotent People, all of whom were to be taught by a minister appointed by the Archbishop of Dublin," who was also to catechise the children. The Institution is regulated by the Acts of Parliament passed in 1723 and 1840, and we were informed by W. N. Hancock, Esq., LL.D., one of the Governors, and the Secretary of the Royal Commission, 1854-8, that the trust was from the commencement exclusively Episcopalian, and so continued to the present day.

The Corporation of Dublin were the original Governors of the Institution, but on the passing of the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Act, 1840, it was provided that as the

The governing body of the institution at present consists of fifty members, of whom forty-six are nominated by the Archbishop of Armagh, the Archbishop of Dublin, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and the Bishop of Meath, and the other four consist of the Treasurer for the time being and three other Governors of the schools founded by Erasmus Smith.

Board meetings were held four times in each year, five constituting a quorum, and the average attendance for the last three years was sixteen. A House Committee composed of fourteen Governors meets once a month (three being a quorum), and an Estate and Investment Committee, consisting of seven members, also meets monthly, three also being a quorum. The average attendance at Committee meetings has been four, and within the last three years there were only three occasions when a quorum was wanting.

The real property consisted of (a) certain fee-farm rents, issuing out of premises in Stephen's-green and Oxmantown, the gift of the Corporation of Dublin, granted by the original charter of 1672. (b) The lands of Noddstown, county Tipperary, granted by Giles Martin, on the 23rd of June, 1675. (c) The rectorial tithes of Mullingar, granted by Margaret Trapper and John Wilson, 26th November, 1679. (d) Premises in Grange-gorman lane, Dublin, granted by the will of Mr. Taylor, about 1685. (e) One-fourth of the net annual rents of the lands of Cappaloughin, in the Queen's County, granted by Alderman John Preston, in 1686. (f) Premises in Smithfield, Dublin, devised by the will of the Bishop of Raphoe, proved 3rd November, 1712; and (h) premises in North King-street, held under declaration of trust, dated 21st June, 1723.

The personal property consisted of a sum of £997 15s. 10d., invested in Government Stock, the residue of £2,000, bequeathed by Captain Hennings in 1838.

James Llewellyn, by his will dated in 1852, devised all his property to this institution, subject to the life estate therein of his wife. The property consisted of certain houses in Upper Rutland-street, Dublin, and a sum of £2,580 3s. Government three per cent. stock. The institution is now in possession of this property.

We found that the rental of the real estate had increased since 1857, that of the Tipperary estate alone being raised by £300.

£3,100 East India Stock had also since 1857 been bequeathed to the institution, subject to a still subsisting life annuity of £100; the income, therefore, at the date of our inquiry derivable from this bequest was only £18 10s. 10d. per annum.

The sum payable by the Board of Erasmus Smith for maintaining twenty boys, whom they nominate (vide supra, p. 86), is calculated on the proportion to the whole expenses of the establishment which twenty bears to the total number of boys in the school. The average amount has been £626 18s. per annum.

4189.

Lord Ardilaun gave to the institution £1,000, invested in Great Northern Debenture Stock, in respect of which he and his representatives are entitled to have a perpetual nomination in the school. The income of the Institution, at the date of our inquiry, was stated to be as follows:—

|---|-------|----|----|
| 1. The Dublin estate, gross rental, | 1,662 | 19 | 6 |
| 2. The Tipperary estate, gross rental, | 812 | 1 | 6 |
| 3. The Mullingar estate, gross rental (tithes), | 311 | 7 | 2 |
| 4. The Cappaloughin estate, gross rental (one-fourth), | 106 | 15 | 7 |
| 5. Dividends on stock (£2,341 14s. 4d. Government stock), | 278 | 16 | 5 |
| 6. Smith's bequest (£2,100 East India stock subject to a life annuity of £100), | 18 | 10 | 10 |
| 7. Great Northern Debenture stock (£1,000), | 45 | 0 | 0 |
| 8. Contribution by Governors of Erasmus Smith's schools, | 626 | 18 | 0 |

Total, 3,977 5 0

The net income after payment of head-rents was about £3,200 a year.

The number of pupils at the date of our inquiry was 101, being as many as could be accommodated. They were of very respectable parentage, one-half being the sons of gentry in reduced circumstances. They were all Protestants, and both parents must be Protestants to entitle a boy to admission.

There were seventeen private rights of nomination in addition to the twenty nominations of the Governors of the Erasmus Smith's Schools; these had been given in consideration of bequests and payments to the hospital, and were as follows:—

|--|----|---|---|
| The Bishop of Meath for the time being. | 10 | | |
| The Rector of St. Werburgh's for the time being. | 2 | | |
| The Rector of Harold's-cross for the time being. | 4 | | |
| Lord Ardillon and his representatives. | 1 | | |
| Total. | 17 | | |

The other vacancies as they occurred were filled up on the nomination of each Governor in turn.

The boys were all fed, clothed and maintained by the Charity, at a cost of about £30 a head per annum.

The staff of the institution consisted of a Chaplain and Head Master, at a salary of £200, with apartments, fuel and rations; a Registrar, who also discharges the duties of accountant and agent over the Dublin estates, at a salary of £100, with apartments, fuel and light, and 5 per cent. agency fees on the rents collected by him; an assistant master at a salary of £100; second assistant master, £85; matron, £64; and drill master and gate porter, £40, (all of whom are resident); a French master, at a salary of £40; drawing master, £35; shorthand master, £36 15s.; organist and singing master, £40; and medical officer, £50; (all of whom are non-resident). There are also nine female servants, and an assistant porter, whose wages amount to £288 16s. a year.

The present registrar of the institution, Mr George Reid Armstrong, was appointed to the office in 1876, when the previous registrar (who has since died), was superannuated with a retiring allowance of £100 a year. The former chaplain and head master, who retired after forty years service, was also granted a superannuation allowance of £200 a year.

There are separate agents for the Tipperary and Mullingar estates. The rents of the Cappeloughlin estate are collected by "The Commissioners of Education," who hand over one-fourth of the net proceeds to this institution.

The course of instruction at the school consists of arithmetic, Euclid, algebra, trigonometry, English, history, dictation, book-keeping, French, shorthand, drawing and music. In addition to these subjects the Chaplain stated that he had classes in natural and experimental science (including botany, chemistry and zoology, magnetism, electricity, light, heat, &c.), and in English literature; also classes in technical matters quite independent of school work. In addition to this the first assistant taught Latin if required by parents, for which he charged a fee of £4.

The Governors allowed £10 a year for prizes, which were awarded at yearly examinations conducted by examiners from Trinity College and elsewhere. In addition the Chaplain gave some prizes at his own expense.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported very unfavourably of the management of this institution. They stated that the mode of keeping the accounts was very imperfect, and complained that they were not subjected to any independent audit. They stated further that much valuable property once belonging to the endowment had been lost owing to the neglect of the Governors to take steps to recover arrears of rent, that part of the funded property had been applied by the governors to meet current expenditure, and that the recipients of the Charity had been limited to children and grandchildren of freemen of the city of Dublin.

The evidence laid before us tended to show that most of these abuses had since been rectified. The accounts were regularly checked by the accounts committee, and subjected to the audit of an independent gentleman, Mr. Plate Oulton, who was appointed auditor in 1876.

There was no stated period for inspection of the premises by the Governors; a sum of £1,200 had been expended in the last four years in permanent repairs under the direction of Mr. Drew, R.H.A., architect, who received 5 per cent. on the expenditure.

Mr. Moore reports that the course of instruction appeared to him unsuitable for the class of boys educated in the school, that too much weight was given to mathematics, and that even ordinary English subjects were neglected for Euclid, algebra and trigonometry. He was of opinion that it ought to be a thoroughly English and Commercial school, and that the pupils should be prepared for commercial appointments and the Civil Service. Dublin: Royal Hibernian Military School, Phoenix Park.

Rep., Vol.
III, p. 55.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this institution was first incorporated by Letters Patent under the name of "The Hibernian Society for the care of Soldiers' Children," in the year 1769. In 1783 Henry Waddell, Esq., bequeathed certain bond debts amounting to the sum of £3,122 7s. 3d.; a lease of lives renewable for ever of eleven acres of the lands of Boorlon, near Carlow; a like lease of five acres of the lands of Rathapish, county Carlow; also eight and a half acres of the lands of Gansagh, Queen's County, to trustees, upon trust to pay one-half of the annual income to the Hibernian Marine Society, and the other half to the Hibernian Military School.

In 1857 none of the bond debts were in existence, and it was presumed that they had been paid off and were then represented by part of a principal sum of £5,753 7s. 3d., Government Stock then belonging to the schools. The lands of Boorlon then produced an annual income of £27 18s. 1d., which, after deducting agency fees, taxes, &c., was equally divisible between the Hibernian Marine Society and the Hibernian Military School. No account could be obtained of the lands in the Queen's County, from which no benefit appeared to have been received for a long time.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, also mentioned as endowments a rentcharge of £40, Irish, devised by the will of Dr. Downes (formerly Bishop of Waterford), dated 2nd January, 1791, and a sum of £3,000 bequeathed by Mrs. Wolfe, which was represented by another portion of the Government Stock, but the Royal Commissioners could not learn the source from which the remainder was derived. They further mentioned a sum of £432 8s. 11d., Government 3½ per cent. Stock, the produce of a bequest left by Mrs. Reay, and further stated that it appeared from the Bequest Books that Anne Preston by her will (proved in 1831) had bequeathed £500, and Lieut.-General James Shortall by his will (proved in 1849) had bequeathed £100 to the Governors, but whether these bequests had been expended or were then represented by the before mentioned Stock the Royal Commissioners could not ascertain. The Commandant, it was stated, could not tell, and declined taking on himself the trouble of ascertaining the Assistant Commissioners an opportunity of ascertaining the fact.

Charters were granted to the Society in 1808 and in 1846, by the latter of which girls were excluded from the benefits of the endowment, and Roman Catholic pupils were allowed to attend their own place of worship and to receive religious instruction from chaplains of their own Church, specially appointed for the purpose.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported favourably of the state of instruction order and discipline in the school, and the number of pupils on the roll at the date of their inquiry was stated to be 365, the average attendance being 310.

In reply to two applications for information, sent in January and June, 1879, we received the following letter:—

*Royal Hibernian Military School, Phoenix Park, Dublin,
24th June, 1879.*

SIR,—With reference to your letter No. 60, of 23rd instanc, which has been handed to me by the head schoolmaster, I have the honour to inform you that this institution is not an Endowed school. Being a military establishment, its expenditure is provided for by annual Parliamentary votes.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

L. S. CORROCK, Colonel,
Commandant R.H.M.S.

The Secretary, Endowed Schools Commission, Office, Four Courts, Dublin.

To this communication we sent the following reply:—

*Endowed Schools Commission,
Office, Four Courts, Dublin,
10th day of July, 1879.*

SIR,—With reference to your letter of the 24th June, informing me that the Royal Hibernian Military School is not an Endowed school, but that being a military establishment its expenditure is provided for by annual Parliamentary votes, I am directed by the Commissioners to call your attention to the fact that the institution was reported upon as an Endowed school by the Royal Commission, 1854-8, and from the report then issued it appeared to be entitled to a very considerable sum invested in Government Stock, as well as to other endowments. The Commissioners have also had evidence before them that it shares in other subsisting endowments. I must therefore request that the forms sent to the schoolmaster in January last from this office may be filled up and returned as soon as possible.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES CROOK MERRITT, Secretary.

Colonel L. S. Cotton, R.H.M. School."

This letter was acknowledged by the Commandant, who promised to lay the matter before the Governors, and on 26th August, 1879, we received a return containing replies to our printed questions which had been forwarded to the head master on 21st January, and also the following letter:—

"Royal Hibernian Military School, Phoenix Park, Dublin,
August, 1879

SIR,—Having submitted your letters of the 23rd June and 10th July last to the Committee of Governors of the Royal Hibernian Military School, I beg to return the printed forms, duly answered, as far as is in my power.

The Governors of the Institution desire me to inform you that there remains in 3 per cent Government Stock in the Bank of Ireland the sum of £3,793 7s., to the credit of the old corporation, the half-yearly dividends on which (amounting to £160 per annum) are credited in accounts rendered to the War Office.

There is also £377 7s. 5d., a bequest of Mrs. Beay, to the credit of the old corporation, the dividends of which, amounting to £12 10s. 4d. per annum, have hitherto gone to give some gratuities to former girls educated in the 'Hibernian Society for the care of Soldiers' Children,' and the account rendered to the War Office.

A sum of £100 left by General Shortall as a premium fund is likewise in 3 per cent Stock. There is a moiety of rents from a Carlow estate the joint property of the 'Hibernian Marine Society' and the old corporation of the 'Hibernian Society for Soldiers' Children,' which yields about £11 14s. 5d. per annum to each school, and which is duly credited in the public accounts rendered to the War Office.

The only other source of revenue is a bequest made by Bishop Downes in 1791, the rentcharge of which, amounting to about £36 annually, is also credited in the accounts rendered to the War Office.

The last Parliamentary grant under vote 14, for the year 1879–80, was £9,375.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

L. STAPLETON COTTON, Colonel,

Commandant, R.H.M.S.

The Secretary, Endowed Schools Commission, Four Courts, Dublin.

25.8.79."

On 1st September, 1879, we informed the Commandant of the appointment of Mr. Moore as our Inspector, and expressed our hope that the Commandant would afford that gentleman every facility in the discharge of his duty when visiting the school.

To this intimation we received the following reply:—

"Royal Hibernian Military School,
Phoenix Park, Dublin,

4th September, 1879

SIR,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 1st instant, informing me that by direction of the Endowed School Commissioners that Mr. H. K. Moore, Scholar, Trinity College, Dublin, will visit this school during the autumn with the object of inspecting the public documents of this institution.

I have the honour to inform you in reply that your letter with enclosure shall be laid before the Body Corporate (the Governors) at their next general meeting, as I do not (as Commandant) feel myself empowered to permit the public documents of the school to be scrutinized by any person without their sanction.

The views of the Governors shall be communicated to you, and should they acquiesce in granting the demand of the Commissioners every facility shall be afforded by me to enable Mr. Moore to discharge his duty.

I take this opportunity of submitting for the consideration of the Endowed Schools Commissioners a claim for discharge in the preparation of a complicated general schedule called for by the Commissioners, and which was forwarded to you on the 25th ult. Considerable time and labour was expended in its preparation, in searching the records of the institution for the required information, and I consider that the sum of (£5) five pounds will not be an unreasonable demand to submit for remuneration to the institution clerk for this service.

I must bring to your notice that duties of this nature are not provided for in the staff of this institution, and that inconvenience to the institution was experienced by the clerk being occupied in the preparation of the above mentioned complicated documents.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

L. STAPLETON COTTON, Colonel,

Commandant, R.H.M. School,

The Secretary, Endowed Schools Commission "

*Endowed
Schools Commission.*

In reply to this communication we sent a letter, dated 5th September, 1879, explaining that Mr. Moore had been appointed merely as an inspector of schools, and had been directed to visit the Hibernian Military School to inspect, not the "public documents connected with the institution," but the educational attainments of the pupils, and the condition of the school premises. We, at the same time, requested the Commandant to attend, on 23rd September, 1879, for examination in reference to the institution, and to produce the minutes of the Governors from 1857, the account books and annual balance sheets of the institution, and copies of all rules in force during the same period.

To this letter our Secretary received the following reply:—

* Royal Hibernian Military School, Phoenix Park, Dublin

6th September, 1879.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th inst. and in reply to inform you that it shall be laid before the Governors of the Royal Hibernian Military School at their next general meeting, and their views on the subject shall be communicated to you for the information of the Endowed Schools Commissioners.

The inference drawn by me that Mr. Moore would visit this school "with the object of inspecting the public documents of the institution," was with reference to the previous correspondence—no mention being made in your circular that the object would be to "inquire into the educational attainments of the pupils, and the condition of the school premises," and at the time of my reply I did not conjecture that paragraphs 5 and 6 of the Warrant could apply to this institution, as the subjects therein referred to are periodically reported on by the Director-General of Military Education (who visits the institution for the purpose) for the information of Her Majesty's Government.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

L. STAPLETON COTTON, Colonel, Commandant R.H.M. School.

The Secretary Endowed Schools Commission, Dublin.

We afterwards received the following further communication:—

* R.H.M. School, Phoenix Park, Dublin,

12th September, 1879.

Sir,—With reference to your printed circular, dated 1st September, 1879, I am directed to inform you that the Governors see no objection to Mr. Moore visiting the Royal Hibernian Military School, as therein notified, and in accordance with their instructions I shall be happy to afford Mr. Moore every facility in my power to do so, but I request that I may be informed of the date and hour of his intended visit.

2. With reference to your letter of the 5th instant, I have been directed by the Governors to say that should the Commissioners still wish it, Mr. Moore can "inquire into the educational attainments of the pupils, and the condition of the school premises," but although desirous to afford the Commissioners all information, the Governors respectfully decline to comply with the other demands contained in that communication, being of opinion that the Royal H.M. School does not come within the scope of the warrant.

Further the Governors have directed me to refer you to former correspondence on the same subject with the Endowed Schools Commission of 1856, a copy of which I have the honour to enclose.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

L. STAPLETON COTTON, Colonel, Commandant R.H.M. School.

The Secretary Endowed Schools Commission, Four Courts, Dublin.

(Enclosure No. 1 contained in the foregoing letter).

* R.H.M. School,

7th December, 1885

Sir,—With reference to the enclosed copy of a letter written on the 4th of January last, I have the honour to state that yesterday an Assistant-Commissioner was up here making numerous inquiries as to records, management, and descriptions of the school, and minutely with regard to the instructions given, the number of Roman Catholic children in the School, and the particular books, &c., used by them.

I of course received and treated him courteously, affording him such general information as I am at all times ready to give to any gentleman visiting the establishment, but I am at a loss to know how far I should be justified in giving minute written information, or in showing our books, charters, records, &c., and for which perhaps it might be necessary to refer to our solicitor, involving perhaps a great expense.

The Governors therefore wish to ascertain how far we are to be considered as under the Commissioners of Endowed Schools, this being a military establishment dependent from the annual vote of Parliament in the War Establishment.

On the 6th of December, 1879, we addressed the following letters to the Secretary of State for War, and to the Commandant respectively.

* Endowed Schools, Ireland, Commission,

Offices, Four Courts, Dublin.

School No. 60.

6th December, 1879.

SIR,—I have the honour, by the directions of the Endowed Schools Commissioners, to enclose a copy of the warrant of His Grace the Lord Lieutenant, appointing this Commission, and to ask your particular and immediate attention to the following matters:—

My Commissioners in the course of the inquiries which it is their duty to make, in order to comply with the warrant of His Grace, addressed to the Head Master of the Royal Hibernian Military School, Phoenix Park, Dublin, a set of printed questions in a form which they had adopted for all schools within the scope of their Commission, which were duly answered, after some correspondence, by the Commandant of the school.

My Commissioners further desired to have the school inspected and the pupils therein examined by Mr. H. K. Moore, one of the Inspectors acting under their directions, and they also wished that the Commandant should attend for examination before them, and produce to them the minutes of the Board of Governors of the school from 1857 to the present time, the account books for the same period, the balance sheets, and copies of all rules in force in the institution at any time during that period.

After some further correspondence I was informed by the Commandant that the Governors would permit the examination by Mr. Moore, but declined to comply with the other wishes of my Commissioners, upon the ground that the school did not come within the scope of the warrant of this Commission, and he referred me to a correspondence which had taken place in December, 1855, and January, 1856, between the War Office and the then Commandant, when a similar application to that made by my Commissioners was made by a former Royal Commission.

I am now to call your attention to the fact that the R.H.M. School enjoys over its annual grant from Parliament an income of about £200 a year, which clearly brings it within the scope of His Grace's Warrant, and that the institutions supported in great part by Parliamentary grants, but having also other funds, although having the advantage of educational inspection, have yielded without opposition to the jurisdiction of this Commission; and I am to request that you will inform the Commandant that he is at liberty and ought to attend before my Commissioners and give them the facilities they require with the view of making as perfect as possible the report which they consider they will be bound to make to His Grace the Lord Lieutenant as to the school in question.

My Commissioners desire me to add that in order to cause as little inconvenience as possible to the establishment they will, if it is so desired, hold their inquiry in the board room of the institution, as they have already done in similar cases.

As instances of institutions supported by Parliamentary grants in addition to other endowments, I may mention the Female Orphan Home, North Circular-road, Dublin, and a number of the schools under the Commissioners of Education in Ireland.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES CREED MEREDITH, Secretary.

School No. 60.

SIR,—I have the honour to inform you that I have this day by direction of my Commissioners addressed a letter to the Secretary of State for War calling his attention to the wish of my Commissioners that you should be examined before them as to the institution under your charge, and the refusal by your Board upon the ground of the correspondence between the institution and the War Office in 1855-6, and I have requested that you should be informed that you were at liberty and ought to attend before my Commissioners to give evidence as to the management of the institution.

I may add that my Commissioners will, if you desire, hold their inquiry in your board room. With reference to the application for £5 for the institution clerk for preparing a return for this Commission, I am to inform you that my Commissioners have no funds applicable to such demands and they must refer you to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

We received a reply from the Commandant, dated 8th September, 1879, acknowledging our letter, and promising to lay it before the Governors in due course.

Not having received any reply from the Secretary of State for War, we addressed the following further letter to him:—

“Endowed Schools Commission,
Offices, Four Courts, Dublin,
January 14, 1880.

School No. 60,

SIR,—I have the honour, by directions of The Endowed Schools (Ireland) Commissioners, to call your attention to my letter addressed to you on the 6th December last, and to request that I may have a reply thereto at your earliest convenience.

I am directed to say that, a certain amount of information in reference to the Royal Hibernian Military School being in the possession of my Commissioners, it will be their duty, when making their Report to His Grace the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, to state all the circumstances within their knowledge in connexion with the institution in question, and that when their Report comes before the House of Commons it will probably be more convenient that the Commissioners should have been asked for the authorities of the school in question the full information which it is their duty to afford for

I may add that the date for the Report of the Commission has been extended.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES CREED MEREDITH, Secretary.

To this letter we received the following reply:—

SIR,—With reference to your letter of the 23rd January last referring to the Royal Hibernian Military School I am to inform you that this Commission has not, as yet, received any communication from the Chief Secretary to His Grace the Lord Lieutenant on the subject. To this letter we received the following reply which closed the correspondence:—

No. 6617/1873

SIR,—With reference to your letter of the 19th February last and previous correspondence relative to the inspection of the Royal Hibernian Military School by the Commissioners of Inquiry into Endowed Schools in Ireland, I am directed by the Secretary of State for War to acquaint you that he has been in communication with the Chief Secretary for Ireland on the subject, and gathers from the correspondence which has passed, that the Irish Government is not of opinion that this institution is one which comes within the legitimate province of the Commission

Unless, therefore, the Irish Government which appointed the Commission should express a wish that the affairs of this institution should be inquired into by your Commissioners, the Secretary of State is not disposed to issue any instructions on the subject.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

RALPH THOMPSON.

The Secretary, Endowed Schools (Ireland) Commission, Four Courts, Dublin.”

The foregoing correspondence, the return enclosed to us on 26th August, 1879, the Report of the Royal Commission, 1854-8, and Mr. Moore's report, therefore, contain all the information as to the endowments, condition, or management of this school, which we could obtain.

Mr. Moore visited the school on March 15th, 1880, and reports:—

"This institution has, within the past twelve months, undergone considerable changes, and, as far as I could judge, these changes will materially improve it."

Under the old system the work of the establishment was done by servants, now it is done almost entirely by the boys. Formerly the greater part of the day was devoted to school work and the instruction in trades, drum practice, &c., was proportionately limited; now, three hours a day is devoted to school work, and three to trades,—half the boys being at trades while the other half are in school. This not only provides for a proper amount of instruction in both, but also greatly diminishes the teaching staff. The house was in every respect well managed, and scrupulously clean.

I examined the boys in the National programme, which is adopted, and the answering was, on the whole, satisfactory.

The trades are generally taught with system and regularity. The work done by pupils in the best trade is confined to cobbling, and it would seem desirable to teach the making of boots and shoes."

Dublin: Hibernian Marine School, Upper Merrion-street.

This institution was founded by Royal Charter, dated 1st August, 1775. The endowment at the date of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, consisted of certain premises on Sir John Rogerson's-quay, Dublin, held under a lease for lives renewable for ever, at a rent of £83 1s. 6d.; a rentcharge of £33 1s. 6d. devised by the will of Joseph Wright, proved 21st January, 1796; a moiety of certain lands in the county of Carlow and of certain bond debts, derived under the will of Henry Waddell, dated 1st February, 1783 (the other moiety being devised to the Royal Hibernian Military School), and certain other legacies, accumulations, subscriptions, &c., which had been invested in Bank of Ireland and Government Stock. The total amount of invested funds in 1857 consisted of £8,400 invested in Bank of Ireland Stock, and £2,900 invested in Government Stock; the net annual income of the charity from all sources was then £941 12s., and the annual value of the school premises, then on Sir John Rogerson's-quay, Dublin, was estimated at £180.

The school was until 1830 assisted by a Parliamentary grant, during the continuance of which the number of pupils on the roll amounted to 170. In 1830 the grant was withdrawn, and the number of pupils in 1837 was only 27; all the endowments then existing being of private origin.

The object of the school, as stated in the charter, was the maintenance, education, and apprenticing of children of decayed seamen in the Royal Navy and Merchant Service, and their instruction in Scripture and in the Protestant Established Religion.

The Assistant Commissioner who inspected this school in 1837 in his report stated:—

"To improve this institution, to enlarge and extend its objects and operation—in fact to make it what it was intended to be, an efficient nursery for the supply to Her Majesty's navy and the mercantile service, is, in my judgment, a matter of National importance. The metropolis of Ireland is a fitting locality for a first class marine school, and to such an establishment the assistance of Parliament might with propriety be extended. Having some time ago visited the Hibernian Military School, in the Phoenix Park, I was forcibly struck with the contrast presented by that noble and flourishing institution to the decayed and melancholy aspect of the marine school. There is a Parliamentary subsidy of £8,000 per annum to the school for the education and support of soldiers' children, while none of the public money is expended on an institution which seeks to confer similar benefits on the children of those gallant sailors who have devoted their lives to the naval and merchant service of their country."

A great advance had been made by the institution between 1857 and the date of our inquiry.

In 1872 a fire took place in the school-house on Sir John Rogerson's-quay, and the boys were removed. The Governors, having regard to the unhealthiness of the old locality, purchased for about £1,500 the interest in the lease of the present school-house, No. 1 Upper Merrion-street, for an unexpired term of fifty-two years, subject to a rent of £80. The house contained twenty apartments, store-rooms, bath-room, lavatory, &c., with a large garden, part of which was laid down in grass, and the remainder walled off as a play-ground. A gymnasium was added at an expense of £304.

The old premises on Sir John Rogerson's-quay had been leased at a rent of £300 a year, and some other premises adjoining, which belonged to the institution, were also let at £133 13s. per annum. The Governors calculated that they had gained £100 per annum by the change of site.

The affairs of the Charity were managed by a Board of Members, some of whom were elected by ballot, some were life members (the qualification for whom was a donation of

- twenty guineas), and others were annual members (the qualification being a subscription of one guinea). The number of members was stated to be unlimited.
- The Board of Members elect annually a Committee of Finance which meets once a month (three being a quorum), a General Committee, which also meets once a month (the quorum being five), and two Secretaries. There are also four stated quarterly meetings and one general meeting of the board in each year. The attendance at all meetings was stated to be usually much larger than the number requisite to form a quorum.
- The invested stock of the charity at the date of our inquiry consisted of £6,000 Bank of Ireland Stock, the dividends on which for the year 1873 were £720, and £7,000 Great Southern and Western Railway Stock, the dividends on which for 1878 were £360 12s. 11d. The total annual income at the date of our inquiry was stated to be £1,548 9s. 9d.
- There were forty-four pupils on the roll at the date of our inquiry, all free boarders, and Protestants; all were the sons of sailors; about one-third were the sons of coastguards on active service, and were admitted in consequence of the largeness of their parents' families and the smallness of their means.
- The official staff of the institution consisted of a surgeon receiving £10 a year; a registrar at a salary of fifty guineas; a schoolmaster receiving £100 a year, with apartments, coals, and candles; a housekeeper and cook receiving £30 a year and board; and a music-master receiving £8 a year. There was no assistant master, but the best and most efficient boy in the school was appointed monitor at a salary of £4 a year.
- An examination was held once a year to test the proficiency of the pupils, the examiners being, in general education, Mr. Wilkinson, Inspector of the Church Education Society's Schools, and in matters of navigation, Captain McCallum. There were no exhibitions, and the only prizes were some books given after each general examination.
- The course of instruction at the school was in reading, writing, writing from dictation, grammar, geography, the use of the globes, map-drawing, arithmetic, Euclid, trigonometry, English History, navigation, Scripture and Church Catechism, and vocal music. The boys were also taught to splice and knot ropes, to row, and to swim. A workshop had been erected and tools were provided for boys who developed a genius for carpentering; and a large gymnasium had been recently built at a cost of £300. Two boats were kept in which the boys took exercise.
- The pupils were admitted from nine to eleven or twelve years of age and were retained till fifteen. They were then apprenticed in the merchant service or sent, if they should desire, to the Royal Navy. Except in case of necessity all were sent to the sea. Each boy on leaving got a good outfit at an expense of about £9.
- The audited accounts for the year 1877 showed the expenditure for the year to be as follows:—Coals, candles, and gas, £67 11s.; diet, £635 12s. 5½d.; clothing and articles of house linen, &c., £225 11s. 2d.; rent and insurance, £203 3s. 3d.; furniture and repairs, £65 6s. 8d.; books and stationery, £14 16s.; building, repairs and sundries, £401 19s. 7½d. (this last item including the sum of £304 spent on the gymnasium), and salaries, £304 10s.
- The accounts were audited by members of the board; there was no other audit.
- The Governors were stated to be in the habit of visiting and inspecting the school four or five times every week, and also of bringing visitors.
- The school was inspected by Mr. Moore, who reports:—
- "The answering in this school in reading, spelling, and elementary arithmetic was fairly good. The discipline was not quite so rigid as it should be in such an institution.
 "The house is kept in very good order."
- County of Dublin; Drummond Institution for the Orphan Daughters of Soldiers, Chapelised.*
- Evid., 7652.
- This institution was founded in 1863 by Alderman John Drummond, who bequeathed a sum of £20,000 (now invested in Government Stock amounting to nearly £22,000), for the purpose of founding an institution for the education and support of the orphan daughters of soldiers, similar to the Royal Hibernian Military School for boys. Subscriptions amounting to upwards of £2,000 were contributed by the public, a schoolhouse was erected, and a free site and three and a half acres of land were purchased.
- In 1863 the Court of Chancery settled a scheme for the management of the institution, which provided—That the control shall be vested in the following Governors:—His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, the General Officer Commanding the Forces in Ireland, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, the Chief Secretary for Ireland, all Officers above the rank of Major of Her Majesty's Army stationed in Dublin, (all for the time being), with Sir Thomas Larcom, K.C.B.; Alexander Parker, Esq., J.P.; James Robinson, Esq., Q.C.; and John Robinson, Esq.

These were annually to elect seven of their number as a committee to manage the institution, who should meet at least once a month. The Governors were, from time to time, on occasion required, to appoint a committee of ladies, being the wives of Governors, to superintend the domestic details of the institution.

The total number of girls admitted since the opening of the institution was 116, of whom 67 had passed out of the institution, and 49 still remained in it at the date of our inquiry. Of the 67, 23 were apprenticed as servants, 33 were withdrawn by their friends, 6 were trained as pupils, and 5 had died.

The committee of seven met once a month, and oftener if required. The members at the date of our inquiry were—Major-General Glyn; Col. Lyons, Deputy Quarter-master-General in Ireland; Alexander Parker, esq.; John Robinson, esq.; Surgeon-General Crawford; Deputy Commissary-General Moore; and Lieut. Colonel Speedy.

The rules adopted by the Governors for the management of the institution will be found in Appendix N, p. 342, infra.

The following is a copy of the balance sheet, showing the income and expenditure of the institution for the year ending 31st October, 1877:—

Of the forty-nine pupils in the school thirty-six were Protestants and thirteen Roman Catholics, all being free. All were the orphan children of soldiers who had died in Ireland; they were elected by the committee as vacancies occurred. The committee had power under the rules in deserving cases, in case there were no orphan candidates, to elect children not being orphans, but from the foundation to the date of our inquiry the committee had not been able to provide for the number of orphan candidates. It was stated, however, that an orphan who had lost both parents was never refused.

The teaching staff of the institution consisted of a matron, who was also chief school-mistress, and received a salary of £36 a year; an assistant Protestant mistress, who received £12, and a Roman Catholic mistress, £20; there were two female servants.

The Protestant mistress superintended the religious instruction of the Protestant children and took them to church, and the Roman Catholic mistress similarly attended to the Roman Catholics. The Protestant and Roman Catholic clergymen of the parish also instructed in religion the children of their respective persuasions. They gratuitously gave their services, but £10 a year was given for car hire to the Protestant clergyman, who resided at a distance.

The children received a primary education in English, and were instructed in domestic work, for which they were awarded annual prizes. No girl was kept in the institution after seventeen years of age. Those apprenticed as domestic servants usually left at fourteen or fifteen years of age, and were bound for three years.

their constitution and management, and both owe their foundation, maintenance, and endowment to voluntary contributions, chiefly received from Freemasons resident in Ireland. They are a part of the charitable system of Freemasonry, of which the benefits are chiefly given to children of the higher class, left in need by their fathers' death. The schools receive the children of Colonial and Military Freemasons as well as of those who had been resident in Ireland.

The Masonic Female Orphan school was founded in 1792, in South Richmond-street, Dublin. It was removed from Richmond-street to its present site, Burlington-road, Dublin, about the year 1850. The site is held by lease for 150 years, at an annual rent of £4. The buildings were erected by subscriptions contributed by Freemasons, and have been added to and improved from time to time. An adjoining plot of ground was purchased about three years before the date of our inquiry for £1,000, and was added to the school grounds. The Governors still considered the buildings and grounds insufficient for the purposes of their school, and have recently taken a lease for 200 years, from the Earl of Pembroke, of nine acres of land, at Simmon's Court, Dublin, on which a new school-house, capable of accommodating seventy pupils, is in course of erection, which is estimated to cost about £12,000. This sum, we were informed, would be obtained from special voluntary subscriptions, without drawing on the invested capital of the institution.

The funds consisted of annual subscriptions, donations, and legacies. By the rules of the school donations of £10 or upwards, and legacies, have been invested, but the trustees considered themselves at liberty to apply the capital, if necessary, to any purpose of the school as they might think fit.

The invested funds of the school at the date of the Royal Commission, 1854-8, amounted to £463; the value of the invested stock at the time of our inquiry was stated to be £11,764 13s. 7d.

The school was managed by a Board of Governors, all of whom were Freemasons, and either subscribers, or office bearers in Masonic Lodges which subscribed to the funds of the school. The Board appointed from amongst themselves three committees—a Education Committee, a Finance Committee, and an Apprentice Committee, who, with a Ladies' Committee composed of wives or widows of Governors, superintended the institution. The funds were invested in the names of three trustees chosen by the Board.

The object of the institution was to receive, maintain, clothe, and educate the daughters of deceased Freemasons.

The pupils were elected by the Governors, the number of votes given by each Governor being regulated by the amount of his subscription. There were usually two or three vacancies at each election, and the number of candidates was from twelve to sixteen.

The candidates must be between the ages of eight and twelve years at their admission, and, except in special cases, the pupils leave at sixteen years of age.

The girls were either fitted to become governesses and teachers, (in which case they were sent abroad for a couple of years after leaving the school to more perfectly qualify them for their profession), or they were apprenticed, when found unsuited to receive the higher education, which had been introduced since 1857.

The domestic arrangements of the school were managed by a Matron, and the teaching was conducted by a resident governess, a visiting governess, a pupil teacher, and visiting teachers of Drawing, Music, and French. There was also an Assistant Secretary, receiving a salary of £100 a year from the funds of the Female school.

The number of pupils at the time of our inquiry was thirty-nine, all Protestants. It was stated to us that the Masonic body took no cognizance of the religious persuasion of the candidates, and that Roman Catholics would be equally eligible with Protestants, but that the number of Roman Catholic Freemasons was at present very small.

Three sums of £100 each were invested for the purpose of providing annual prizes. There were two examinations and a public distribution of prizes in each year.

Each girl when leaving the school received an outfit, and the cost of her foreign education, or her apprenticeship fee was also paid. The assistance thus given to the pupils after leaving the school, and the care and supervision exercised over them at that period, seemed to be a most useful and well-administered part of the work of the Charity.

The average annual expenditure was about £2,500, and the cost of maintaining each pupil (including cost of teaching, servants, house rent, repairs, apprentice-fees, &c.), was about £56 per annum.

Mr. Moore reports that, with the exception of the junior class in geography, the answering was highly creditable, the course of instruction admirably chosen to fit the pupils for the highest situations as governesses, and the arrangement by which some of the best girls were assisted in finishing their education abroad a most necessary and useful one. The house was in excellent order, nor could he find any fault, except that there was no fireplace in the junior schoolroom.

The Masonic Orphan Boys' School was established in 1867 on the same principles as the Female School. Donations, legacies, and accumulations which had been invested amounted, at the date of our inquiry, to £10,396 15s. 7d., which was "entirely under the control of the Board." There was "nothing to prevent them spending any part thereof."

Evid.,
6135-44.

The Governors at first boarded out the boys at the Incorporated Society's School at Santry, paying for each boy £25 a year, afterwards increased to £35. In 1870 the boys were transferred from Santry School to Adelaide Hall, Merlion, the Governors being of opinion that the course of instruction at Santry was not of a sufficiently high class. Adelaide Hall School at that time belonged to the Rev. Mr. Skeen, and the Governors paid him £40 a year, afterwards increased to £45, and latterly to £50, for the board, education, and clothing of each pupil.

The Governors shortly before our inquiry purchased Mr. Skeen's interest in the lease of Adelaide Hall for £350. The house and three and a half acres of land were held for a term of eleven years, at a rent of £100 a year.

The Governors then appointed Mr. Sparkes, a graduate of London University, to be Head Master, at a salary of £300 a year, with apartments and rations for himself and his wife. They also purposed having an assistant master, at a salary of £80 a year, and visiting masters to teach French and drawing. The Assistant Secretary received a salary of £70 a year from the funds of the Boys' school, in addition to that paid out of the funds of the Girls' school.

6178, 6204.

The number of pupils at the date of our inquiry was twenty-six, all Protestants, though it was stated that their religious persuasion formed no element in their qualifications for election. They were selected from the orphan sons of Freemasons under the "Irish Constitution," and included pupils from America and Australia.

Evid., 6160.

6184.

The course of instruction was intended to give a thoroughly sound commercial education fitting the boys for the Civil Service or business, but not a university education. Some had gone to the medical profession.

6172.

Mr. Mahaffy reports the house to be very healthful and pleasant, but the building not well suited for a school. The ventilation, and the situation of the lavatories, required improvement. The head master understood his business thoroughly, and the discipline and training seemed excellent, but as the boys were elected without regard to their knowledge they required more separate teaching, which produced a peculiar difficulty for the master, and should be considered in giving him ample assistance.

App. A,
p. 249.

The annual expenditure was about £1,350, the average cost of maintaining each pupil being about £53.

Dublin: Pleasants' Asylum, 75, Lower Camden-street.

The endowment of Pleasants' Asylum consists of a sum of £30,535 6s. 7d., Government Three per cent. Stock, lodged in the Court of Chancery to the credit of the trusts of Thomas Pleasants' will, and the house and garden 75, Lower Camden-street, held in perpetuity at a yearly rent of £39 10s. 4d.

Evid.,
6150-8.

Thomas Pleasants, by his will, proved 16th March, 1818, bequeathed a sum of £15,000,

"To set on foot an institution for the maintenance, clothing, and appropriate education of poor orphan Protestant girls (none but Protestants), in some branch of industry that would be likely to qualify them to earn a livelihood after their stated time to remain in the school had expired, such as knitting, straw hat making, or whatever else could be thought upon to be the best."

Evid., 5290.

He also devised his house for the purposes of the institution in the following words:—

"And for the use of said school, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever, I bequeath my house in Camden-street (subject to the rent, taxes, and repairs, which I beg may be all regularly attended to), with the stable, other offices, and garden, most strictly enjoining that there may not be any alteration made in the house, but what will be indispensably necessary for the adapting it for a school."

The will further states:

"The age for admitting the girls I shall leave to the discretion of the Governors. They are to be of sound Protestant stock by father and mother side, and the wholesomeness of their constitutions and their dispositions and conduct should be strictly inquired into. Bride's parish to have the preference, Peter's the next, and afterwards from any other, on the producing an authentic certificate (subject to the approval of the Governors) from the Minister, Curate, and Church Wardens of it. The number to be always proportioned to the fund. The time for continuance I also leave to the Governors. I wish it to be still properly marriageable, and then to be matched to a real Protestant, none other, and if any of them should be in any tolerable degree appearing fit to make a farmer's wife, I would prefer a farmer, the portion to be according to his and her merit, not to exceed £300, said portions to be paid out of the interest of the residuum of my fortune, whatever it may amount to after discharging my debts of all sorts."

Mr. Pleasants nominated three trustees at a salary of £100 a year each. On the death of any of these trustees the vacancy was to be filled up by the survivors. The salaries of all trustees after the three nominated by the will be directed to be £52 a year only, and he gave the following directions for their selection, and also for the selection of female visitors:

"Now their successions are always to be curates of approved conduct, and willing to undertake the office, and who have little or no means but their curacy, too often the case. £28 a year for fifty-two weekly attendances, for a few hours each visit, will be an easily earning, no contemptible addition to the Church income. And I would have from the commencement or opening of the school two female visitors also, widows as little incumbered with family as possible, and propensively sought for amongst the sufferers by the Royal Canal or any other bad luck, and who have not in any shape been instrumental to their misfortunes by foolishly living beyond their sphere, entertaining, card-playing, &c. When two of proper character are hit on, they are to have a month's trial, and if found not qualified as to capacity, they are to be paid £4 each, a pound a week, their compensations being to be the same as those of the curates, and others are to be looked for. No remembrance in their favour to be heard or have any effect. The interest of the establishment I entreat may ever be leading object, and when a choice is made, whether of two or one, it must always be by the unanimous voice of the three trustees, and they are to visit regularly, not week about—no excuse except allowed by the trustees, if not allowed not to get that week's pound. One month's wilful absence to disqualify any visitor, male or female, from further attendance, and no pay for that month."

Mr. Pleasants also directed that his trustees should fix the salary of a matron, or instructress, and of a clerk to keep the accounts.

The property realized, instead of £15,000, the sum of £20,535 6s. 7d., Government 3 per cent. Stock, now lodged for the purposes of the institution in the Court of Chancery. In 1879 a legacy of £17 3s. 3d. was received from Miss Latouche, and the Governors had invested £200 temporarily on deposit receipt, having also £146 14s. 2d. in hand at the end of that year.

*Rep., vol.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that for some years after the testator's death the institution was conducted in conformity with the directions in the will, and that the inmates received an industrial education, but that some twenty years before their inquiry the system had been entirely changed, that the girls since admitted had been educated in a superior manner so as to fit them to discharge the duties of literary governesses, their designed future occupation, and were permitted to remain in the institution until they were provided with situations as governesses in respectable families, at salaries of not less than thirty guineas a year each, and each girl on leaving received £20 for an outfit, and an additional sum of £20 was deposited in bank for her use. The provision in the testator's will as to providing portions was disregarded, the Governors being of opinion that it was most objectionable and exposed the young women to the cupidity of the community. And thus "an institution founded for the purpose of teaching girls some branch of industry which would enable them to earn their livelihood in after-life, such as knitting, straw-hat making, &c., and fit them particularly to become farmers' wives, had been by the acts of the trustees converted into a training school for governesses, and no longer retained a vestige of the industrial character so sedulously and pointedly indicated by the instrument of endowment."

Evid., 5284.

No change in the management of the institution has been made since the date of that report. One of the witnesses examined before us, Captain G. S. Dyer, M.C., called our attention to the deviation from the wishes of the testator, and stated that the class of persons received into the institution was not such as contemplated by the testator. He also stated that he had ascertained that Archdeacon Lee, the incumbent of St. Peter's parish, in which the asylum is situated, had written some years ago to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests in Ireland, stating that the inmates of the institution were not of the class the testator intended, and that the Secretary of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests had written to the Rev. Mr. MacSorley, one of the trustees, calling his attention to the matter, and that Mr. MacSorley had replied that the trustees had followed the example of their predecessors.

The number of pupils in the institution at the time of our inquiry was thirteen, of whom the eldest was nineteen years of age, having been seven years in the institution. The limit of age for admission was between eight and twelve years of age. The average number of vacancies was something less than two in each year, and the candidates were selected by the trustees. No public notice of the existence of vacancies was given, nevertheless the applications were stated to be very numerous.

For the management of the asylum and education of these thirteen girls there was a staff of ten paid officials, viz., three governors, two matrons, one resident matron, a resident teacher, a music teacher, a drawing teacher, and a French teacher, the aggregate amount of whose salaries was £417, but of these the appointment of the first five was prescribed by the founder's will, and imposed an annual expense upon the funds of £260.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-5, reported favourably of the state of instruction in the institution, but stated that the building did not afford the amount of accommodation and convenience which could be desired. This state of affairs appears to originate in the retention of the house in Camden-street in the same state as when devised by the founder. One of the trustees, the Rev. Mr. MacSorley, stated that the house was so small and unsuitable that they could not accommodate one more than they had at the time of our inquiry, and that it was even under protest from the doctor that the last pupil was received; he added, that except the house was pulled down and rebuilt nothing really useful could be done.

The duties of the visiting matrons and governors were very light, but it would appear to have been the intention of the founder, in directing their appointment, to supplement the income of three curates, and to make a provision for two widows, making the governors and visiting matrons "as much a part of the institution as the girls who were educated there." Omitting the salaries of the governors and visitors, the expenditure upon the institution amounted to an average of £50 per annum for each pupil.

Of the girls in the institution at the time of our inquiry not one was from St. Bride's parish, which, under the will, ought to have had "the preference," but all were stated to have belonged to St. Peter's parish, although girls had been previously received into the institution from all parts of the kingdom.

The three trustees at the date of our inquiry were the Rev. J. J. MacSorley, curate of St. Peter's, and the Rev. Robert Flemyng, and the Rev. J. H. M'Mahon, tan., who were curates at the date of their appointments, but had ceased to be so. Mr. Flemyng was, at the date of our inquiry, chaplain to two prisons, and Dr. M'Mahon an Inspector of Marlborough-street Training School. They retained their position of trustees, though the testator had directed the trustees "always to be curates of approved conduct who have little or no means but their curacy."

Mr. Moore reports:—

"The principal object of this school is to educate the daughters of reduced gentlemen and others as governesses. The girls are instructed in English, French, Music, and Drawing. The answering of the fourteen girls present was on the whole satisfactory. The house is very old, and it must take a large sum to keep it in its present state of repair. . . . care is evidently taken to make the girls happy; they seemed thoroughly to appreciate it."

Dublin: Royal Irish Academy of Music, 34, Westland-row.

The Royal Irish Academy of Music was founded in 1856, its object being the diffusion and advancement of music by establishing a public school in Dublin, similar as far as possible to the foreign Conservatoires.

Since the year 1870 the institution has been aided by an annual grant from Parliament of £150, to which another £100 has recently been added, on the express condition that the subscriptions realize £150.

During the year 1879 the Academy received a bequest of £5,000 from the late Mr. Ormsby Vandeleur, together with some musical instruments. Of this legacy £1,000 was left at the absolute disposal of the Academy, and £4,000 was directed to be invested, and the interest applied to the education of students. The number of pupils on the roll of the Academy at the close of the year 1879 was 251.

The following is a copy of the balance sheet showing the income and expenditure of the institution for the year 1879.

County of Dublin: Claremont Deaf and Dumb Institution, Glasnevin.

Rep., Vol. III., p. 20.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the endowment of this institution consisted of £2,166 6s. 10d., Government Stock, bequeathed by Rev. Dr. Barrett in 1827, £857 5s. 5d., Government Stock, residue of other legacies and bequests, a rent-charge of £5 devised by Cordelia Cary in 1838, and an annuity of £20 under the will of Matthew Neary Mahon dated in 1850. The school buildings and 21A. 0s. 9p. of land were stated to be held under a renewable lease, at a rent of £203 11s. 5d. The institution was also entitled to a legacy of £100 under the will of Samuel Warren dated in 1850, not payable until after the death of Mrs. Warren, who was still living in 1857; and to two contingent legacies under the wills of the Rev. Henry Wray dated in 1847, and of Mrs. Mary Stokes dated in 1858.

Ibid., p. 24.

Ibid., p. 25.

The sum of £857 5s. 5d., Government Stock, was increased at the date of our inquiry to £7,050 5s. 4d., which was called "The Claremont Rent Fund," under the provisions of Rule No. 15 of the institution, which provided:—

Evid., 5380. "That all legacies shall be placed in the public funds in the names of three trustees, until the interest of the same shall amount to the annual rent payable for the lands of Claremont."

5833. There was also another fund called "The Boyd Fund," amounting to £158 14s. 9d. stock, and producing about £4 10s. a year, which had been transferred to the committee by Mr. Dominick McCasland, q.c., and Dr. Hart.

The remaining property, at the date of our inquiry, consisted of rents for the fields attached to the institution which amounted to £147 a year, of the fees paid by pupils, which amounted to £351 12s., of donations and subscriptions, generally amounting to £200 or £250 a year, and other contributions which varied from £800 to £1,000 a year.

The total average income of the institution was stated to be something over £2,000 a year including legacies.

Evid., 5833, 5897-8.

The total number of pupils at the date of our inquiry was fifty-five, four of whom were private pupils of the master, for each of whom the master paid £10 to the committee. Fifteen were paid for by the Boards of Guardians of different Poor Law unions, at rates varying from £10 to £15 a year; seventeen pupils paid from £17 to £20, and there were nineteen free pupils.

Evid., 5914. The Head Master had held that position for twenty-three and a half years; his salary was £250 a year; his wife undertook the supervision of the whole institution without salary; there were also five assistant teachers at salaries ranging from £15 to £40 a year.

Evid., 5944, 5929-30.

The course of instruction comprised reading, writing, geography, history, and Scripture. The boys on leaving were usually apprenticed to shoemakers saddlers, and printers, the committee giving apprentice fees of from £8 to £10. The girls were apprenticed to milliners, and in some cases were presented with a sewing machine in lieu of an apprentice fee on leaving. It was stated that the committee found very great difficulty in obtaining places for pupils from the institution. The master, however, informed us that of all those who had left the institution during his time, he did not know of more than one or two who were not earning their own living.

Two of the trustees in whose names the funds of the institution stood invested were dead, and the third trustee being unable to act, an application had been made to the Court of Chancery for the appointment of the Rev. H. H. Dickinson, D.D., Dean of the Chapel Royal, the Rev. H. G. Carroll, and another, as new trustees, and for the settlement of a scheme for the management of the institution. This application was still pending at the date of our inquiry.

It appeared from the minute book of the board that when a quorum did not attend it was the practice to send the cheques required for payment of current expenses to the requisite number of members for signature.

By the rules of the institution it was provided that the governing body "shall consist of a patron, a patroness, a president, vice-patrons, vice-patronesses, guardians, members for life, annual members, committee, three honorary secretaries, a treasurer, an auditor, honorary and corresponding members of the committee. Every subscriber of 10s. or collector of £1 yearly, shall be a member."

County of Dublin: Swords Borough Schools.

The endowment of this institution consisted at the date of our inquiry of the annual sum of £731 16s., the dividends on £24,060 Government Three per cent. Stock, representing the compensation awarded by Parliament to the ancient borough of Swords for the loss of its representation under the Act of Union.

This fund was vested in the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, the Archbishop of Dublin, the Dean of Christ Church (whose office is now held by the Archbishop of Dublin), the Provost of Trinity College, the Dean of St. Patrick's, and the Vicar of the parish of Swords, all for the time being, who were incorporated as trustees by charter in 1804. All the trustees at the date of the charter were necessarily members of the Established Church, but two of the offices have since been opened to members of other denominations. The charter provided that the compensation money should be invested in the Funds, and the interest applied for the maintenance of schools for the daily education of the children of the inhabitants of the borough, in reading, writing, and arithmetic, the children not to be resident boarders, but to receive one frugal meal a day at the school; any surplus remaining after this expenditure to be employed in apprenticing the pupils to useful trades and occupations, and in premiums for the encouragement of agriculture and manufactures, or in such other manner as the trustees might think calculated to promote "the Christian Religion, and morality good order sobriety cleanliness industry and wealth within the borough."

In 1809 £2,000 of the Capital Stock was sold out and expended in erecting commodious school buildings, capable of accommodating 400 pupils.

In 1812 the Parliamentary Commissioners of Inquiry reported in reference to this school: "A school has been for some years past established in this town upon an extensive and liberal plan by the trustees of the compensation fund allowed by Parliament, . . . it was determined to found a school in the town of Swords for the education of the children of the lower orders of the people without any distinction of religious persuasion."

In 1821 a series of rules were drawn up for the management of the school. In one of the memorials subsequently presented to the trustees by the Roman Catholic inhabitants of Swords it was alleged that the regulations, as revised in 1821, did not prescribe the use of the Scriptures as a class-book. Notwithstanding this, however, it appeared that in 1826 the study of the Holy Scriptures formed one of the ordinary school lessons, and that all the teachers in the school were Protestants. James Weldon, who attended the school from October, 1836, to May, 1841, stated to us in the course of his evidence that in his time the majority of the pupils were Roman Catholics, and took part in the reading of the Scriptures, but seemed dissatisfied at its forming part of the instruction. Memorials were presented by the Roman Catholic inhabitants of the borough in 1826, 1833, 1836, 1842, and 1848, praying that Roman Catholic assistant teachers might be provided for the religious instruction of the Roman Catholic children, and that they should not be compelled to attend the religious instruction given by Protestant teachers. None of these memorials, however, were productive of any result. The exclusively Protestant character of the teaching continued, and we were informed that in 1853 the Roman Catholic clergyman of Swords, being apprehensive that, circumstanced as the school then was, under the exclusive control of Protestants, with Protestant Governors, teachers, assistant teachers and monitors, the faith of the Catholic children would be endangered, withdrew the Catholic children from the Borough School. The Roman Catholics then erected a separate school house at a cost of £800 (raised by subscription), which they placed in connexion with the National Board.

In October, 1855 (two years after the secession of the Roman Catholics), the Governors of the school published the following notice in Swords:—

Evid., 5659-60.

“NOTICE.—SWORDS BOROUGH SCHOOLS.

“The Governors of Swords schools being anxious, as they always were, that the schools should be as generally useful as possible to the inhabitants of the borough, and that all grounds of plausible objection against the present system may be removed, now publish as the regulation of the schools what has been found so popular in other parts of Ireland, namely:—

“That no child shall be compelled to receive, or compelled to be present at, any religious instruction to which his or her parents or guardians object; and that the time for giving religious instruction shall be so fixed that no child shall be thereby in effect, excluded directly or indirectly from the other advantages which the schools afford.”

“The Governors have also resolved to allow the children of all persons who have been, during the three years immediately preceding the time of examination, householders within the borough, to go in for apprentice fees which are now raised to the amount of £20.

“The Governors will also take means to apply their surplus funds in promoting habits of industry, cleanliness, and sobriety in the place.

“Signed by order of the Board,

“WILLIAM STUDEENT KENNEDY, Superintendent.

“Dublin, 10th October, 1855.”

7295.*

This notice failed to satisfy the Roman Catholics or to attract their children to the school, and the following extract from a letter addressed in February, 1858, to the Rev. Thomas Kierma, then Parish Priest of Swords, by Cardinal Cullen, may be regarded as setting forth authoritatively the objections then entertained by the Roman Catholic ecclesiastical authorities:—

“I have read and examined the rules lately adopted for the regulation of the school of Swords. There is no provision whatever in them for Catholic masters or Catholic mistresses. There is no provision whatever for instruction in Catholic doctrine, or for the use of Catholic books. The whole management of the school appears to be committed to the Protestant rector and to the Protestant curate of the parish. It appears that religious instruction is to be given every day at two o'clock for an hour. Of course this religious instruction is to be given by the Protestant parson of the parish, or by the Protestant masters and mistresses of the school. According to the way the rule is laid down, it would seem that Catholic children would be bound to attend such Protestant instruction unless their parents entered their objections against such attendance.”

p. 161.*

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that such inadequate measures of reform as were then proposed by the Governors were not likely to secure public confidence in the management of the establishment, or to render the schools generally available for the benefit of the inhabitants of Swords. They stated that they were of opinion that the charity had not been managed with a due regard to the feelings and circumstances of the persons interested in it; that it appeared to them that a charity like the Swords Borough School, the benefits of which were intended to be conferred without religious distinction, ought not to be entrusted to the management of an exclusive board, and especially of one on which the most numerous class of the inhabitants were entirely unrepresented. They recommended that the statutory provisions constituting the Board of Governors should be repealed, the charter rescinded, and the funds and management transferred to a proposed “Board of Commissioners of Endowed Schools.”

No effect was given by the Legislature or Government to this or any other recommendation of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8.

In 1860, the Roman Catholic inhabitants of Swords presented a further memorial to the Governors praying:

*Evid.,
7296-98.*

1st. “That out of the Borough Funds a sum should be allocated to indemnify the outlay of £800, expended by the Catholic parishioners of the borough in the erection of new schools for the education of the Catholic children, male and female, of the borough.

2nd. “That after payment of such indemnity the annual income of the Borough Compensation Fund be yearly divided between the schools, Protestant and Catholic, in the borough, in proportion to the number of Catholic and Protestant inhabitants residing within the borough, the distribution and management thereof to be entrusted either to a new board, composed equally of Protestants and Catholics, or by the present Board, audited by a local committee similarly constituted.

3rd. "That no person should be entitled to the benefit of the Borough Compensation Fund unless he or they, or his or their parents shall have lived within the borough for a period of not less than seven years continuously."

4th. "That each year the accounts of the Borough Compensation Fund, its amount, source, location, annual income and distribution, be published, and duly vouched and audited."

5th. "Or in lieu of the foregoing, that an equitable proportion of the Corpus Fund of this Borough Parliamentary Grant, or its annual income, be, subject to the Deed of Incorporation, appropriated to the use of the Catholic inhabitants of the Borough, and placed under the sole control, management and distribution of a Board to be chosen from amongst the Catholic parishioners of the borough."

The Governors thereupon held a public visitation, the result of which appears in the following minute:—

Evid.,
5714.

"ORDERED—That the Board, according to their Charter, cannot comply with any of the regulations submitted to them at the visitation, except that relating to the account of the Borough Fund, in respect of which the Board is of opinion, that the account of the Borough Compensation Fund, its amount, source, location, annual income, and distribution, should be duly vouched and audited in each year; that the inhabitants of the borough should have the means of inspecting these accounts, and they shall make such arrangements as may appear to them to be necessary for the purpose of effecting these, so far as at present they may not be accomplished."

Public meetings were also held in 1864 and 1868, and on each of these occasions the claims of the Roman Catholic inhabitants of Swords were brought forward, but in the absence of any legislation to give effect to the recommendation of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, or to the proposals of the Roman Catholics, the constitution and powers of the Board have remained unaltered.

We were informed that the Governors met twice a year, generally at the Archbishop's Palace, St. Stephen's Green, Dublin, but with the exception of the Vicar of Swords, who held the office of Superintendent, they had never visited the school, although their examiner had repeatedly called their attention to the great benefit which the school would derive from a visit of some of the Governors at the annual examinations; and although they themselves had passed resolutions to the effect that they would hold visitations once in each year.

In the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, it was stated that they found the attendance small, and the state of education in the boys' school unsatisfactory, that the total number on the rolls in the boys', girls', and infant school was only 65, and that of these but 48 were present to partake of the benefits of an endowment exceeding £700 a year. It was further stated "that the terms of the Charter were not strictly adhered to in the conduct or regulation of the schools, that the Governors did not, as required by the Charter, cause instruction to be given in any branches of manufacture, nor did they provide for the children a wholesome but frugal meal at the schoolhouse, but neglecting the primary objects of the Charter, they established a coal yard and dispensary which, if at all, were justifiable only on the supposition of there being a surplus fund, (a contingency which, in fact, never arose), but that a still more grave error was committed in requiring all children to read as a class book the authorized version of the Scriptures."

p. 161.

The schools consisted of two buildings, the larger containing the boys' and girls' schools and teachers' residences, and the smaller the infant school and the teachers' residence. The average number of pupils on the roll for the year previous to the date of our inquiry, was stated to be 63, made up as follows:—boys 28, girls 19, infants 16.

Evid.,
5439.

About £380 was expended yearly in salaries of teachers and examiners at these three schools; and the Governors, according to the charter, gave a portion of bread to each child in the middle of the day, at a cost for the year 1873 of £26 15s. 4d.

Evid.,
5433.

Prior to 1863 the Governors maintained a coal-yard and dispensary, but in that year the examinations for apprentice fees were thrown open to the children attending the National School, and the coal-yard was discontinued, the salary of the dispensary doctor being at the same time reduced to £25 a year.

Evid.,
5757.

The rules under which the schools were managed at the date of our inquiry were drawn up in 1873, and are printed in extenso in Appendix to Evidence, No. 2, Vol. II., page 594.

Vol II., p

The Governors in each year awarded 12 apprentice fees: 6 (viz., 3 for boys and 3 for girls) to children attending the Borough Schools, and a like number to children resident in the borough not attending the Borough Schools. The highest of these fees was for Borough School children, £21; for non-Borough School children, £18. The fees were awarded by public competition at an open examination held once in each year. Children attending the Borough School but not resident in the borough were allowed to Evid., 5420, et seq. compete, and if successful, were granted half fees. The fees were stated in evidence to us to be much valued, though some of the witnesses considered that they were too small to secure good masters for the apprentices. The amount of the apprentice fees given to pupils of the Borough School was about £105 a year; and of the apprentice fees given to children who were not pupils of the Borough School was about £80 a year.

 5495. The children in the Borough School were all Protestants. This sum of £80 a year was presumed to go to Roman Catholics, who in this way and to this extent only availed themselves of the endowment.
- Evid., 5434. In addition to these apprentice fees money prizes varying from 4s. to 3s. each, for which distinct examinations were held, were distributed twice a year to the best answerers from the Borough and non-Borough Schools. The sums thus distributed amounted in 1878 to £29 0s. 11d.
- Evid., 5499.
 7325. The children who competed as non-Borough School children were the Roman Catholic children attending the National School. In 1878 there were at the June and December examinations, respectively, 194 and 238 competitors from the National Schools, and 62 and 78 from the Borough Schools.
- Evid., 5528. The amount given as apprentice fees to Borough School children for 13 years from 1866 to 1878, inclusive, was £1,309 19s., while the amount given to children educated at the National Schools in the same period was £870. In June, 1877, when a boy from the National School got first place, he was only awarded a fee of £18, while the second boy (a Borough School pupil) was awarded a fee of £21, though the examiner recommended that the first boy should get £21, and the second £20.
- Evid., 7368-9.
 7430-1. The open examinations were conducted by laymen selected by the Rev. Canon MacDonald (who received £25 a year as examiner of the Borough Schools), and were generally graduates of Trinity College, unaccustomed to examine in primary schools; the teachers of the National Schools complained that in consequence their pupils did not answer as well as they otherwise would. They also complained that their pupils were improperly classed with the Borough School children, that they were examined in English History, which was not in the National School programme, and that the standard of education was too high.
7405.
 7426.
 7374. The Protestant population of Swords was stated by the Rev. W. G. Boyce, the Assistant Superintendent of the Borough School, to be about 300. They were, as a rule, persons in easy circumstances. The Roman Catholics were stated by Mr. Cruise, J.P., to number five-sixths of the population. Whether this calculation is accurate or not, they are undoubtedly in a large majority, and include the great body of the poorer classes. The numbers on the rolls of the National schools were stated to us to be 167 in the male school, and 183 in the female school, the average daily attendance in the male school being 119, and in the female school 114.
 7376. The numbers attending the Borough School during the past six years had been gradually declining. The boundary of the parish of Swords includes a larger space than the borough. The Rev. Mr. Boyce stated that, having a difficulty in ascertaining the borough boundaries, he had submitted the matter to the Governors, and that they had made a rule that for the future the borough should be understood as meaning the ecclesiastical parish. Notwithstanding this enlargement of the area from which children could be drawn to the Borough Schools, the number of pupils had fallen from 94 to 71 a few years ago, and at the time of our inquiry it had been reduced to 63. Twenty of the 63 were children of "comfortable farmers or shopkeepers," and a few were sons of comfortable farmers residing in places outside the ecclesiastical parish of Swords.
7375. In the opinion of the Rev. Mr. Boyce 7 of the 63 belonged to portions of the parish outside what was generally regarded as the borough. James Weldon, before mentioned, who stated that he was well acquainted with the boundaries of the borough, said that, excluding the children of temporary residents, the majority of the pupils were children of persons living outside the true boundaries of the borough.
- Evid., 7394-5.
 5619-20. Mr. Cruise, J.P., stated that the Roman Catholics would, prior to the year 1860, have been content with the appointment of Roman Catholic teachers, but would not now be satisfied with anything less than a proportionate part of the funds with which to endow their own National School. He was of opinion that it would be possible, by means of the endowment, to enable both the Borough and the National Schools to afford an education in secular subjects of the same standard as that given by the Model Schools, and that such an arrangement would be a solution of the questions affecting the endowment.
- Evid., 5625. The Rev. Mr. Boyce admitted that it would not be an improvement to the education of either the Protestants or Roman Catholics that they should be educated conjointly. All the witnesses, Protestant and Roman Catholic, united in stating that the present state of affairs was unsatisfactory.

Mr. Moore, reports that he found 22 boys and 33 girls present, that the answering was very creditable, and the writing neat and legible; that the buildings were in excellent order, and sufficiently large to educate every boy, girl, and infant in Swords. He considers the management of the examinations unsatisfactory.

County of Dublin: Mercer's School, Castleknock.

This institution was founded by the will of Mary Mercer (spinster), proved 1st July, 1735, whereby she devised certain moneys, since invested by her directions in the purchase of landed property in the city and county of Dublin, and in Liverpool, to trustees upon trust that:—

“The trustees shall and will give, employ, and bestow the rents, issues, and profits of the said lands, so to be purchased for and towards the clothing, dieting, maintaining, and supporting of twenty-five poor girls, and for their instruction in reading, writing, and working, and qualifying them to be put out apprentices, and until such time as they shall be put out apprentices; and my will is, in case there shall be a surplus of the said rents over and above what my said trustees shall judge proper for the maintenance and support of the aforesaid number of poor girls, that they, the said trustees, employ and apply all such surplus rents for apprenticing and increasing the number of such poor girls to be supported, educated, and maintained in the manner and for the purposes aforesaid.”

The gross annual income of these lands at the date of our inquiry was £863 2s. 9d., including the rent of certain lands purchased in accordance with the will in trust for the cure and relief of such poor indigent sick persons as from time to time should be found and be resident in the parishes of St. Peter, St. Bridget, St. Luke, and St. Nicholas Without. The amount applied to this purpose in 1878 was £92 6s., leaving £770 16s. 9d. for the institution, in addition to which there was a sum of £3,041 19s. 2d. 3 per cent. consols, representing a portion of the Liverpool property taken possession of by the London and North Western Railway Company, the dividends on which were £50 4s. 9d. The fees of paying pupils amounted in 1878 to £130 10s. After deducting all outgoings, the net income of the institution for the year 1878 was £879 3s. 3d.

The trustees appointed by the founder were five in number, viz: The Archbishop of Dublin, the Bishop of Kildare, the Dean of St. Patrick's, the Archbishop of Dublin, and the Rector of St. Bride's, but on the amalgamation of the Bishopric of Kildare with the Archbishopric of Dublin, the number was reduced to four, and at the date of our inquiry was further reduced for all practical purposes to three, owing to an unfortunate quarrel which induced the Rector of St. Bride's to absent himself.

Evid.,

The quorum of trustees being three, a difficulty has been experienced in convening meetings, and no meeting of trustees was held from the 20th June, 1877, to the 13th January, 1879. The Rev. Morgan W. Jellett, LL.D., the Secretary, was practically the manager of the school.

Evid.,

The school premises consisted of a house and two acres of land at Castleknock, in the county of Dublin. The house was erected by the trustees of Morgan's school, which is situated in close proximity. These latter trustees, finding their funds insufficient to maintain both buildings, granted the building in which Mercer's school is held to Mercer's trustees, on the terms that they should keep it in order, and that the girls in Mercer's school should make shirts for the boys in Morgan's school.

The will of the founder imposed no religious restrictions, but the trustees considered that by nominating Protestant clergymen as trustees, the founder evidenced a desire that the institution should be Protestant. All the children at the date of our inquiry were Protestants, and the rules for admission required the following certificate to be signed before any pupil was admitted:—

“We, the Minister and Churchwardens of the Parish of ———, having made diligent inquiry concerning ———, sought to be admitted into Mercer's School, do hereby certify that she is the Daughter of Protestant Parents; is between the age of eight and eleven years, and not subject to any disorder which may incapacitate her from earning her bread or make her a burden on that establishment.”

The number of pupils at the date of our inquiry was thirty-two—twenty-five free, and seven paying pupils. The latter paid £15 a year for board, and £3 for clothing. The age for admission was from eight to eleven years of age, and the pupils were retained till fifteen. Sometimes, however, they were allowed to remain a year longer if they were about to become teachers, and helped in the school work; in some promising cases the trustees had paid apprentice fees to the Dublin training school for teachers, they had also helped one of the pupils into the Alexandra School, Dublin.

The course of instruction comprised English and music, and in some instances French. The girls also made their own clothes, knit their own stockings, and assisted in the house-work. The teaching staff consisted of a schoolmistress who received a salary of £50 a year, and a housekeeper who taught French and music, and received a salary of £35 a year.

The Royal Commissioners, 1834-8, reported that the defects of the building were that it contained no bathroom or water-closet, that the privies were bad, and the lavatory accommodation miserably inadequate. Since then a lavatory and bath-room supplied with hot and cold water have been erected.

The estate was managed by an agent who received 5 per cent. agency fees on the rents received. Some of the property in the city of Dublin appeared to have been much underlet. One of the leases was made in 1848, for a term of ninety-nine years, at a rent of £120, being a lease of six houses in Mary-street, Dublin, the tenement valuation of which was £321. It did not appear from the evidence under what authority the trustees made leases (not being building leases) for terms of 60, or 99, years.

The lands at Rathcoole in the county of Dublin, part of the estate, were stated to be very much intermixed, and the agent informed us that it would be almost impossible, in a great many cases, to ascertain the boundaries.

This school was inspected by Mr. Moore, who reports:—

"This institution impressed me as being in a highly satisfactory condition, both as regards the education and the household arrangements. The answering of the 38 girls present in all the English subjects, including history, was excellent, while they are well instructed in music and drawing, and a few in Latin. Six girls passed at the last Intermediate Examination, two being on the prize list. The house is exactly similar to Morgan's Institution, and the remarks about the infirmary and lavatory equally apply."

This institution was founded by the will of Richard Morgan, dated 10th March, 1773, for clothing, lodging, dieting and educating children of reduced Protestant parents, and for apprenticing them to Protestant masters.

The trustees obtained a private Act of Parliament in the year 1799, to enable them to carry out the trusts of the will.

The net annual income from land was, in 1857, £543 12s. 9d., at the date of our inquiry it was stated to be £822 3s. 9d. made up as follows:—

|---|-------|----|----|
| Gross rent payable out of estates in the City and County of Dublin, and town of Drogheda, County of Limerick, | 1,273 | 8 | 8½ |
| | 559 | 10 | 9 |
| Deduct Poor Rate, incidental expenses, and management of estate, | 1,835 | 5 | 5½ |
| | 167 | 11 | 3½ |
| | 1,665 | 14 | 2 |
| Deduct, 1. Head rents, | £416 | 2 | 5 |
| 2. Rentscharges of which £46 14s. 2d. is terminable in forty-eight years, | 323 | 12 | 6 |
| 3. Yearly instalment for purchase of Newcastle, from Irish Church Temporalities Commissioners (which is terminable in twenty-seven and a half years), | 85 | 10 | 0 |
| 4. Interest on mortgage for part of purchase money of Mill Hill, | 95 | 5 | 6 |
| | 843 | 10 | 5 |
| Approximate net income, | 822 | 3 | 9 |

The foregoing included the yearly rental of the lands of Ballyboggan, £91, out of which a head rent of £42 was payable. The lease under which the trustees held expired, and their profit rent ceased on 29th of September, 1880, so that the income was then reduced by about £47 10s. yearly.

These lands of Ballyboggan were held under a renewable lease from the Archbishop of Dublin, and passed to the Church Temporalities Commissioners, who in compliance with the provisions of the Irish Church Act, 1869, offered a presumption to the trustees, but demanded £2,800, and would not give the lands to them for less, notwithstanding remonstrance. This sum, nearly fifty-nine years' purchase of the profit rent, and over thirty years' purchase of the gross rental, the trustees considered excessive, and the lands were afterwards sold by auction by the Commissioners to strangers for a sum of £1,500. The trustees had decided that, not having the money available, they could not purchase at the auction.

The item "interest on mortgage for part of purchase-money of Mill Hill," represents the annual interest on a mortgage for £1,500, three-fourths of a sum of £2,000, which was the amount fixed by the Church Temporalities Commissioners for the purchase-money of the lands of Mill Hill, also held by the trustees under them, and on the purchase of which, under the right of preemption, three-fourths of the purchase-money was left outstanding.

The leases of other portions of the property which were, in 1857, held under renewable leases had since been converted into grants in perpetuity, and the tenure had been thus rendered secure.

There was also a sum of £201 14s. 6d., new £3 per cent. stock standing to the credit of the trustees.

The affairs of the Charity were managed by seven governors, nominated by the will of the founder, viz. — the Primate, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, the Archbishop of Dublin, the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and the Lord Mayor of Dublin, all ex officio. As a rule, beyond meeting in Dublin once a year, and exercising their rights of nomination, the governors did not personally take any part in the management.

The governors nominated a local committee, the members of which at the date of our inquiry were Lord Annaly, Ion Treant Hamilton, xr., Captain W. Brinkley, Charles Thompson, Henry F. Colley, and Colonel Vesey. The committee met once a month.

The school was in the charge of a head master appointed by the governors, and an assistant appointed and removable by the head master.

The governors admitted twenty free boys, nominated by the governors in rotation as vacancies arose, and twenty paying pupils paying £18 a year each, and nominated in the same manner.

The regulations for the admission of free foundation pupils required that each boy :—

* Must (1) have a nomination from the Governor whose turn it is to present; (2) be the child of Protestant parents; (3) be between eight and eleven years; (4) have a certificate of baptism; (5) have a certificate of marriage of parents; and (6) have a certificate from the medical attendant of the school that he is a healthy child; and a declaration must be made before a Magistrate by the next-of-kin that the boy is destitute of support."

The regulations for admission of paying pupils were the same, with the exception of the declaration as to destitution. It was remarkable that while free pupils remained on an average for upwards of four years in the school, the paying pupils remained less than one year and a half.

The course of instruction comprised Scripture, Church formularies, reading, writing, arithmetic, Euclid, English grammar, History (English, Roman, and Grecian), geography, mapping, &c.

The discipline of the school appeared to be unsatisfactory, as in one year, 1875, the expulsion of five boys was recommended, and the minutes of the Committee showed that boys were frequently running away. The close proximity of Mercer's Girls' School was stated by the master to cause a difficulty in managing the boys, who, except on Sundays to go to church, and on Thursdays to go to practice singing, were only "occasionally let out," and then only "for a walk with the assistant."

The free boys were stated to be educated, boarded, and clothed at the expense of the Charity. They, however, received only one tweed suit each year, and the master, who had himself formerly been a pupil, stated that the clothes were "not what they used to be," and that the old clothes were not in a condition to wear when the new ones were given. The boys thus had not a change of clothes; it would also appear that ordinary repairs were not properly attended to, as on several occasions, it was stated that boys could not go to church in consequence of having "broken boots."

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, condemned the mode in which the yearly accounts of the estate were furnished by the then agent (who was the father of Mr. C. W. Hamilton, the agent at the date of our inquiry). No change had, however, since been made in the system of accounting, and the rentals were still made up to a gale day twelve months behind the day up to which the outgoings were charged.

Several new lettings had been made since 1857, and the rental was increased in consequence by about £250 per annum.

The charge for paying pupils was increased since 1857 from £12 to £18, and their number had decreased.

The school was inspected by Mr. Moore, who reports:—

"The answering of the boys, though passable, was by no means so good as might be expected in a school where there are two masters for 28 boys. The writing was good, and the maps drawn by the pupils excellent.

"The house is in good repair, and the internal arrangements satisfactory, with the exception of the infirmary and lavatory. The former seemed to me too near the dormitories, and the latter too far away from them, as it is on the basement floor.

"All the boys are members of the Irish Church."

App. D,

The estates were inspected by Mr. Murphy, who reports that the annual rental amounts to £1,874 4s. 6d., the acreage being 743A. 1R. 25P. The outgoings were £1,010 19s. 2d., leaving a net income of £863 5s. 4d. He considered the accounts to be accurately and neatly kept, and carefully audited; the Governors have no Bank account, and the agent acts as their Banker and Cashier, and at certain periods has considerable sums in his hands. Mr. Murphy remarks:—"The Governors are relieved of some trouble, no doubt, but I do not think this system a good one as a general rule. The interests of the Governors appear to me to be most carefully looked after by the agent."

County of Dublin: Stewart Institution for Idiotic and Imbecile Children, Palmerstown, Chapelizod.

Report

In the year 1868, the late Henry H. Stewart, M.D., the proprietor of "The Lucan Spa Asylum for Lunatic Patients of the Middle Class," offered to hand over his asylum (valued by him at £1,000), and a donation of £4,000, payable at the death of himself and Mrs. Stewart, for the purpose of founding an "Institution for the Protection, Training, and Education of Idiotic and Imbecile Children." A committee of subscribers to the proposed institution met in July, 1868, accepted Dr. Stewart's offer, and elected a committee to take the necessary steps to get the institution into active operation.

From the report of the committee for the year ending 31st December, 1879, (a copy of which was furnished to us by the Secretary), it appears that considerable sums have been subscribed and given as legacies and donations since the year 1869. The institution has been transferred from its original site at Lucan to its present position at Chapelizod, where premises were purchased for £3,581 9s. 11d., on which improvements were made and buildings erected at a cost of upwards of £25,000, the former premises at Lucan being surrendered. The institution consists of two branches. First—the original Asylum for lunatic patients of the middle class, and Second—the Institution for teaching imbecile children. On the 31st December, 1879, there were in the institution fifty-one pupils—twenty-one boys and thirty girls.

According to the rules the benefit of the Institution is open to children of all religious denominations whose parents or guardians, being fully informed as to the nature and management, deliberately seek their admission; but the inculcation of religious principles being a necessary basis of the training of the children, the institution is conducted on Protestant principles of the broadest and most unsectarian character.

Pupils are admitted:—First.—By election, either wholly or partially free. Pupils whose parents or guardians pay a portion of the expenses of care and maintenance are allowed additional votes in proportion to the guaranteed annual payments at the rate of twenty votes for every £1 contributed. Second.—Paying for care and maintenance, the minimum rate being £50 per annum. These pupils are admitted without any election, but they reside with the free pupils, and are treated in exactly the same manner. If special attendance be required, the charge is increased.

The Board of management of the institution consists of a patron, H.R.H. The Prince of Wales; vice-patrons, presidents (donors of £100 and upwards), vice-presidents, (donors of £50 and upwards), governors (donors of £21 and upwards), and members of council (being annual subscribers of £5 5s.)

Rep., p. 183. The Royal Commissioners, 1834-8, reported that a sum of £10,000 had been abstracted by a former agent of the Evans Charities by means of a forged power of attorney, and that the trustees had recovered £9,300 5s. 4d. after litigation which involved their funds to a considerable extent. The result has been that the trustees of these Charities have at present a net rent of about £900 a year together with dividends on £577 7s. 6d. Government Three per Cent. Stock to meet annuities of £1,350 bequeathed to various charities, so that it has become necessary to make a rateable statement of each of these annuities. Thus in 1878 the grant to the school was reduced from £92 6s. 2d. to £74 2s. 10d.

County of Meath; Oldcastle Schools.

Comm., 1854-8.
Rep., Vol. III., p. 188.
Evid.,
8298-471. This endowment is managed under a scheme of the Court of Chancery, settled in 1857. Lawrence Gilson, in 1810, bequeathed property to support a school for the education of the children of the parish of Oldcastle, and next of parishes of Leagherow, Moylagh, Killeagh, and Kilbride, and, if there be room, of the neighbouring parishes, without distinction as to creed. The scheme appointed five trustees—the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant, the Protestant Rector of Oldcastle for the time being, the Roman Catholic parish priest of Oldcastle for the time being, a Protestant layman, and a Roman Catholic layman. The trustees at the date of our inquiry, in addition to the Chief Secretary, were the Rev. Mr. Durdin, Rector of Oldcastle; the Rev. Mr. Allen, the Parish Priest; Sir Walter Nugent, Bart., and Mr. James Lennox Naper. The money constituting the endowment of the schools was invested in the Government Funds in England and produced an annual income of about £782. Mr. Naper informed us that the school was a free school until about two years before our inquiry, when, the salaries of the masters being considered insufficient, a system of charging very small fees was tried, which had answered well. The average daily attendance in the year 1878-9 was 320 children, and the average number on the roll 525. In the boys' school there were 36 Protestants, and 157 Roman Catholics, and in the girls' school 23 Protestants and 177 Roman Catholics. No difficulty whatever had been experienced in the management of the different denominations. Some received a purely primary education; some a more advanced one. There were four schools—for boys, girls, infants, and for industrial training in agriculture. Mr. Naper was of opinion that the agricultural school was unnecessary. There was a farm held under a lease for lives attached to the school of about 12 acres, which "just paid its way." It was managed by the second master; but the agricultural teaching was confined entirely to the school-room.

Evid.,
8296.
8294-5. By discontinuing the farm a sum of £90 a year would be saved to the charity. An inspector, who made a half-yearly inspection and examination, had been appointed by the trustees according to the Court of Chancery scheme. We were informed that his reports had always been favourable. Mr. FitzGerald, one of the head inspectors under the National Board, filled the post at the date of our inquiry. Professor Baldwin had been appointed inspector of the agricultural school; but since the boys ceased to take part in the farming operations he had discontinued his visits.

Evid.,
8406-17. The expenditure on the school in the year 1878-9, amounted to £748 16s. 9d., in addition to which the funds had been burdened with the trustees' costs of passing their account, £15 19s. 9d., and their costs under orders of the Court of Chancery in England, £30 12s. 2d.; also the Attorney-General's costs on passing the account,

£3 16s., and under the orders £12 13s. 10d. These included the costs of obtaining the appointment of a trustee to fill a vacancy caused by the death of the Parish Priest, which involved an expense to the charity of £35, and like charges necessarily, under the present system of management, would recur. There was, at the date of our inquiry, a deficiency of income to meet the expenditure, of £152, which had been growing for about ten years. The school did not pay interest on that sum; Mr. Naper had advanced the money himself. He stated that, in order to bring the expenditure within the income, the agricultural school and farm should be given up, which would also allow of the employment of two additional teachers. Religious instruction in the school was given by the two chaplains—the Parish Priest and the Protestant Curate of Oldcastle, who had been appointed under the scheme.

Mr. Moore reports:—

"It would be well if there were many more such schools as this in Ireland, both as regards religious and secular instruction. . . . The latter is of a very high order, and fits the boys not only for commercial life, but also for competition at the Intermediate and other examinations. I examined most of the boys either by paper or viva voce, in the usual English subjects, also in Euclid and algebra. The answering was excellent in all these subjects. There were 122 present, and the roll is composed of 144 Catholics, and 32 Irish Church.

"The answering of the 122 girls present was not inferior to that of the boys. . . . The schools are conducted according to the National system. I have no doubt that their present state of efficiency is greatly owing to the thorough and systematic inspection of Mr. Fitzgerald, one of the head inspectors under the National Board."

County of Meath; Dempsey Male and Female Schools, Kells.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that these institutions were endowed in 1838, under the will of Catherine Dempsey, with lands containing 314a. 3s. 33r., producing a net annual income of £439 16s. 6d., and with sites granted in 1839-40, subject to a rent of £40. The endowment was for the education and clothing of poor children of the town of Kells and of the parish, according to the Roman Catholic boundaries, under the regulation of trustees. The number of children on the roll in 1857 was 220 boys, and 112 girls. At the date of our inquiry the boys' school had been placed under the management of the Christian Brothers, and was conducted according to their system. Four of the Brothers had charge of the establishment, three teaching, and the fourth attending to domestic duties. They received from the trustees of the endowment £160 per annum, with a furnished residence. A non-resident singing master visited the school twice a week, and received £12 per annum from the endowment.

The female school had been placed under the management of the Sisters of Mercy, of whom sixteen acted as teachers, residing in the institution, and receiving £120 per annum from the endowment for their services. There was no religious restriction upon the admission of pupils, but the pupils in both schools were at the date of the returns all Roman Catholics, though a few Protestants had from time to time attended the boys' school. We were unable to ascertain that the foundation was denominational. In the boys' school a good English education was given, with instruction in elementary mathematics, Latin, and natural philosophy for the advanced pupils. There were 240 boys on the roll, of whom about ninety paid one penny per week, and the rest were free pupils. The number of girls on the roll was 339, with an average attendance of 213. There was a "select school" in which a higher education was given, and the pupils paid £2 per annum each, with music £4 extra; also two lower schools in which some pupils paid one penny per week, but about 120 were free. The school fees in 1878 produced £140.

We were informed that the property was managed by Mr. Ford, 61, Lower Dominick-street, Dublin, as agent for the trustees. The annual value of the buildings of the boys' school was £35; and of the Christian Brothers' residence £17; of the buildings of the girls' school £42; and of the Nuns' residence £19. The school buildings were erected by the trustees, and the schools and residences (which were rented) were kept in repair by them. The net income derived from the endowment was stated to be £711 2s. 3d. per annum, out of which £106 was paid for the rents of the school buildings and teachers' residences.

The property of the endowment was returned to us as consisting of the following lands, all situate near Kells, viz.:—Balresk held in fee, subject to £10 17s. 6d., tithe-rent-charge, containing 286a. 1s. 30r. statute measure, and Syddenrath and Southpark, containing 232a. 0s. 35r. statute measure, formerly leasehold, but part of which was held at will since the expiration of the lease on 1st May, 1878, subject to £148 18s. 6d. rent, and £11 2s. tithe-rent-charge. Of the lands of Balresk 204a. 2s. 21r. were let to two tenants at rents amounting to £332 0s. 6d., the poor law valuation being £329 3s. The remaining eighty-two acres or thereabouts were set for the season by the trustees at a rent, for 1878, of £125 6s. 10d., the poor law valuation being £98 5s. The lands of Syddenrath and Southpark were let to seven yearly tenants, at rents amounting to £424 12s. 11d., the poor law valuation being £292 15s. It was stated that of the leasehold property, which produced £364 12s. 5d., one undivided fourth had fallen out of lease, and two other fourths would be out of lease in 1880, by which the income of the endowment would be lessened by over £200 per annum.

p. 274.

Mr. Moore reports that the boys' school presented no material difference from the other schools taught by the Christian Brothers. He found the girls well instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic, but the answering in grammar, geography, and spelling, was indifferent. There were 182 girls present, of whom thirty-seven composed an intermediate school. He thought it would be a great help to the teachers of the other pupils if they were subject to the periodical and judicious inspection given by the National Board.

Meath; The Rev. William Tew's Endowment for a School at Raddanstown.

Com., 1854-
8, Rep., Vol.
III., p. 192.

The Rev. William Tew, by his will, dated 4th February, 1830, bequeathed £200 to the minister of the parish of Raddanstown, and its united parishes in the Diocese and County of Meath, and to his successors, Ministers of said parish, the interest thereof only to be applied towards "the establishment and support of a parochial school, and for the payment of the salary or salaries of a Protestant schoolmaster and schoolmistress for instructing the children of the poor inhabitants of the said parish of Raddanstown and its united parishes, to be nominated and appointed by him and his successors. The sole management of said school to be vested in them or their licensed curates assistant."

It appeared from the report of the Royal Commission on Endowed Schools, 1854-8, that the endowment was not in operation in 1857, "because the rector of Raddanstown was not aware of the existence of the fund."

Return.

From a Return furnished to us by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, it appeared that many attempts had been made to establish a school in conformity with the intention of the testator, but that owing to "the smallness of the endowment, the paucity of pupils, the erection of other schools at more convenient places, and various other causes, such attempts were always unsuccessful." From the same return it further appeared that the endowment, which had been increased from time to time by the investment of dividends, consisted at the date of our inquiry of a sum of £809 6s. 10d., Government Three per Cent. Stock, standing in the names of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests.

The accruing dividends were paid over half-yearly on the joint receipt of the Bishop of Meath and the Rector of Raddanstown (now united with the neighbouring parish of Moyglare), and the fund was applied by them in conjunction with the Rector of Agher and Rector of Rathcore, in accordance with a scheme sanctioned by the Board of Charitable Donations and Bequests.

The Rev. Garrett Nugent, secretary to the Diocesan Council of Meath, in reply to a letter from our Secretary, stated that "there was no school in Raddanstown or Moyglare, but that individual children from these parishes were helped, and if no claim was made for them, the money was divided between the National schools of Agher and Rathcore, both under the patronage of the Irish Church."

Westmeath; Hevey's Charity, Mullingar.

Com.,

Rep., p. 159.
Evid.,
16688-893.

This endowment was derived under the will of James Hevey, made in 1835, who devised his lands to the Right Rev. John Cantwell, the Right Rev. William Higgins, and the Rev. John Kelly, to be applied in the establishment of a school or College for the support, maintenance, and education of as many poor children, resident in the parish of Mullingar, as the endowment would be sufficient to support, and for their further education in such branches of literature, science, and theology, as the five trustees of the will (being two Roman Catholic Bishops, the Parish Priest of Mullingar, and two laymen), or the majority of them should think fit; that the trustees or the majority of them should have full power to select such and so many children as they should think fit, and to dismiss and expel any; provided that no difference of religion should be the ground or reason for not selecting, excluding, or expelling any child from the benefit of the bequest.

There was a provision in the will to the effect that if any court or tribunal within the realm, or the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, should attempt to regulate, or alter, or meddle with the provisions made by the founder's will, the original bequests should be revoked, and the whole property was thenceforth to be vested in the three persons named in the will, as joint tenants discharged of every trust.

The endowment consisted of estates in the county Westmeath, held in fee simple, producing an annual rental of about £600 a year.

At the date of our inquiry we found that eight schools had been erected by the trustees, of which four were under the management of the Christian Brothers; one was a classical school; under the management of a Roman Catholic clergyman; and three were under the management of the Presentation Nuns.

of Mullingar, and were under one roof with the dwelling of the Christian Brothers, the classical school; and the apartments of the clergyman in charge of it. These schools consisted of four class rooms, and were practically one school, as were also the three schools under the management of the Presentation Nuns. The Christian Brothers were supported and maintained out of the endowment, but the children received education only.

The schools were built partly out of the rents of the lands and partly by loans. The rents were allowed to accumulate for several years after the probate of the will. In 1841 the convent school was built, at a cost of £2,060; in 1855 the Christian Brothers' school, dwelling house, and classical school, were built; £3,000 was borrowed at 4 per cent. from the Nuns to meet the cost of the buildings. All but £450 had been paid off in instalments of £500 each. The total cost of the buildings was over £8,000. No boarder had ever been maintained in the school; though, in building, provision was to a small extent made for their accommodation, "the trustees came to the conclusion that it would be impracticable" to have them. The rooms intended for boarders had been "utilized by the clergyman having charge of the classical school." Evid., 16709-10.

The Christian Brothers' school was attended by 490 children of a humble class, who received an education a little in advance of ordinary primary education. Evid., 16712-14.

The intermediate or classical school was attended by about twenty-six children of the middle class, who paid £4 a year each, and who were taught English, Latin, Greek, geometry, and history. The clergyman who performed the duties of master was paid by the fees of the pupils, and not out of the endowment. The sole benefit which this school derived from the endowment was the use of the premises. There were no free pupils. Evid., 16717.

The girls' school, under the management of the Presentation Nuns, was in connexion with the National Board, and attended by thirty-five children, who chiefly belonged to the "non-pauper classes." School fees were not compulsory, but such as were received were applied to improving the class rooms, and the purchase of books, slates, &c.

There were no prizes offered out of the endowment at any of the schools, but the Christian Brothers and Presentation Nuns gave prizes of books, &c.; but not of money, from their own funds.

The teaching staff consisted, in the Christian Brothers' school, of five professed and one lay Brother, in the girls' school of nine Nuns and seven mistresses, and, in the intermediate school, of one master, the clergyman before mentioned, who had to do all the teaching in all the branches.

The Christian Brothers received from the trustees £240 per annum; and the Nuns received £25 a year, which, with much larger sums of their own, they expended upon the support of the infant school managed by them, and in giving assistance in clothing and food to the children. Evid., 16724, 16728.

The original trustees under the will were—the Right Rev. John Cantwell, Roman Catholic Bishop of Meath, the Right Rev. W. Higgins, Roman Catholic Bishop of Clogher, the Rev. Patrick Kelly, P.P., Mullingar, Sir Richard Nagle, and Gerald Dease; and the trustees at the date of our inquiry were the Most Rev. Dr. Nulty, Roman Catholic Bishop of Meath, the Most Rev. Dr. Donnelly, Roman Catholic Bishop of Clogher, Sir Walter Nugent, Edward McEvoy, and the Rev. Joseph Coyne, P.P. The trustees had no stated times of meeting, and their attendances appeared to have been very irregular. From 1873 to 1878, although meetings were regularly summoned, they "failed to have a quorum;" and the minutes of a meeting held in April, 1878, were not signed until a meeting held on the 15th January, 1880. Evid., 16699, 16764, 16773.

The will directed the accounts to be published annually, but this direction was not complied with. The accounts were published at intervals and explained from the pulpit. The will also directed that a separate account book should be kept. This was done until November, 1864, since which time the accounts have been kept in a book headed "Dr. Nulty in account with Hevey's Charity and General Accounts," containing the Bishop's accounts with different charities having no connexion with Hevey's endowment. Evid., 16819-23.

The Rev. Joseph Coyne, the Parish Priest of Mullingar, visited and inspected the schools once a week, according to the provisions of the will, but did not receive the £30 annually which the will directed should be paid to him. He was appointed in 1873 as Secretary and treasurer, and kept all the accounts of the expenditure, which was vouched for by receipts produced to the trustees whenever they happened to meet.

From a report presented to the trustees in 1854, it appeared that the estate (excepting half an acre valued at £4, but let at £1 per annum) had been let in two holdings; one containing 191a. 3a. 10r., and of which the Poor-law valuation was £292, was let at an annual rental of £357 17s. 3d.; the other containing 177a. 1a. 32r., and of which the Poor-law valuation was £282 10s., was let at an annual rental of £319 8s. 3d., subject to a tithe-rentcharge of £15 3s. 6d. per annum, and to an annuity of £38 to the Rev. P. Kelly. The latter division was held by lease for one life or twenty-one years, and at the date of our inquiry had been sublet at a profit rent for three years. During the three years preceding our inquiry a considerable portion of the rents had remained uncollected, which had reduced the income of the estate by one-half. The tenant of the first mentioned holding owing one and a half years' rent on the 1st May, 1878, was threatened with eviction. He claimed £3,000 compensation for improvements, and the trustees entered into an arrangement with him, whereby they agreed to relet the lands to him at the same rent as before for thirty-one years or for one life, they relinquished their claim to the arrears of rent, the tenant relinquishing any claims for compensation for improvements up to the date of the agreement. The other tenant had been permitted to assign his holding to a purchaser who "guaranteed" payment of the arrear, but it had not been received up to the date of our inquiry.

The lands were principally grazing lands, and the two principal tenants had erected houses on their farms, and expended money in improvements.

Mr. William Mooney, the agent, produced no accounts of his own, but gave his evidence from accounts furnished to him by the treasurer, which were extremely imperfect. He stated that he never saw the accounts except when he happened to be present at a meeting of the trustees, which had only occurred on two occasions since his appointment. The Rev. Mr. Coyne stated that Mr. Mooney collected the rents without charging any poundage, and had been appointed receiver on account of the difficulties the trustees had had with one of the tenants before alluded to. His law charges in connexion with that matter amounted to £8 9s. 4d.

All the school buildings have been erected on ground held from Lord Greville by lease for ninety-one years.

Mr. Mooney stated that there was a growing demand for intermediate education in Mullingar, that the boys came from a considerable distance to avail themselves of the education given in the college, and he had no doubt that, if it were in the power of the trustees to extend it, there would be a demand for education corresponding with the increased income.

Although James Hevey directed by his will that differences of religion were not to guide the trustees in their selection of children for the benefits of the endowment, only one Protestant was attending the schools at the date of our inquiry, but we were informed that any applications for admission made by persons other than Roman Catholics had always been acceded to. No distinction was made, but the religion of the pupils was in each case ascertained with a view to allowing non-Catholics to be absent during religious instruction.

p. 275.

Mr. Moore reports that the answering of the boys in the senior classes was highly satisfactory, and that the junior classes were quite as well instructed as they could be in any ordinary National school.

Mr. Mahaffy reports as to the classical school:—

Westmeath: Wilson's Hospital, Leney.

Rep., Vol.
III., p. 220.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this endowment consisted of estates situated in the counties of Westmeath, Longford, Kildare, and Dublin, producing annually £3,689 18s. 8d., and of £3,315 6s. 3d. surplus income of estates invested in Government Stock, producing annually £54 16s. 8d. It was derived under the wills of Andrew Wilson, dated in 1734, and of William Wilson, dated in 1743, which directed the erection of a school-house adjoining the hospital for the maintenance therein of Protestant boys of Westmeath or adjacent counties, not exceeding 150, to be selected by trustees, and to be instructed in reading, writing, and the principles of the Protestant religion, by Protestant masters.

Mr. Charles Hamilton, the agent of the estates, informed us that there had been no change in the extent of the estates since 1857, that the rental had increased to £4,141 19s. 8d. a year, and that there was in addition £5,360 17s. Government Stock, invested in the names of the trustees, and producing annually £157 13s. 9d.

By an Act of Parliament, 2nd Geo. III., the Archbishop of Armagh, the Archbishop of Dublin, the Archbishop of Tuam, the Bishop of Meath, and the Bishop of Kilmore, and their heirs and successors were incorporated as trustees in accordance with the directions of the original will, and given full powers as such for the management of the property. The preamble of the Act sets forth that the will directed that out of the estates was to be built and maintained a hospital for the habitation of aged men, being Protestants and decayed housekeepers of the county Westmeath or other adjacent counties, not exceeding the number of forty, and that the school should be maintained as an addition to the hospital.

It appeared from the evidence of Mr. Hamilton that the cost of maintaining the hospital and school in 1878 amounted to £3,666 17s. 2½d. Mr. Hamilton also stated that the trustees were very anxious about raising the character of the education, and had employed Mr. Fitzgerald, head inspector of the National Board, to report to them; it was expected that a very great improvement would be made in consequence.

The minutes recorded only one meeting of the trustees in each year—in 1875, the Primate and Bishop of Meath were present; in 1876, the Primate and Bishop of Kilmore; in 1877, the Primate and Bishop of Kilmore; in 1878, the Archbishop of Dublin and Bishop of Meath. The master received sums of money from the agent on account as required, and accounted to the trustees at their annual meetings. Mr. Hamilton had the whole management of the property, and at the date of our inquiry, October 15th, 1879, the last rental furnished by him to the trustees was made up to 1st November, 1877, but the account current which accompanied it was brought down to November 1st, 1878. The last Monday in November was fixed by the statute as the time at which the agent should account. There was "a hanging gale allowed to the tenants on the property," and this with the "half-year's rent in process of collection" was referred to by Mr. Hamilton to account for the system of charging his outgoings for a year later than the rental, and for allowing the rental to be one year in arrear. The question of abatement of rents he said would have to be considered by the trustees, and he informed us that they contemplated a large outlay on drainage. The rents had been usually fully paid up.

Mr. Hamilton took no part in the management of the institution. He stated that in 1868, £1,800 stock had been sold out for building purposes.

The Rev. H. T. Ringwood, Head Master, who died during the progress of our inquiries, had stated in a return furnished by him, that Wilson's Hospital consisted of a square building including a court, and two wings; in the main building, in addition to the residence of the chaplain, were the apartments for the old men and schoolmaster, the offices, and a chapel, where daily service was performed. The west wing contained playrooms and a dormitory, and the east wing class rooms, the eating room, and three dormitories. There were in addition to this wing an infirmary sufficiently commodious, and extensive offices and yards. The hospital was built in 1761, additions were made in 1854 and 1868, at the cost of the endowment, and the buildings were sufficiently large for present purposes. The course of instruction was reading, writing, arithmetic, and the Catechism and doctrines of the Protestant Church. A sufficient supply of books was provided at the school, and there were other educational appliances. The salary of the Head Master was £500 a year, and he performed the duties of Master, Chaplain, and superintendent. He was assisted by a first master at a salary of £100 a year, and a second master at a salary of £60. The Head Master and the assistants were appointed by the trustees. The boys, free pupils, were not admitted under eight years of age nor over eleven, and did not leave till they were about fourteen. The average number of pupils on the roll was 152, all boarders, and professedly of the Protestant Church. There were no exhibitions, but annual examinations were contemplated, at which prizes were to be given in the shape of fees of £10, payable in instalments to the trade masters to whom the boys should be apprenticed.

On the death of Mr. Ringwood the Rev. Hill Wilson White, A.M., formerly Head Master of Navan Endowed School, was appointed Head Master of the Hospital.

The state of instruction at this school was very favorably reported on by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, but our inspector, Mr. Moore, reports:—

"The answering of the boys was not satisfactory in spelling, geography, arithmetic, or Euclid, and only passable in the other subjects. This is not to be wondered at when we consider that 129 boys are taught a course including history, Euclid, algebra, and drawing by a staff which consists of but one assistant and one monitor.

"The house is very old, but I am quite sure the most will be made of it by the present manager, who has but lately been appointed.

"The system of urinals in dormitories, which is in force here, cannot be too strongly condemned, and Mr. White informed me that he would have them at once removed."

"No encouragement is given in learning trades, and there are no workshops of any kind in connexion with the establishment."

"I noticed some seven or eight beds on a very draughty lobby outside one of the dormitories, and on inquiry found that boys were made to sleep there as a punishment for untidy habits. I consider this a dangerous and unsatisfactory system."

A return furnished to us showed that the payments by the agent to the head master for the several years from 1858 to 1878 were as follows:—

p. 321.*

Mr. Murphy, who inspected the estates, reports that they are situate in the counties of Westmeath, Kildare, Dublin, and Longford. They contain 5,584a. 2r. 7r. statute measure, let to yearly tenants, and they comprise in addition a head rent of £96, and a rentcharge of £179 19s. 3d. per annum. The rental of the lands amounts to £3,874 1s. 8d., and the Poor Law valuation to £3,713 17s., excluding the buildings. If the valuation of the houses were added, the rental would probably be found at least 6 per cent. below the valuation. The lands comprise a great variety of soil, and appear generally let at very moderate rents—the tenantry appear comfortable, and many of their houses exceedingly good. The trustees have drained some portions of the estate, and added the reclaimed land to the adjoining holdings; they allocate £200 per annum to the improvement of the estate, and many of the tenants have thus been assisted to build their "capital houses." During the winter 1879–80, a number of the tenants were kept in employment by the trustees in making improvements on their own lands.

The portion of the estate upon which Wilson's Hospital stands contains 251a. 2r. 21r., of these 92a. 2r. 38r., valued at £63 10s., were let for grazing to a tenant at a rent of £85 15s. The remaining lands were retained in the hands of the trustees as a dairy-farm, and stocked by their own cattle, for the supply of the hospital with milk and butter, under arrangements which did not appear satisfactory and seemed to require careful consideration, as 139 acres were devoted to this purpose, in addition to 20 acres occupied by the buildings, garden, yards, and cartilage. The annual outgoings were £784 19s. 7d., the net income of the institution was £3,494 10s. 3d., and in 1878 the expenditure had been £3,666 6s. 2d.

Wicklow; Crofton School, Inchinappa, Rathnew.

Mrs. M. A. Crofton by her will, dated 17th December, 1825, charged a sum of £40 (Irish) per annum, upon her estate in the county of Wicklow, to be applied "towards the maintenance and support of a school for the education of the poor children in the Protestant religion," for which purpose she also devised two acres of land on her said estate. The will contained a declaration by the testatrix that she did not make this bequest during the life of her husband, Rev. H. W. Crofton.

Mr. Hercules H. G. MacDonnell, Secretary of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, stated to us, that "this annuity accrued from April, 1862. In 1867 the Board urged its application; but no principal fund having been left for building a school, the schoolhouse was not completed till 1872, on the site selected by testatrix's heir on his property, but which proved to be most inconvenient, as being remote from all the Protestant families. Application has been made to the Commissioners to sanction an exchange to another site, but the proposal has not yet been carried out." It appeared that Mr. MacDonnell on visiting the site pronounced it to be "in a most unsuitable position, not likely ever to be attended by Protestant pupils."

The Crofton estate having passed under the management of the Court of Chancery as the property of a minor, the Lord Chancellor made an order, dated 22nd April, 1880, in reference to the school, from which the following is an extract. "It appearing that the original site has become unsuitable and inconvenient having regard to the residence and distribution of the population in the parish, and as being in a position where few poor children do now reside; and it further appearing that proposals have been made with the consent and approbation of the then proprietor of the said Crofton estate, with a view to procure a transfer of the endowment devised for the said school (with the exception of the schoolhouse and land) upon the terms that another schoolhouse, on a more suitable site, should be provided by or for the parish, and that Lieutenant-Colonel Charles George Tottenham, a parishioner of the same parish, had proposed to grant free of rent a sufficient portion of land for the purpose of erecting a schoolhouse for the said charity, in a more suitable and convenient situation, upon the terms that the endowment by way of money provided for the said charity, should be attached to the school erected on the said new site, and that the existing schoolhouse and premises should be transferred to the said parish of Killiskey, or to a proper person as a trustee for the same, in order that the said schoolhouse and premises should be retransferred to the said Crofton estate; his Lordship doth declare that it would be advantageous to the said charity, and also to the estate of the minor, that the site of the school for the purpose of the said charity should be changed to the site proposed to be substituted for the present site."

At the date of our inquiry Mr. Mac Donnell stated, "a scheme is now being settled by the Court in accordance with the foregoing order," but we were unable to ascertain when the charity, which had been entitled to the endowment from 1862, was likely to come into useful operation.

Wexford; Tait's School.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-5, reported this endowment to consist of a sum of £7,840 5s. 8d., representing the residuary property of William Tait, who died in the year 1794, bequeathed by him for the establishment of a charity school in Wexford. The Commissioners also stated that the school had not yet been established at the date of their report on account of the disagreement of trustees as to the construction of the will.

Rep., Vol.
III., p. 246.

From a statement furnished to us by the Secretaries of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests on the 9th of July, 1879, it appears that the Commissioners having, after protracted proceedings, recovered the fund, had a scheme settled by the Court of Chancery on the 1st of July, 1858, which was confirmed by Order of 29th January, 1859. The trustees found difficulty in obtaining a suitable site for the school, which caused further delay. The school-house was erected between the years 1864 and 1866.

In 1877, statements were laid before the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests, from which it appeared that the nature of the school had been changed from the original intention, and that the introduction of paying boarders and of too high a standard of education would gradually have the effect of withdrawing the pupils of the humbler class for whom the school had been specially designed. An amended scheme was thereupon sanctioned by the Court of Chancery by which it was provided that all the pupils should be entitled to receive a sound English commercial and mathematical education, and that those who paid £3 extra might also be instructed in French and elementary classics, and that in addition to four free boarders and twenty-five free day boys, the trustees should be at liberty to admit day pupils paying fees of not more than £5 per annum, but no paying boarders.

The endowment at the date of our inquiry consisted of a sum of £8,197 7s. 8d. Government Three per cent. Stock, with the school buildings, and 1A. 3s. 18P. statute measure of land.

The present Head Master, Mr. Richard P. Caldwell, had been appointed to the post on the 1st March, 1879. From a return furnished to us by him it appeared that the number of pupils in the school at the date of our inquiry was twenty-four—four free boarders, members of the Church of Ireland, and twenty day boys (two Presbyterians, two Methodists, and sixteen members of the Church of Ireland) of whom eight were free. The paying day boys paid from £1 to £4 per annum. The course of instruction comprised English and mathematics.

Return.

The school was inspected by Mr. Moore, who reports:—

p. 276.

"This school is very beautifully situated on an eminence just outside the town. The building is large, and suitable for about twenty-six boarders, though Mr. Caldwell, the present master, is only allowed to receive four. Considering the short time Mr. Caldwell is appointed, and the state in which he found the school, the answering was good, and I fully expect that in a few years there will be a most flourishing school here. The twenty-four boys are all members of the Irish Church, and are, principally, the sons of shop-keepers in the town."

Cork: Blue Coat Hospital, Stephen-street.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this endowment consisted of £325 5s. 2d. per annum, arising from land held by the Corporation of Cork for charitable purposes and applied to educational purposes by an Act of the Corporation of Cork, prior to 1656. There was also an annual income of £13 16s. 11d. from trust funds. A scheme for the management of the Charity was settled by the Court of Chancery in 1851. It provided for educating, maintaining, and apprenticing to masters of the Protestant Established Religion, poor boys, natives of Cork, of Protestant parentage, and for payment to a resident Protestant schoolmaster of a salary of £33 1s. 6d. a year, and an allowance not exceeding £16 for the maintenance, education, and clothing of each boy in the hospital; and, if the trustees thought fit, of £20 a year to an assistant Protestant master; also for payment of £18 9s. 3d. towards the maintenance of four students in Trinity College, Dublin, natives of Ireland and preferably of Cork. The Royal Commissioners further reported that the state of instruction in the school was then very unsatisfactory.

14854.

Mr. James Carr Somerville, Head Master, Agent, and Secretary to the hospital, informed us that the Charity was managed by a Board of ten Governors, who held quarterly meetings; five members constituted a quorum, but it appeared that business was occasionally transacted when only three were present. The property of the school consisted of lands adjoining the Institution, and of lands in East and West Ballymought, held under leases in perpetuity. The gross rental was, at the date of our inquiry, a little over £420. There was also a sum of £306 (Irish) in the hands of the Corporation, the interest on which was paid half-yearly. The trustees had contracted with the master, in accordance with the scheme, to pay him £16 (Irish) a year for each boy, for which he found everything, with the exception of bed and table linen. There were only sixteen pupils in the school; but in consequence of the great rise in prices the trustees paid the allowance for eighteen. Each trustee had a right in turn of nominating a boy, whose qualifications were according to the directions of the scheme. The course of instruction was primary. The master sometimes instructed clever boys in the rudiments of Latin. There was no regular inspector, but from time to time the trustees had had an examination conducted by an inspector. There were no day pupils in the school.

App. C,
p. 278.

Mr. Moore reports:—

"This institution was in a most unsatisfactory condition, both as regards the house arrangements and the school work. The only provision for washing was a filthy bath in a dark, downstairs room, and there were only two or three towels for the 16 boys. The master's excuse that 'his boys were clean boys' seemed rather paradoxical.

"The answering in arithmetic, spelling, and grammar was decidedly bad, in geography somewhat better, and the writing of all the boys was excellent. This bad answering is the less excusable when we consider the course of instruction, which is very limited.

"This school, being intended for the sons of reduced gentlemen, should impart a thorough English education, and also such a knowledge of mathematics as would enable the boys to compete, not only for the Banks, Excise, &c. but for higher appointments in the second class of the Home Civil Service. As it now is, I do not think this institution is of any use beyond keeping the boys out of harm's way for the time they are in it."

Extract from Will.

Mrs. M. A. Crofton by her will, dated 17th December, 1825 (vide supra, p. 206), bequeathed two acres of land on her fee-simple estate in the county of Cork, "rent free for ever, for a schoolhouse on said estate for the education of the poor children of that neighbourhood." She also bequeathed an annuity of £40, Irish, "for the support and maintenance of said school, furnishing each child who attends with a Bible." The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that there was at the date of their inquiry no evidence that the educational endowments under the will of the testatrix had ever been brought into operation, and that having failed to obtain information from the executor of the will, the case had been referred by them to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests. These Commissioners took proceedings against the executor, and in 1860 recovered arrears of the annuity, amounting to a sum which produced an investment of £608 Government Stock. Part of this sum was afterwards spent in rebuilding the schoolhouse, and the balance, £325 Three per cent. Government Stock, remained, at the date of our inquiry, in the hands of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests to the credit of the school.

Complaints having been made to the Board that—owing to the circumstances of the locality, and to the condition imposed by the will with respect to the gift of a Bible to every pupil attending—the endowment had become practically useless, the Board within a recent period sanctioned proceedings in the Court of Chancery with a view to enlarge the usefulness of the school. The Court decided "that the testatrix intended that the school should be open to children of all denominations; that instruction in the Scriptures should be afforded to such children as might be willing to receive it—to such as were not Roman Catholics in the Authorized Version, and to Roman Catholics in a version authorised by their Church; also that the usual conscience clause should be observed, and that no child should be obliged to attend any religious instruction to which his parents or guardians objected."

From a return furnished to us by the master, it appeared that a "non-vested National school" had been established quite close to the Crofton school, in the Roman Catholic Chapel-yard, and no Roman Catholic children were permitted to attend the Crofton school. At the date of our inquiry there were twelve children on the roll, all members of the Church of Ireland, and the average attendance was only six. The master was appointed by the rector of the parish, and received from the endowment the salary of £56 18s. 5d. per annum, with the use of the two acres of land belonging to the school, and a residence in the school buildings which had been erected in 1858. The school was managed by the Protestant clergyman of the parish, and was "under the Diocesan Board of Education."

Limerick; Leamy's Free School.

This school owes its origin to the will of William Leamy who gave the residue of his estates to his executors "to be by them applied to the education of the poor in Ireland, principally those in and about Limerick City; or as they, my executors, in their better judgment shall deem meet to give this bequest the most extensive efficacy." In order to carry out the trusts of this will the Lord Chancellor made an order in 1842 that premises capable of being converted into a school should be purchased or taken to rent for a long lease, and that in the said school the English language, reading, writing, and arithmetic, should be taught, and that, if the funds of the charity should permit, the Governors should have power from time to time to provide for a more extensive system of education, subject to the approval of the Lord Chancellor; that part of the daily instruction should consist in reading the Holy Scriptures, without note or comment, and that for that purpose the scholars should, during an hour each day, be placed in two separate rooms—the Protestants in one room and the Roman Catholics in another—and that while there the Protestants should read the Holy Scriptures without any restriction, and the Roman Catholics should read such portions of the Holy Scriptures as were contained in four small volumes, supplied by authority, under the title of Scripture Lessons, and read in the National schools.

In July, 1874, a new scheme was adopted, by which a master was to be appointed by the Governors to conduct the school, at a salary of £100 a year, with a capitation fee, not exceeding 20s. a year, for each male paying pupil above the number of twenty who should have been attending the school for six months; with power to the Governors to appoint an assistant master at £40 a year, with a capitation fee not exceeding 5s. a year for each male pupil above the number of twenty. It was provided that in addition to the subjects of instruction in the former scheme, instruction should be given in elementary drawing, elements of chemistry, elements of mechanics, elements of natural science as applied to the arts, French, and other subjects to fit boys for employment in trading, mercantile and manufacturing pursuits.

Evid.,

Eleven Governors were nominated by the first order, with power of co-option, subject to the approval of the Court, in case of vacancies. Six additional Governors were nominated in the second order, in addition to the survivors of the original eleven. Two vacancies have been since filled, but at a cost for each of £26, incurred in the proceedings necessary to obtain the approval of the Court of Chancery; and large costs were also incurred in litigation with reference to the terms of the scheme, each application for an alteration costing about £270. It was stated to us that the expense of obtaining any alteration which might be unanimously desired, conducting the proceedings without opposition in the Court of Chancery, could not be less than £60, and that each application for the appointment of a new governor had hitherto cost upwards of £26, and in future would probably cost about £16.

The Governors met on the first Wednesday of every month, but there was no fixed quorum, and after the first year the attendance seldom exceeded four.

The total amount standing to the credit of this charity in the books of the Bank of Ireland at the date of our inquiry was £10,246 11s. 6d., Consols, and £455 6s. 9d. cash; the average annual excess of income over expenditure was about £20. Twenty boys and twenty girls were intended by the scheme to have been admitted as free pupils upon the foundation, but although the governors "had made every exertion to get applications," the number had never been filled. There were but very few Protestant applicants, and no Roman Catholics. The school had been for several years altogether closed, and after it was reopened under the scheme of 1874, the Roman Catholic Bishop withdrew from the management as Protestant head teachers were appointed. The school was described to us by the Rev. Daniel Fitzgerald, P.P., as now "denominational in this sense, that there were no Roman Catholic children attending."

p. 378.

Mr. Moore visited the boys' and girls' schools and found forty-two boys and thirty-eight girls present; the numbers on the roll were—boys, 83 members of the Irish Church, 6 Presbyterians, 4 other Protestant Dissenters, and 4 Roman Catholics; girls, 16 members of the Irish Church, 17 Presbyterians, 1 other Protestant Dissenter, and 4 Roman Catholics. The answering of the boys was highly satisfactory; the girls read very badly, but their answering was otherwise good.

These schools were founded in 1626, under the will of Mrs. Hannah Villiers. They consisted of one male and one female school, and a female orphanage, in Henry-street, and a mixed male and female school in Nicholas-street. The trustees appointed by the testatrix were the Rector of St. Munchin's parish and the Presbyterian Minister of Limerick. The endowment consisted of a rentcharge of £309 4s. 8d., arising from lands in the County of Clare, and of the dividends on Government Stock payable through the Court of Chancery. The amount of Stock at the date of our inquiry appeared to be about £23,800. Out of the dividends a sum of £600 a year was paid to the trustees, and the balance was invested in the purchase of additional Stock.

The will directed that twelve widows should be maintained in an almshouse at an annual cost of £24, Irish, each; also that an annual payment of £38 1s., should be made to the Presbyterian congregation and other charities, and that £80, Irish, should be paid to the trustees, who were expected to examine the pupils monthly in literature, and especially in the knowledge of the Christian Religion.

The amount annually expended on the schools was stated to be £534 18s. 4d., distributed as follows:—£361 14s. 6d. on the orphanage, £58 3s. 6d. on the male school, £40 5s. 6d. on the female school, and £79 15s. 10d. on the mixed school. The pupils' fees in the boys' school varied from £2 to £6 a year; in the girls' school from 10s. to £1 a year; in the mixed school from 4s. 6d. to £1 a year.

In the orphanage there were no fees. The children were provided with board and lodging, and £2 a year was expended on the clothing of each; also £30 a year was allowed for apprentice fees of £10 each to girls leaving the school at the age of sixteen. Mr. Moore visited these schools and reports as to the boys' school:—

p. 378.

"I examined the senior class of this school in Latin grammar, spelling, English grammar, geography, and arithmetic, in all these subjects, with the exception of geography, the answering was decidedly bad. In arithmetic they could not work the compound rules with any accuracy, though supposed to know Interest, Discount, &c. The fault in this school is, I believe, that the master advances his boys too quickly; this would, of course, be prevented by proper inspection.

It is only fair to state that the master is but twelve months appointed.

The pupils are, I was informed, principally the sons of professional men, and pay from 16s. to 30s. per quarter.

There were twelve boys present, and the roll is made up of eleven members of the Irish Church, and three Methodists."

And as to the girls' school:—

App. C.,
p. 379.

"I examined the second, third, and fourth classes in this school, they all answered most creditably, the reading and arithmetic being particularly good. The school-room is quite suitable, although it could not accommodate any more pupils. There were forty-seven girls present, and the roll is made up of twenty-six members of the Irish Church, fourteen Presbyterians, and eight belonging to other dissenting bodies.

In the orphanage, although the house was clean and evidently well kept, the arrangements were defective. There is not a separate bed for each girl, nor, as far as I could see, a separate towel.

Very little improvement has, I fear, been made in this respect since the unfavourable report of the Assistant-Commissioner in 1858."

Limerick: Mangret Agricultural School.

11 & 19 Vic.
c. 114, &c.
& 43 Vic. cap.

The preamble of the Act 42 & 43 Victoria, chapter ccxx., sets forth as the origin of this Institution that £4,079 9s. 7d., having been recovered from the County of Limerick of moneys originally appropriated out of the Reproductive Loan Fund, became applicable to charitable purposes or objects of public utility in the county; and that the 11th & 12th Victoria, c. 114, had enacted that that sum should be vested in trustees appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, for the establishment of a model agricultural school in the county of Limerick, for the promotion of agricultural science. It is also set forth that the trustees had invested £1,000 in the purchase, in fee simple, of a farm in the parish of Mungret, which they demised to the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland, for sixty-one years, at an annual rent of £70 15s. 4d., to be used and occupied by them for the establishment of a modern agricultural school and farm; that the trustees had retained and invested £1,000 for the purpose of applying the dividends to current expenses, and handed over to the Commissioners of National Education the balance, £3,079 9s. 7d., to aid them in erecting the necessary buildings and offices.

Mr. John Kenny, who had been agricultural teacher at the Mungret Model Farm from its commencement, in 1854, informed us that the original extent of the farm was 71A 3a statute measure; that the land in 1854 was worth about 35s. per Irish acre, but that it had improved greatly, and a few years ago would have let at £8 per acre. The land had been purchased considerably below its value.

The buildings that were erected consisted of a house for the residence of a teacher, schoolrooms, and a farm-stead, all erected upon a large scale at a cost of £7,500.

The school was opened in 1858, and the greatest number of pupils ever resident was twenty-three, but the institution was never full. The pupils were admitted at the age of sixteen, and were engaged in literary and agricultural studies for six hours a day, six hours being also employed at out-door work. The fee charged for boarders was £8 a year, until 1872, when it was raised to £12; in 1875 it was again raised to £25, and in 1876 to £26, which had the effect of almost closing the institution against the sons of small farmers. The number of pupils fluctuated, and had sometimes fallen to three or four. They were admitted originally for twelve months, and then went to Glasnevin Model Farm, but in 1859 or 1860 pupils were admitted to Glasnevin by competition, and some of the pupils then left Mungret much sooner, which system broke up that school to a very great extent. The school was finally closed on 19th September, 1878, and the pupil teachers were removed to the Limerick Model School, to which any furniture worth removing was also brought. The stock and other property on the place was sold off by auction, and, at the date of our inquiry, a National school was being held in part of the building; the rest, with the out-offices, was empty, and the land was let to the surrounding farmers.

Under these circumstances the Act 42 & 43 Vic., cap. ccxx., was obtained in 1879 enabling the Lord Lieutenant, with the consent of the Treasury, to direct that the lands and premises should be occupied or let to the best advantage, and the proceeds thereof applied to each purpose of instruction, including the instruction in and the promotion of agricultural science, as the Lord Lieutenant, with the consent of the Treasury, should think proper. The Act contained a provision that it should be lawful to provide a site for a male National school on the premises, and to appoint that the house used as a female National school should continue to be so used.

The only information in our possession, as to the present use of this institution and as to the steps taken under this Statute, is derived from the following advertisement, which was published in 1880:—

* MUNGRET COLLEGE.—Under the patronage of the Most Rev. Dr. Butler, Lord Bishop, and the Clergy of the Diocese of Limerick.

Trustees.—The Right Hon. Lord Enly, Lord Lieutenant of the county and city of Limerick; Sir David V. Roche, Bart., B.A.; Stephen E. De Vere, esq., B.A.; E. W. O'Brien, esq., M.P.; James G. Barry, esq., J.P. President.—Rev. Joseph Bourke.

This college, built on the classic site of ancient Mungret, is on a most healthy and elevated position, surrounded by seventy acres of land in prime cultivation, facing the noble Shannon, and about two miles from the city of Limerick. The buildings contain spacious, dry, well lighted and ventilated dormitories and halls, with splendid out-offices attached, and represent a money value of nearly £50,000.

The scope of education in the programme of the Intermediate Act, literary and scientific, with the theory and practice of Agriculture. In the latter subject the college is unique, and offers advantages which are not to be had in any other college in Ireland, namely, that while a young gentleman continues his literary and scientific studies, he may, if his mind so dispose him, study the principles and the practice of that which is the vital interest and the basis of the prosperity of our country. The science and theory will be taught by a highly qualified gentleman, and by an agriculturalist recommended by Professor Baldwin. Lectures on veterinary medicine and surgery will be given by a V.S. and F.E.V.M.A. A portion of the highly cultivated farm will be set apart for experimental teaching, and the trustees will give valuable prizes and scholarships to stimulate the study of what the latest experience has proved is necessary to the well-being of our country, and what no doubt the Commissioners will yet rank high among the subjects of the Intermediate Examination. No such boon was ever before offered to the middle classes of Ireland.

The instruction, literary and scientific, is in the hands of an able staff, lay and clerical, who have had already considerable experience and success in education. The classics and English of the Intermediate grades are confided to a gentleman who has been a First Prize-man and First Honor-man of the Queen's University and T. C. D. The mathematics are taught by a gentleman, two of whose pupils recently won scholarships at first entrance in these subjects, and the foreign languages are taught by natives from the Continent. In the official record of the Intermediate Examinations of last year, pupils taught by the staff of Mungret College passed in Greek, Latin, English, French, Italian, arithmetic, book-keeping, Euclid, algebra, natural philosophy, chemistry, music, and won honors in these subjects. During the past twelve months students, taught by the same staff, passed, to the number of twenty-five, for competitive examinations and the various professions. One of these students came second in the examination for attorneys' apprentices, held last January. Another came first in the examination for the College of Surgeons, held in the same month, and several passed for first class during the year.

Terms.—Pensions for boys over fifteen years, £32 per annum, for boys under fifteen years, £10 per annum, payable half yearly in advance.

For particulars apply to the President, Rev. Joseph Bouke, Mungret College, Limerick, or Crescent, Limerick.

We have already noticed the diversion from the purposes of agricultural schools of the Oldcastle Endowed Schools (vide supra, p. 200), and of two of the schools under the Incorporated Society (vide supra, p. 97), and the total or partial failure of other attempts to establish schools for practical teaching in agriculture. We did not, in the course of our inquiries, meet with one instance of an agricultural school in active and successful operation in Ireland, except that of the Glasnevin Model Farm, maintained by the Commissioners of National Education.

Limerick: Roxborough-road Free School.

Supra,
p. 49.

The history of the establishment of this institution in the Limerick Diocesan school-house will be found stated above (vide supra, p. 49). Though the school established by the Rev. Mr. Gregg was probably not within the scope of our Commission, we were permitted by him to examine its working. There were, at the date of our inquiry (1st October, 1879), 99 poor female children on the roll, of whom 64 were boarders. All the pupils were educated as members of the Church of Ireland, under the active personal supervision of Mr. Gregg. Seventy had both parents Protestants; 29 were children of mixed marriages. Mr. Gregg always took the fact of a parent giving him the child as his authority for receiving it. Complaint was made by the Rev. C. Conway, P.P., that in one instance difficulty had been experienced by the mother of two children, who was a Roman Catholic, in removing them from the school; it appeared that this occurred during Mr. Gregg's temporary absence, and on his return the children were given up to their mother. Mr. Gregg stated that the children had been entrusted to him by their father, who represented himself to be a Protestant, and that no objection to their remaining in the school had been raised by their mother until after her husband's death. It was stated, on the part of the mother, that her husband, at the time of his death, was a Roman Catholic.

The institution was supported at a cost of about £700 a year, collected by Mr. Gregg from all parts of the country, and from England, in voluntary subscriptions, with some assistance from the Church Education Society, and other societies of an exclusively Protestant character. The school had no endowment.

Mr. Moore visited the school on 27th October, 1879. He reports:—

"There were present on the day of my visit 64 boarders and 30 day scholars. These were arranged in four classes. The answering of the fourth (senior) class, in which there were 4 girls preparing to enter Kildare-place training school, was very good in geography, grammar, and arithmetic; but the answering, or rather missing, of the second and third classes was most disgraceful, in a room in simple substruction only about 4 girls out of some 20 had a correct answer, and the spelling was about the worst I have ever heard."

"The excuse that the boarders had a great amount of house work to do was, in my mind, by no means sufficient. There is no infant school-room or infant teacher, so that a number of children must be in the girls' room, thereby hindering the school work, and being themselves, to a certain extent, neglected. The house was in nice order, except for the lavatory, where there were only about a dozen basins, and not a separate towel for each girl."

Evid.,

The school was periodically visited by the "Diocesan Inspector" of the Church of Ireland, and his last Report, which Mr. Gregg produced to us, supplied a striking instance of the discrepancies which Mr. Moore has frequently remarked between the estimates formed of Church Schools by the Clergymen who inspect them and his own.

The report of the Rev. J. Dowd, Diocesan Inspector, for 1879, was as follows:—

"Trinity Diocesan School, Roxborough Female Free School. Of these children twenty-four formed a large infant class, and had learned quite as much as could be expected from them—nine read easy sentences correctly. The remaining classes, six in number, were examined in reading, dictation, geography, English history, arithmetic, &c., and the answering was very satisfactory. The course in English history extended over the whole period. Arithmetic included simple and compound proportion, fractions, practice, and interest. The writing was neat and careful; excellent order was preserved. This very large school is in excellent working order, and all the children are making good progress."

Waterford.—Bishop Foy's School.

This school was founded in 1707 by Dr. Nathaniel Foy, Bishop of Waterford, who by his will left considerable estates in the county of Waterford and a small holding in the City of Waterford to trustees for the support of a school in which fifty poor children of the United Church should be taught gratis, clothed, and apprenticed. The charity was subsequently regulated by Acts of Parliament passed in the years 1787 and 1808. The trustees originally were the Bishop of Cashel, the Dean of Waterford, and the Mayor, Sheriffs, and three Aldermen of Waterford, but on the passing of the Municipal Corporations Act, the municipal authorities ceased to act, and the number of the trustees was thus reduced to two, namely, the Bishop of Cashel, and the Dean of Waterford.

The estates devised by the will of Dr. Foy produced at the date of our inquiry a net annual income of £1,412 19s. 4½d., in addition to which a perpetual annuity of £9 4s. 7½d. was derived by the will of the Rev. Dr. Gihon, for the purpose of supplying the boys of the school with Bibles, prayer books, pens, ink, and paper, thus making the total net income of the school £1,422 4s.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported unfavourably of the condition of this school. They stated that the course of education was unsatisfactory, the school-house dirty, and the children neglected and badly fed. They thought that the school stood in need of an efficient system of inspection, and recommended an increase in the number of trustees, the repeal of the Acts of Parliament under which the school was then governed, and a transfer of the entire management of the school to the Incorporated Society.

No legislative change has been made in the constitution of the charity since 1857, but since the appointment of the Right Rev. Dr. Day, the present Bishop, in 1872, there has been a great change in the management, and a marked improvement in the condition of the school. Dr. Day found the buildings ruinous, and the condition of the boys very unsatisfactory, and the master had fallen into such habits that the trustees found it necessary "to pension him off." They gave him a retiring allowance of £55 per annum, and appointed the present master, Mr. Smith. For some time, owing to the infirm health of the late Dean of Waterford, the affairs of the school were almost entirely managed by the Bishop. Since the accession of the present Dean, in 1878, the attendance, however, has been more regular. The trustees meet once a month, and are assisted in their labours by Mr. Charles Bolton, who attends the meetings in the capacity of a "friend and adviser," and who occasionally sits alone and transacts business and makes payments as if he were a trustee.

There is no periodical inspection of the school, but there is an annual examination by examiners invited by the trustees, and the trustees visit the school occasionally; one of the curates of the Cathedral attends once a week as catechist to examine the boys in religious subjects.

The number of pupils directed to be educated by the will of Dr. Foy was fifty. There were on the roll at the date of the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, thirty-two boys, all free. At the time of our inquiry there were forty-five boys, of whom forty were free, and five were paying pupils, the charge for paying pupils, who were admitted upon terms calculated to impose no cost upon the charity, being £20 a year.

The regulations for admission of free pupils are as follows, viz:—

"The candidate must belong to the city of Waterford; he must be between the ages of ten and fourteen years; he must lodge beforehand a certificate of the marriage of his parents, a certificate of his baptism, and a certificate of the good character of his family; he must pass an examination in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and in the Holy Scripture, and in the Church Catechism, and after the examination he must be certified as in good health by the physician of the school, and must spend a month on trial in the school before he is finally received."

The free pupils are taken from the poor Protestant boys of the city of Waterford, there is no particular standard laid down as to poverty, but they generally are the sons of poor tradesmen, servants, and "that class of people." They are chosen by examination, and there is a large number of candidates for each vacancy, the number on the last occasion being twenty-two boys for four places. The examination is, however, very simple, in order to pass it a boy should be on a par with the head class of an ordinary infant school. The subjects taught in the school are reading, spelling, writing, dictation, arithmetic, English history, geography, grammar, Euclid, algebra, mensuration, book-keeping, and vocal music. Neither classics nor modern languages are taught.

The boys are clothed at the expense of the institution, and a sum of £8 is paid as an apprenticeship fee for each boy. These fees are payable in instalments, and before paying each instalment inquiry is made as to how the boy is getting on.

The present master, Mr. William Henry Smith, when appointed to the post in March, 1873, found the school buildings scarcely habitable; "the whole place was tumbling down, master's residence, school, and all." The school buildings were described by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, as then in good repair, and no explanation was given of their having been allowed to fall into disrepair between 1857 and 1873. The salary of the master is £100 a year, with board, residence, and attendance, and £40 a year is paid to an assistant.

Since 1873 a sum of £4,000 has been expended in repairs and extensive additions and improvements, and the place is now, as stated by Mr. Smith, "in a very satisfactory condition in every respect."

The school is situated on the lands of Grantstown, about one and a half miles from the city of Waterford. The grounds contain 25A. 2s. 16½p. statute measure, and, according to Mr. Murphy's report, are worth £3 per acre, or, in round numbers, £77.

A large portion of this land was, until recently, in the hands of a tenant; it is now used as a school farm, and Mr. Smith stated that he was thereby enabled to save the bill for milk, butter, &c., which formerly amounted to somewhere about £100 a year. Mr. Murphy reports favourably of the management, but the accounts were not so kept as to ascertain whether the farm was really carried on with profit.

The agent of the trustees, Mr. Henry V. Mackey, displayed conspicuous ignorance as to the letting value of the land and the other circumstances of the estate. The trustees appeared to confide the management of the property entirely to their agent, and he showed a remarkable want of activity in the discharge of his duties. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that some of the property was let at rates fixed thirty years previously, and some was still held in 1857 at the reduced rates at which it was let in the years 1851 and 1852, when land was depressed in value. We found that no alteration in the rents had since been made, and no valuation of the estate had been made within living memory, nor had it ever occurred to Mr. Mackey to propose to the trustees to have the estate revalued. The attention of the Bishop was first attracted to the rental by an application from the tenants for a reduction of rent. The Act of Parliament regulating this charity authorised the trustees to "make leases for terms not exceeding thirty-one years or three lives, but no longer, for the best improved rent that can be gotten for the same" but notwithstanding this provision there were only three leases on the estate which had been made in recent years, and no care seemed to have been taken to fix a fair rent in these leases, the rents being the same which the tenants had previously been paying. The grant majority of the tenants held as tenants from year to year, and the agent was unable to state whether there were any rules on the estate against subletting or for good husbandry.

Mr. Murphy reports that the estate is most unevenly rented, the rents on the townland of Ballyquin being 34 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation, on the townland of Bishopstown 26 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation, on the townland of Mottel 23 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation, while on the townlands of Ballyvad, Hacketstown and Knockhouse, the rents were 12 per cent. under the Poor Law valuation. He found Thomas Drothane, the bailiff of the estates, holding 217 statute acres, of which the Poor Law valuation was £107, at a rent of £64, and was informed by him that, about 1848, he had paid an arrear of £126, due by a middleman who had died, paid a "trifle" to the undertenants for their good will, and ever since held his 217 acres for £64 per annum, the same rent which the middleman had paid.

The agent was unable to state the number of cottier tenants or the condition of their houses, but Mr. Murphy reports that there were fourteen cottier tenants on one townland, living in wretched cabins for which they paid from £2 5s. to £3 a year. The shooting on the estate was given to a Mr. Congreve without rent. There were no maps worthy of the name, nor any valuation of the estate. The tenantry were discontented, owing to the unevenness of the rental, and the estate had suffered lamentably from want of more active supervision on the part of the agent. His accounts were, however, "most admirably kept and carefully audited."

Mr. Moore reports that in reading, spelling, grammar, geography, and arithmetic the boys acquitted themselves most satisfactorily.

The master was a highly qualified music teacher, and had brought the singing of his pupils to almost the highest degree of perfection; he had also trained an excellent life band.

The house arrangements were in every particular suitable; and a well-stocked carpenters' workshop (the gift of Mr. Denny), had been lately fitted up for the boys.

Waterford.—Blue School.

This school was founded in 1740, by Miss Mary Mason, who built the school-house at a cost of £750. The endowment consisted of £55 7s. 8d. per annum, paid by the Corporation of Waterford, as interest for three sums of £800 each, bequeathed by Sir John Mason, Sarah Mason, and John Mason, for the education and clothing of thirty Protestant girls, natives of Waterford. The trustees of this fund were the two eldest representatives of the Mason family residing in Waterford—at the date of our inquiry there was only one such representative, Mr. Robert Thomas Carew, and he was sole trustee. There was also an endowment of £33 10s. per annum, being the interest on a sum of £1,000, a bequest from Counsellor Alcock, to the Bishop, Dean, and Chapter of Waterford, to provide apprentice fees and marriage portions for girls educated at the school, who should marry Protestant natives of Waterford, and have a certificate of good conduct from the school-mistress. These provisions of Mr. Alcock's will had not been strictly attended to.

The total number of thirty girls had not been full since 1833, the number at the date of the return furnished to us, was sixteen. In consequence of this decrease of numbers, there had been a saving of money, which was invested in the purchase of £150 Preference Stock of the Waterford and Limerick Railway Company. The Royal Commissioners 1854-8, reported that the school-house was then in bad condition, but it has since been thoroughly repaired.

Mr. Moore reports that at the time of his visit, the school-room was in good order and sufficiently large for the present number of girls. The course of instruction was very elementary.

Antrim.—Ulster Institution for the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind, Belfast.

This institution differs from the Claremont and the Cabra institutions, in this, that the latter two do not take in the blind, and that while at Claremont the religious instruction is exclusively for members of the Church of Ireland, and at Cabra exclusively for Roman Catholics, the Ulster institution provides for members of the Church of Ireland and for those of the Presbyterian Churches.

The Ulster institution was founded in the year 1831. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that the institution then possessed an income of £144 11s. 3d. from trust funds, and school premises of the annual value of £335.

Though many legacies since bequeathed to the institution had been applied towards current expenses when the funds were low, the capital to credit had, at the date of our inquiry, been increased by about £6,000. About £1,500 had been expended in building a new schoolroom.

The annual income in 1878 amounted to about £3,000, including £1,560 subscriptions, receipts for pupils £789, and interest on bequests and investments £591.

The average cost of a pupil for a year was a little over £20. In the case of children sent in by Boards of Guardians, the amount contributed by them was optional, not a fixed sum of £15 per annum, as required by the Cabra institution. The expenses of collection of the subscriptions, which came to nearly ten per cent. on the amount collected, seemed to us high. The institution was managed by a committee elected by the subscribers at the annual meeting.

In 1857 there were sixty-three pupils on the roll, and at the date of our inquiry there were 111, 49 Episcopalians, 60 Presbyterians, and 2 Methodists. All the pupils except five were boys.

The Rev. Dr. McIlwaine, a clergyman of the Church of Ireland, stated to us that he thought that the religious instruction of the Episcopalian pupils was not sufficiently attended to; also that the general instruction was not as satisfactory as it might be. It appeared, however, that there was a regularly appointed Episcopalian as well as a Antm : Lancasterian National Endowed School, Frederick-street, Belfast.

Evid.,
9131-45.

This school was endowed with property situated in Ann-street, Belfast, held on a lease for lives renewable for ever, and devised by John Park in 1815 to trustees, on trust to apply one-third of the net value to the maintenance of the school. The trustees, at the date of our inquiry, were Edward Porter Cowan and Alexander O'Driscoll Taylor, and the average value of the endowment was £38 a year.

There was a further endowment of £660, Belfast Harbour Commissioners' Bonds, held by the same trustees. The school-house was held by lease from the Marquess of Donegal, at a rent of £11 1s. 10d. a year. The lease will expire in 1908.

The school was opened as an industrial school in 1847. There were two school-rooms. The number of pupils on the roll in 1879 was 206—101 members of the Church of Ireland, 77 Presbyterians, 22 Roman Catholics, and 6 others. The average attendance was 148. It was originally a girls' school, but at the date of our inquiry it was attended also by forty or fifty boys. The average age of the pupils was seven years. The girls were admitted free; the boys paid a penny a week each. The children are supplied with food and clothes, and were trained for being servants.

The school was chiefly supported by voluntary subscriptions, amounting to about £500 a year, and was managed by a committee of ladies, who paid £20 a year to the mistress, and £6 a year to each of three assistants, in addition to the salaries from the National Board.

Antm : Guy's Free National School, Ballymena.

Rep., Vol.
III., p. 418.

This school was returned by the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, as having an endowment of £82 13s. 8d. per annum from land, given by John Guy in 1814, and by William Adair in 1826, and school premises of the annual value of £22 9s. 7d., granted for a poor school, under the regulation of trustees, of whom the Dissenting clergyman of the parish for the time being should be one.

Evid.,
9419-9424.

The original endowment has since increased in value, the property which is situated in Ballymena having been built upon, and the total income from land, at the date of our inquiry, amounted to £121 16s. 8d.; about £12 interest was also received from a legacy of £300, given some years ago, and which was invested in United States Bonds.

Part of the income, amounting in 1878 to £31 14s. 10d., was payable for the support of certain Moravian widows.

Evid., 9429.

The school was placed under the National Board. The rules provided that the Scriptures should be read by all the pupils able to read, and this was done every morning before the time for general instruction. The school was attended principally by Presbyterians, there being in the boys' school 34 Episcopallians, 4 Roman Catholics, and 12 of other denominations, out of a total of 200, and 165 Presbyterians out of 199 on the roll of the infant school. In 1878 the aid given by the National Board amounted to £907 13s. There were two other National schools in the town in connexion with the Roman Catholic Church.

These schools were established about the year 1740, for twenty boys and twenty girls to be boarded, lodged and instructed in linen manufacture, husbandry, and housewifery; two scholars to be nominated by the Rector of Clonfeacle, the remainder by the Rector of Armagh. In 1836 the charity was remodelled under the direction of the Court of Chancery, and in pursuance of a report of Master Henn's it was settled to be:—

"A free and open day school for children of both sexes to be therein taught the elementary parts of useful learning, and instructed in the principles of Established Church on the system then adopted by the National schools of England."

The scheme also provided "that in case the funds should permit it, a plain and wholesome repast should be daily provided for the scholars." This provision was soon given up, but an alternative that in case the trustees should find the first provision "inconvenient or to exceed the income of the charity, they should give in lieu thereof rewards in books and clothing at their discretion to the most deserving scholars," has been carried out by awarding clothing to the extent of £40 or £50 a year.

The schools are now in connexion with the National Board, and Mr. Moore reports that they are well conducted by those in charge.

*Armagh.—The Mall Schools.Miscellaneous
Schools.*

This endowment arises from a deed executed in 1820 by Primate Stuart, granting to the Dean and Chapter of Armagh house property producing £55 7s. 8d. per annum, and £969 4s. Government stock, producing £21 1s. 4d. per annum. A sum of £2,000 was expended in building the schoolhouses on the site, which was held in fee. Mr. Dupré Simmons, head master of the school, informed us that it was formerly a model school under the Church Education Society, but that it was now an ordinary National school. There were 116 pupils on the roll in the boys' school, and the average attendance was 85; there were between 70 and 75 on the roll of the girls' school, and the average attendance was about 50. The pupils paid from one shilling to seven shillings a quarter each. The master received a salary of £30 a year from the endowment, and had an assistant who was paid out of the grant from the National Board. The school was inspected in the ordinary course by the National Board inspector.

The Rev. George A. Chadwick, n.b., Rector of Armagh, stated to us that he acted as trustee of the schools, and that out of the endowment the master was paid £30 a year, the mistress £8, and two other teachers £8 and £6 respectively. The trustees had been "starving the schools in some respects, in hopes of paying off a debt" which was incurred in extensive repairs when they were put under the National Board, but they had not made "a penny headway towards that." He informed us that infant schools had been built in Church Walks some years later than the others as an enlargement of them, in order to obtain the advantage of a separate girls' school, and a separate boys' school. Dr. Chadwick had been in the habit of mixing up the accounts of the Mall schools with those of other schools which had been established in Callan-street. He stated that he had made an application to the Court of Chancery for authority to put the Callan-street schools on another footing, and that when a permanent arrangement would be made the accounts would be kept separate. It appeared from the evidence of Mr. G. H. Smith, that some dissatisfaction existed in the city of Armagh as to the management of this endowment, which he stated had formerly been sufficient to maintain the school, pay the teachers, and provide all necessaries, but was not now utilized for that purpose, and there was a feeling of curiosity as to what had become of it. Mr. Smith also complained that the Callan-street school, which was in no particular the subject of the endowment, had received a portion of the endowment for its teacher.

It appeared from the evidence of Dr. Chadwick, that the Primate had formerly given a sum of £100 per annum as a donation to the schools, which were then in connexion with the Church Education Society, but that after Dr. Chadwick's appointment, and when the schools were placed in connexion with the National Board, this donation had been withdrawn, which accounted for the deficiency observed by Mr. Smith.

Mr. Moore reports:—"This school is now in excellent working order. The boys answered well in the programme, and the schoolroom is in good condition, but much in need of a classroom."

Donegal.—Robertson's Schools.

"The Robertson endowment" is derived under the will of Colonel Robertson, who died in 1795. His will bears date 25th September, 1790, and contains (among others) the following bequest:—

"I give and devise to the parishes of the diocese of Raphoe aforesaid, a sum of money which by its interest at the rate of five per cent. shall be found sufficient to produce £15 sterling annually to each parish, for or towards establishing a school therein, and purchasing books, as well of entertainment as instruction, in every parish of said diocese; and it is to be understood that such as in said parishes may not be of the Established Religion are, notwithstanding, to share equally in this legacy, which is to be hoped will contribute to their conformation with the English Church, by enlightening their understanding. And I do appoint the Lord Primate of Ireland, the Lord Archbishop of Dublin, the Lord Bishop, Dean, Archdeacon, and Rectors of said diocese for the time being, to be trustees herein for the said parishes, with a power to form such regulations in the founding and conducting of the schools aforesaid as may seem best to them, and to dispose of the purchase of lands of inheritance in fee-simple or to put to interest on good security in Ireland the aforesaid sum of money."

By a decree of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, dated 7th March, 1803, it was declared "That the foregoing bequests . . . ought to be considered as a bequest for the benefit of each parish of £300 sterling; and, it appearing that there are thirty-one parishes in said diocese—It is further ordered, that the said bequests ought to be deemed, and are hereby decreed, as a bequest of the sum of £9,300 sterling.

In pursuance of a direction contained in this decree a scheme for the further management of the Charity was submitted by the trustees to the Master in Chancery.

Rep., pp.
167-9.

The leading features of the Master's report, which bears date 11th March, 1805, are noticed in the report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, in which latter report will also be found full information with respect to the history of the endowment previous to 1857.

The affairs of the Charity were managed by a committee consisting of the Bishop, Dean, Archdeacon, Vicar-General, and five clergymen of the Diocese of Raphoe.

Evid.,

The endowment at the date of our inquiry consisted of a sum of £14,584 12s. Government New Three per Cent. Stock (representing the original sum of £9,300, Irish, with accumulations of interest thereon), and of a cash balance of £328 3s. 5d. in bank to the credit of the trustees. The total income for the year 1878 was £449 16s. 9d., of which £437 9s. 7d. represented the dividends upon the Government stock, and £12 7s. 2d. interest allowed by the Bank upon the cash balance.

The income of the Charity was distributed in the following manner:—Two grants, one of £11 1s. 6d. (salary for the schoolmaster), and the other of £2 15s. 4½d. (for books and school requisites), making together £13 16s. 10½d., were made annually in favour of each of the thirty-one parishes in the diocese. The balance of revenue enjoyed by the committee was applicable to the payment of charges for inspection and the general expenses of management. The total expenditure incurred by the Committee, during 1878, in respect of the two last mentioned items was only £13 12s. 9d. leaving a surplus for the year of £7 0s. 10½d.

p. 298.

The account of each of the parishes was kept distinct. In the case of a parish where the school was in abeyance, or where the entire amount of the endowment was not expended during the current year, the annual grants or balances, as the case might be, were placed by the Committee to the credit of the parish, and formed a reserve fund which, when occasion arose, might be expended in repairs of the school premises, or in the purchase of books, school requisites, &c. It appeared by the "statement of accounts for one year ending 1st February, 1879," handed in by Mr. Hamilton, accountant, that on the 1st of February, 1879, there were balances ranging from £83 0s. 1d. to 6s. 2½d., to the credit of thirty parishes. In the case of one parish (Imiskool), the balance (£55 5s. 10d.), was the other way. It was stated that this liability arose in the following manner:—The committee became involved in litigation with the master of the school, and in the course of the proceedings against him incurred costs amounting to £125. This sum the Committee considered as due by the parish to them, and they accordingly applied the annual grants made in favour of the parish in liquidation of the debt, so that the school did not, at the date of our inquiry, and would not for some years receive any aid from the Robertson fund. The Very Rev. the Dean of Raphoe, Hon. Sec. and Treasurer to the Committee, furnished us with a table showing the schools at present on the list of the Committee, distinguishing those which were from those which were not in operation. From this table, and from a written statement which accompanied it, it appeared that in twenty-six out of the thirty-one parishes in the Diocese of Raphoe, "Robertson Schools" were in operation. In one of the remaining five parishes the school had only just been closed; in another the school was about to re-open. There were in all 1,587 children upon the rolls of these twenty-six schools. Of these 891 were members of the Irish Church, 305 were Presbyterians, and 391 were Roman Catholics. Fifteen of the schools were in connection with the National Board. In these cases (with one exception), as in those of the remaining schools aided by the Committee, the clergyman of the parish was, in every instance, the patron of the school.

p. 298.

Evid.,

In the statement above referred to the Hon. Secretary further informed us that the schools were inspected half-yearly (in January and July) by clergymen of the diocese appointed by the Committee. In the case of National schools the Inspector might (and usually did) confine himself to examining the Protestant children in the course of religious instruction. In the rest he examined in the secular course as well.

With reference to the clause in the founder's will admitting children not of the Established Religion to an equal share in the benefits of the endowment, the Hon. Secretary wrote to us as follows:—"The Committee consider that they are bound to apply the grant in each case to one school in the parish, and have no power either to divide it between two or more schools, or to transfer it in whole or part to another parish. They understand the will to declare not that Roman Catholic schools are to share equally with Protestant schools, but that Roman Catholic children, equally with Pro-testament children, are to share in the benefits of the 'Robertson School' in each parish. At the time when the endowment was made it does not seem to have been contemplated that more than one school would be found necessary in any parish; and it appears that the school which is to benefit by the bequest is to be under the supervision of the clergyman of the (late) Established Church in the parish, and that the school-house and premises are to be held in trust by the Dean and Chapter of the Diocese, now represented by the 'Representative Church Body.'

With regard to the religious instruction of the pupils, the Hon. Secretary stated:—
"The rules contemplate a certain amount of religious instruction for Roman Catholic children. In practice, however, no child not being a member of the Church of Ireland is obliged either to receive instruction or submit to examination in religious knowledge; the Committee only inquire into the religious proficiency of the Church children."

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported unfavourably of the condition of the Robertson Schools. They condemned "the inefficient system of inspection" to which the schools were subject, and they called special attention to the wretched condition of the school-houses, and the want of books, maps, and other school requisites for the children. The system of inspection at the date of our inquiry remained the same as it had been in 1857, being carried out by clergymen of the diocese appointed by the Committee. With regard to the school-houses, none of which (the Hon. Secretary informed us), were vested in the Robertson Committee, the Rev. Richard Babington, Diocesan Secretary, stated:—"They are looked after from time to time by the superintendents, and examined by the Committee as to whether they are in good order. If National schools, they are always kept in very good order. I was through that part of the country a fortnight ago, and they were all in capital order."

Rep. p. 168.

12310.

Mr. Moore's report upon the only two Robertson schools visited by him does not coincide with this statement of Mr. Babington. Speaking of the Parochial school, Donegal, Mr. Moore says "the school-room was most unsuitable; it is flagged, and the floor becomes quite wet in damp weather, which must, in my opinion, be a cause of sickness, and even of death, to children with bare feet." Speaking of the school, at Raphoe, he says, "the school building is very unsuitable in every respect. The school-rooms could only accommodate 72 scholars, whilst there were 100 present on the day of my visit. There is no proper ventilation, the windows being cordless, so that they must be either open fully, or not at all, and the teachers' rooms are scarcely high enough to stand upright in them. I may say that everything connected with the National Board was satisfactory, while everything connected with the Robertson endowment was quite the reverse."

Appendix
p. 393.

The state of instruction at the Donegal school Mr. Moore describes as very unsatisfactory, the answering of the twenty-six boys and girls present during his inspection being the worst he had ever heard. At Raphoe the answering of the pupils was good.

Donegal: The Prior Endowed School, Lifford.

This school was founded by the will of Miss Eleanor Prior, dated 2nd November, 1870, by which she bequeathed to the Lord Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, and the Rev. William Edwards, Rector of the Parish of Clonleigh; or to the Bishop and Rector of the said Diocese and Parish for the time being, and their successors; or to John Colquhoun, of Castletown House, Stralane, in the county of Tyrone, solicitor, the Rev. John Samuel McCintock, and William McCrea Knox, their successors and assigns, all the rest residue and remainder of her property, upon trust to build, establish, and endow a superior school or college near the town of Lifford, in the county of Donegal, on that side of the said town next the village of Ballinacruit, with all the necessary accommodation for the teachers required for conducting and carrying on the same, with power for the said trustees, their successors and assigns, to acquire and hold all lands necessary for carrying out the purposes aforesaid, it being her wish to carry into execution what she believed to have been the intention of her late brother, Sir James Prior. The teachers of the said school for the time being, always to be members of the Episcopal Church of Ireland, and none others to be eligible for such office save those embracing and professing the said religion. The name of the said School to be "The Prior Endowed School."

Returns.

Miss Prior died in the month of January, 1878, and the trustees received the bequest and expended a sum of about £2,500 in building, and invested the residue in about £15,000 Government Stock, which they now hold to the credit of the trust.

The school had not been opened at the date of our inquiry, but a scheme had been settled for its management, a copy of which was furnished to us, from which it appeared that the trustees proposed to establish three distinct schools, viz. :—A primary school for boys and girls, an upper school for boys, and an upper school for girls. The primary school to be conducted as a mixed school according to the system of the National Board.

The trustees proposed providing education of a higher class in the upper schools for boys and girls respectively, which should be managed in accordance with the principles indicated in "The Intermediate Education (Ireland) Act, 1878."

They would appoint to the upper school for boys a Head Master competent to give instruction in English history and literature, ancient and modern languages, and mathematics; and to the upper school for girls, a mistress who should be fully qualified to teach the English language literature and history, French, plain and fancy needlework, with the elements of music and drawing.

Every pupil of any National school who had been promoted by the District Inspector, at the annual results examination, out of the fourth or any higher class of such National school was to be deemed educationally eligible for admission to the upper schools. The eligibility of every other applicant was to be determined by an examination, conducted by the head master or mistress of the school into which such pupil might desire to be admitted, according to the scale of proficiency for promotion out of the fourth class of the National system.

There was to be once in every year an examination of the pupils attending the upper school, by an examiner or examiners appointed for that purpose by the trustees, but otherwise unconnected with the schools; the examination to be similar to the annual examination for results in the primary schools of the Board of National Education.

The trustees would, moreover, provide by means of special classes for the further advancement in music and drawing, the Greek and German languages, the higher mathematics and natural sciences, of such pupils, boys and girls, as might exhibit a sufficient aptitude for these subjects.

The fees were to be in the primary school one shilling and sixpence per quarter, if in the second or any lower class; two shillings and sixpence per quarter, if in the third or fourth class; and five shillings per quarter, if in any higher class; and in the upper schools, for every pupil taking the ordinary course of instruction one and a half guineas per quarter.

The governing body consisted, under the will of the founder, of five trustees—of whom two were ex-officio, and three were to be co-opted.

The ex-officio trustees are the Lord Bishop of Derry and Raphoe, and the Rector of the Parish of Clonleigh, for the time being, if they respectively shall be willing to accept the office.

The co-optative trustees, at the date of our inquiry, were John Colquhoun and William Smyth, the survivors of the three co-optative trustees nominated by the founder in her will, and the Earl of Erne, who had been co-opted by the surviving trustees as the successor to the late William M'Crea Knox, who had died on the same day as the founder.

The number of pupils for whom accommodation has been provided is 220, viz. :—primary school, 100; upper school, boys, 60; upper school, girls, 60.

This school was founded in 1856. The endowment arises from a bequest of £1,000, under the will of the Right Hon. Robert Ward, dated 7th November, 1823, with accumulations of interest, and was stated by the agent, in a return furnished by him, to have amounted in 1882 to £2,016 15s. 6d., of which sum £200 was applied by order of the Court of Chancery to the building of the school-house, Lord Bangor and R. E. Ward, Esq., giving additional funds for the same purpose, and also granting a free site for the school of about 1n. 14r. The remainder of the endowment was invested in Consols and produced, at the date of our inquiry, an annual income of £60.

There were at the date of our inquiry 30 pupils in the school, 2 boarders, and 28 day pupils; 20 of the latter were Presbyterians, the other pupils were members of the Church of Ireland.

The fees were £35 to £45 for boarders, and £2 2s. to £16 16s. for day boys. The course of instruction was in English, French, Greek, Latin, and mathematics.

App.
A. p. 248.

Mr. Mahaffy found 3 boarders and 32 day boys at the school. He reports:—

"Bangor School is one of the clearest cases of an endowment which is now badly applied, and might be made of great value. . . . The house is anything but commodious, and the out-offices and latrines are very badly kept. The boys being of various ages, and the summer attendance being for larger and very different from the winter, the master is unable to cope with his difficulties. Nevertheless there are many deserving boys at the school, and one young child of remarkable ability. . . . Some outlay is imperatively required to make the school fit for any head master to invest in it his time and money. The play-ground wants levelling and improving; there must be a proper water supply; and if the number of boarders be increased, the present sleeping accommodation and beds are quite insufficient.

"The fact that the present master started with three boys in January, 1878, and now has over thirty, shows that even under the present difficulties something can be done. But I do not think any outlay in Bangor will ever make it a valuable school. The children now at the school are very young and not advanced, but answered me well according to their knowledge."

There was a subsequent endowment of £3 a year, charged on the lands of Mr. Delacherois, and applied to the repairs of the schoolhouse.

The appointment of the schoolmaster was given by the founder to the Bishop of Down, the master being required to be of the Protestant Established religion.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported unfavourably of the condition of the school, but it was subsequently placed under the Board of Erasmus Smith, who granted £28 6s. 8d. annually as an addition to the master's salary. The pupils can compete for exhibitions in the Blue Coat Hospital, Dublin, and also for the Henderson Free Scholarship, Dundalk. Evid.,

Mr. Moore reports that he found the premises in good order, and the answering of the senior classes good; but the junior classes were deficient in spelling and arithmetic. The numbers then on the roll were forty-nine members of the Church of Ireland, and three Methodists. App. C. p.

These schools were founded in 1750 by Edward Southwell, Esq., who endowed them with a rentcharge of £142, late Irish currency, charged on the lands of Listowder and Ballydian in the county of Down, and payable to four trustees. The master received £13 16s. 11d., and the mistress £11 1s. 6d. from the endowment, with a voluntary addition from John Mulholland, Esq., which raised the salary of the schoolmaster to £40, and of the schoolmistress to £30 a year. The teachers were appointed by the Trustees. Evid.,

There were twenty five pupils in the boys' school, and seventeen in the girls' school, ten in each school were "blue coat scholars" receiving a quarterly allowance of 12s. 10d. Mr. Mulholland had added to these allowances also, making the total expenditure about £215 a year. All the pupils were members of the Church of Ireland. In each school an elementary English education was given, and needlework was taught in the girls' school.

Mr. Moore visited these schools, and reports that the answering was very good, except in arithmetic, which was decidedly below the average, he reports that the sanitary arrangements were most defective, and that there was a great want of painting and papering. The schoolrooms were otherwise in good order, and suitable for double the present number of pupils. App. C. p.

The schools were formerly inspected by the Church Education Society.

Down: Joseph Brown's Endowment.

By his will dated 8th November, 1867, Joseph Brown, late of Portavogie, in the county of Down, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to certain trustees upon trust, amongst other things, out of the annual income to pay yearly to a committee of all the clergymen of every religious sect or denomination who should for the time being be officiating in or for the parishes of St. Andrew's alias Ballyhalbert, Innishargy, and Ardkeen, in the county of Down, and should notify their consent to set on such committee, a sum of £100—£50 portion thereof to be expended in the par- Returns.

chase of suitable and warm clothing to be distributed in the months of December or January in every year amongst such of the children of the poor as should during the preceding year have been regular attenders equal to the average of the rest of the scholars in any of the schools in operation in the aforesaid townlands, such distribution to be made equally without reference to religious creed or opinion and in such manner that each donation should be sufficiently large to be useful and beneficial to the object of such donation. And also upon trust to set apart a further sum of £100 and apply the same in every year as follows, viz.:—That the said trustees should in the month of December in each year examine and ascertain how many schools should be in operation in the aforesaid townlands on the principle of imparting secular education to children of all creeds and denominations, and so conducted that no pupil should be required to be present at any religious instruction of which he or his parents or guardians would not approve. The said sum of £100 to be divided between the patrons or managers of such schools in proportion to the average number of pupils in attendance in each school during the preceding year, and to be distributed by the patrons or managers as prizes in books or money as they should think fit. The said yearly sum of £100 to cease to be payable and merge into the residue of the estate in case there should cease to be a non-sectarian school in the aforesaid townlands.

And the testator directed that in case there should, in any year, be any surplus remaining of the income of his real estate and the residue of his personal estate, after answering the previous trusts of his will, that his trustees should, out of such surplus, retain a sum of £30, and should distribute the remainder amongst and for the benefit and support of such non-sectarian charitable or educational institutions in the county of Down, conducted and managed on principles which his trustees should consider the testator would have approved of if living, as his trustees should think proper.

The testator died on 26th June, 1868. Each year since his death there was a surplus of about £120 available for the purposes of the trusts, the accumulations of which were represented at the date of the last published account of the trustees (7th January, 1880), by a sum of £2,000, cash, invested in Government Stock, and a sum of £66 16s. 3d., lying on deposit receipt in the Belfast Bank. The yearly rental of the testator's real estates amounted to about £480, and the personal estate was represented by a sum of £600 11s. 2d., Government Three per Cent. Stock.

A scheme for the application of the surplus was settled by the Court of Chancery on 13th December, 1879, and will be found in Appendix O, p. 344, infra.

By this scheme it is provided that the surplus income shall be applied each year by the trustees for the support and benefit of such non-sectarian schools in the county of Down as the trustees shall think fit: the same to be distributed in prizes awarded at public examinations held at each school by an examiner appointed by the trustees. The trustees are, each year, to furnish to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests a return showing the number of schools sharing in the division, the number of years appointed for the continuance of such participation, and the date of such appointment.

The trustees, at the date of our inquiry, were William Sanderson, James Rankin, and John Boyd.

Fermanagh: Vaughan's Charity, Tubrid.

Rep. p. 162. The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that this Charity was founded by George Vaughan, Esq., who, devised half of his estate for the purpose of establishing a school, to be called "The Charitable Charter School of George Vaughan, Esq.," and for building a church for the accommodation of the pupils. His design was that 300 boys and 200 girls should be educated, maintained, and instructed in the linen manufacture, and in husbandry; and, that the property might be sufficient for this purpose, he directed that the yearly produce should be suffered to accumulate, and, from time to time, be invested in land, until the income for the Charity should reach £2,000 a year. However, the testator's relatives, being desirous to receive their share without further delay, agreed with the trustees to divide the property; and the agreement was sanctioned by Statute in 1776, when the entire property, real and personal, produced an income of £1,284 15s. per annum. The endowment came into operation in 1791.

In 1857 the Charity possessed estates of the extent of 4,388A. OR. 14P., producing an income of £1,037 5s. 7d., school premises of the annual value of £260, and an income from Government Stock of £181 10s. At that date there were only sixty boys and twenty-seven girls in the school; the state of instruction was considered by the Assistant Commissioner "very satisfactory in the boys' school, but not so in the girls' school." The domestic arrangements he reported upon favourably; but he considered that the master had not sufficient assistance, having regard to the number of boys under him.

Abol. Vol.
III., p. 574.

The school was, at the date of our inquiry, managed by a Board of Governors, thirteen in number, who, when a vacancy occurred, co-opted a member at a meeting at which the quorum was seven, that for all other purposes being five only. Three of the Governors were ex-officio, viz.—The Lord Primate as Bishop of Clogher; the Bishop of Derry, and the Rector of Drumkeeran. At the date of our inquiry the other Governors were the Earl of Enniskillen, the Earl of Belmore, the Rev. T. R. Robinson, D.D.; the Dean of Clogher, Lord O'Neill, the Rev. A. Williamson, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, the Earl of Erne, the Dean of Armagh, and the Archdeacon of Armagh. The Board of Governors met once a year, usually in Dublin. They elected three of their number as a Board of Auditors, who had the control of all the ordinary expenditure. The Governors nominated the pupils, each Governor nominating two boys and three girls; all other vacancies were filled up by the Board of Auditors at their quarterly meetings. The pupils, after nomination, were examined by the Chaplain and by the Medical Attendant, and any who could not read, or in whom the doctor found a defect, were rejected. Two Auditors formed a quorum, and, if two did not attend, all except "necessary business" was postponed.

We were informed by the agent that the estates contained 4,292 acres, according to a survey made in 1862, but 1,046 acres were let in perpetuity, at a rent of only £11 7s. 9d., the remaining lands were let to tenants, and produced a rental of £1,606 9s. 5d., and there was an income of £45 from lands let for grazing from year to year, making a total gross income from the estates of £1,653 17s. 2d. The rental, which the agent considered fair, had been increased by nearly £100 during the last twenty years on the expiration of leases and by reclamation of bog. The tenement valuation (made in 1862) of the portion of the estate let to tenants, was £1,528; that of the farm occupied by the Charity was £195. The agent stated that, in 1878, after deducting incidental expenses he had lodged to the credit of the Governors out of the rents, the sum of £1,293 5s. 5d. There was also the sum of £1,191 1s. Government stock, producing an income of £35 14s. 8d. From the minute-book of the board it appeared that there was, in the year 1845, the sum of £7,565 9s. 11d. invested in Government stock, but that in 1851 £1,500, and in 1854 another sum of £1,500 were ordered to be sold out for building and repairs; in 1858 £500 was ordered to be sold out to pay "balance of Tubrid works," also £550 to build "offices at Tubrid," and £300 to build a National school for the tenantry on the estate; £250 was sold out in the year 1860 to replace money taken from a building fund to meet the current expenses of the institution, and £600 was sold out in 1862 to build on the estate a police barrack, for which the Government paid a rent of £30. A sum not exceeding £500 was also placed at the disposal of the Lord Primate in 1862 towards the enlargement of the parish church of Drumkeeran, which the pupils attended, and which adjoins the school. Stock to the value of £1,061 had also been sold out to pay the Church Temporalities Commissioners the price of glebe lands which lay in the centre of the estate. From the amount of stock still standing to the credit of the governors it appeared that those orders for sale of stock were not acted upon to within over £1,000 of their full amount.

The school was exclusively a Church school. There were, at the date of our inquiry, forty-eight boys and twenty-eight girls on the roll, all boarders. The number had since 1857 been reduced by ten by a rule of the board, but the course of instruction, viz., reading, writing, grammar, geography, arithmetic, geometry, algebra, mensuration, and book-keeping, originally prescribed was adhered to.

No instruction in agriculture was imparted beyond the reading of the Agricultural Class-book of the National Board. The large farm surrounding the institution was worked by day labourers under the direction of a steward. The pupils assisted, however, in keeping the house in order, no servant being kept except a cook; but the instruction in linen manufacture, directed by the will to be given, had been discontinued, and the looms were sold off thirty years ago. The girls made their own clothing, but the boys' clothing and shoes were made outside by contract. The boys had given up going to trades, and generally went into shops and offices, also into the police, the army, and navy. The boys when going to situations received, in accordance with the wishes of the testator, a gratuity of £5, where they did not get the benefit of an apprentice fee of £7 or £10.

In reply to a question whether it was not desirable that domestic duties should be more taught, the Earl of Belmore, one of the governors, replied that cookery and other domestic work might be taught with advantage, but that this could not be done without additions to the staff of servants, which could not be made without extra expenditure, and this would, of course, entail a farther reduction of the number of the pupils, which already fell very far short of that contemplated by the founder.

The institution was under the control of the "Chaplain." On him devolved the general internal superintendence, and he attended specially to the religious instruction of the children. His salary was £130 per annum, the original sum of £50 at which the testator had fixed it having been many years ago raised to its present amount, as it was clearly no longer sufficient. Certain charges against the management of the school were made by Dr. Graham, late medical superintendent of the school, of which the chief were that the salary of the chaplain had been raised beyond that authorized by the Charter; and that the sanitary condition of the school was bad, but it appeared that he had never reported to that effect to the Board while medical attendant, nor until he had been appointed sanitary officer to the dispensary district in which the school was situated. It appeared further that the condition of the school in this respect had been much improved.

The schools were inspected by Mr. Rudkin, inspector of the English schools under the Board of Erasmus Smith.

App. C. p

Mr. Moore reports that the answering of both boys and girls in this school was good, and he was sure it was greatly due to the systematic inspection carried out by Mr. Rudkin. The dormitories, he stated, were clean and airy, but he condemned the system of urinals fixed in the walls. The infirmary was unfurnished, and in a room directly underneath paraffin and other oils were kept, which would render the atmosphere most unhealthy for any sick person in the rooms above.

Londonderry: Gwyn's Institution.

Evid.,
12607.

This endowment consisted principally, at the date of our inquiry, of £35,353 17s., lent on mortgage in two sums of £23,076 18s. 6d., and £12,376 18s. 6d., at 4½ per cent. There were also two farms in the neighbourhood of Derry, and some house property, producing £73 13s. 8d. a year. The property was managed by twenty-one trustees, of whom the Bishop of Derry, and the Minister of the First Presbyterian Church in Derry were ex-officio two. The remaining nineteen were elected from among the merchants of Derry by the other trustees as vacancies occurred. The trustees met quarterly, and appointed from among their number a committee to act during the quarter, which met once a week.

Rep. p. 157
Vol. III. p.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that Gwyn's charitable institution was founded under the will of John Gwyn, who died in 1829, for the purpose of clothing, boarding, educating, and apprenticing children of poor persons who had resided in the city of Londonderry and neighbourhood. No distinction was to be made as to religious persuasion. Roman Catholics were to be taught Roman Catholic doctrines, if their parents desired. The principles of sound Christian morality were to be taught to all. The master and assistants were to be Protestants.

Evid.,
12638-42.

At the date of our inquiry there were fifty-three pupils in the institution, of whom twenty-three were Presbyterians, fifteen Episcopalians, and fifteen Roman Catholics. The pupils were fed, clothed, and educated free, and it was necessary for their admission that they should be the children of poor parents. Children belonging to the city of Londonderry whose parents were both dead had a preference. Those who had one parent dead had the next claim. Children from a district called the Liberties came after; and the village of Muff, which was the testator's birthplace, had a special privilege for the admission of children from the village or a mile round it.

Evid.,
12632-36.

The head master received £130 per annum, and for some years past he had received additional sums varying from £28 to £64 for extra teaching in science. There was an assistant master and also a paid monitor. Pupils were eligible for admission from eight to twelve years of age, and usually remained in the institution until sixteen. Sir Edward Reid, q.c., informed us that the trustees were chosen from the merchants of the city without any reference to religious qualifications. There were, however, no Roman Catholic trustees. The boys went to their respective places of worship every Sunday, the Roman Catholic boys being placed under the charge of the senior Roman Catholic pupil. The latter also were allowed to go to the Roman Catholic clergyman whenever he sent a message that he wished their attendance for religious instruction. The religious services in the school were conducted by the schoolmaster, it having been ordered by the will of the founder that no services should be conducted in the school by any clergyman. Mr. Irvine, the treasurer, stated that the trustees gave him £50 to meet any advances required during the month. The site on which the institution stood had been purchased from the Church Temporalities Commissioners. Mr. Snowden, the head master, informed us that the pupils assisted to keep the grounds in order and to crop the garden, but that there was no other industrial training. There were prayers, morning and evening, which the Roman Catholics did not attend; but the Scriptures were read every day to all the pupils, according to the will of the founder. Except during religious instruction the pupils were always together. Mr. Moore reports :—

"I examined the boys of this institution in reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, grammar, and geography, and the answering in these subjects was highly satisfactory. The house seemed nicely kept and the grounds about it were beautifully laid out. There were in the school as boarders, twenty-one Presbyterians, seventeen members of the Irish Church, and sixteen Roman Catholics."

Londonderry: Rainey's Charity, Magherafelt.

The Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, reported that Hugh Rainey, by his will dated in 1707, left property which, by an Act of Parliament passed in 1711, was permanently settled as a rentcharge of £175, Irish, for the education, clothing, boarding, apprenticing, and instructing in prayer and Scripture of children of parents who had been reduced to poverty. It was provided under the Act that the yearly rentcharge was to be paid to the Archbishop of Armagh for supporting, maintaining, educating, and placing out to trades twenty-four boys, under the trusts and subject to the nomination directed by the testator's will. There were in the School in 1857 ten pupils. The state of instruction was reported as being unsatisfactory, and the endowment inadequate to carry out the trusts of the will.

The Rev. Thomas Jordan, Rector of Magherafelt, informed us that he was a visitor of the school in conjunction with the agent of the Salters' Company. The school was situated on the estates of the Salters' Company, who, in 1864, had built a suitable school house. They had also made a certain grant to the school, and the boys were nominated by himself, as Rector, acting for the Primate, and by the agent of the Salters' Company acting for them. The number of boys on the foundation was thirty, and it was contemplated to receive in addition thirty non-foundation boys, who were to pay for their education. The yearly expenditure, at the date of our inquiry, including the rentcharge forming the original endowment, amounted to between £300 and £400, and was provided for by the Salters' Company. The boarding school had been entirely abolished. Of the pupils on the foundation eleven were Presbyterians, two were Roman Catholics, and seventeen were members of the Church of Ireland. Mr. Henry Kincaid, M.A., the head master, informed us that he received a salary of £150 a year, together with a house and some other advantages; also about £25 a year school fees. The school was a classical school, and was inspected at regular intervals by an examiner appointed by the Salters' Company. There was an assistant master who was paid £80, and a monitor £6 a year. There were also prizes to the amount of £10 annually. The conscience clause contained in the Intermediate Education Act was in force in the school.

Mr. Moore reports :—The present teacher has entirely changed the course of instruction, and now tries to teach classics, mathematics, French, and German, though, I fear, with no very great amount of success. The answering of the boys in English and mathematics was very poor. There is a good classical school in the town, and Rainey's school would be much more useful if it were made an English and commercial school.

Galway: Male National School, Lombard-street.

This school is described in the report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, as the Market-street Free National Boys' School, and as possessed of a site and school premises of the annual value of £89 10s., and of bequests and donations lent on bond or mortgage or invested in bank shares, producing in all about £160 a year. There were then 802 children, all Roman Catholics, on the roll, the average attendance being only 345. It was stated to us that the existing endowment consisted of "some land held in fee, mortgage on landed property, and some shares in bank and railway companies." The school buildings consisted of four large rooms, with two wings attached, one used as a breakfast-room, in which 150 poor boys were daily provided with breakfast; the other was occupied by the members of the community of the Brothers of St. Patrick, who acted as the teachers in the schools, which are in connexion with the National Board. A sum of £170 per annum was paid by the Committee to the Community for teaching the schools. The education was primary, with some intermediate teaching, not including Greek, Latin, or French. The average number of pupils on the roll for the year ending September 30, 1879, was 573, all Roman Catholics. The Very Rev. Peter Dooley, M.A., College House, Galway, was the manager of the schools, which were founded about 1787, by a committee of Galway gentlemen, who purchased the premises and erected the school at a cost of about £1,000. The buildings were kept in repair at the cost of the school. The community were subject to the Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

*Manufacturing
Schools.*
31 Vic., c.

By an Act of Parliament passed in the 31st year of Her Majesty, cap. 35, after reciting that it was expedient to provide for the establishment and regulation of Industrial Schools in Ireland, it was enacted that any person may bring before two justices or a magistrate any child apparently under the age of fourteen years that comes within any of the following descriptions, namely—1. That is found begging or receiving alms (whether actually or under the pretext of selling or offering for sale anything) or being in any street or public place for the purpose of so begging or receiving alms. 2. That is found wandering and not having any home or settled place of abode or proper guardianship or visible means of subsistence. 3. That is found destitute, either being an orphan or having a surviving parent who is undergoing penal servitude or imprisonment. 4. That frequents the company of reputed thieves. And the justices or magistrate, on being satisfied that the child comes within one of the aforesaid descriptions, and that it is expedient to deal with him under the Act may order him to be sent to a certified industrial school.

An industrial school is defined as one in which industrial training is provided, and in which children are lodged, clothed, and fed as well as taught, and must be certified and inspected in the same manner as a reformatory school.

The Act also provides that where a child, apparently under twelve years of age, is charged before two justices or a magistrate with an offence punishable by imprisonment or a less punishment, but has not been convicted of felony, and the child ought, in the opinion of the said justices or magistrate (regard being had to his age and to the circumstances of the case) to be dealt with under said Act, the said justices or magistrate may order him to be sent to a certified industrial school.

The Act further provides that no child is to be detained in an industrial school after sixteen years of age unless with his own consent in writing, and also that no child shall be sent to an industrial school which is not under managers of the same religious persuasion as the parents.

The Act also provides that it shall be lawful for the Grand Juries, Town Councils, and Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to contribute to the maintenance and support of these schools in the same manner as reformatory schools, and also that the parents, step-parent, or other person legally liable to maintain any such child, shall, if of sufficient ability, contribute a sum not exceeding 6s. a week to his maintenance and training in the same manner as in the case of reformatory schools.

The Inspector of reformatory schools is also appointed inspector of industrial schools.

At the date of our inquiry there were fifty schools in Ireland certified as industrial schools under the provisions of said Act. Their names, localities, and religious denominations were as follows:—

In these twenty-four schools the number of pupils on the rolls in January, 1878, was 1689. Males, 181; females, 1508.

As in the case of the Reformatory schools we have not thought it necessary to inquire minutely into the management and working of the Industrial schools.

One of the witnesses examined before us, the Very Rev. H. H. Dickinson, Dean of the Chapel Royal, stated that he had considerable experience in getting children into industrial schools, and that he hoped that some modification might be made in the present Industrial Schools Act. His reason was that under the Act as at present administered the child must be taken to the police court at a time when trials for assaults, drunkenness, or worse are going on, and then the child is ranked more or less among criminals. He thought it would be a great advantage in all cases of industrial schools that the magistrates should hold a separate sitting, always, if necessary, in open court, but so distinct from the criminal court that the little children might not feel themselves degraded. He stated that he had seen little children sobbing and crying believing themselves guilty of some unknown crime, because they were to be "as the phrase is, committed," and given into charge of a policeman, and that many accompaniments of crime were thrown unnecessarily around children guilty of no crime.

REFORMATORY SCHOOLS.

By an Act of Parliament, passed in the 21st and 22nd years of Her Majesty, cap. 103, after reciting that it was expedient to provide for the establishment and regulation of reformatory schools for the better training of juvenile offenders in Ireland, it was enacted that whenever, after the passing of the Act, any person should be convicted of any offence punishable by law (except the offence of vagrancy) before any Judge of Assize or Judges sitting under a Commission of Oyer and Terminer or before any Court of Quarter Sessions or before the Divisional Justices of the Dublin Metropolitan Police District or before any Justice or Justices of the Peace at Petty Sessions under the Provisions of the 6th section of the Summary Jurisdiction (Ireland) Act, 1851, whose age should not, in the opinion of such judge or court, exceed the age of sixteen years, it should be lawful for the judge or court or justices before or by whom such offender should be convicted, in addition to the sentence passed as a punishment for the offence, to direct such offender to be sent, at the expiration of such sentence, to some one of the reformatory schools (certified as such by the Lord Lieutenant in the manner in said Act provided) the directors or managers of which should be willing to receive such offender, and to be there detained for a period not less than one and not exceeding five years. Provided, however, that the punishment for the offence should be one of imprisonment for a period of not less than fourteen days, and that the offender should only be sent to a reformatory under the management of persons of the same religious persuasion as the offender. And it was provided that it should be lawful for the Grand Jury of any county, county of a city, or county of a town, if they should think fit at any Assizes, and for the Town Councils of the boroughs of Dublin, Cork, and Limerick, upon the application of the directors or managers of any such reformatory school, to present a sum of money in aid of the maintenance of any such offenders, to be raised off the said county or borough in the same manner as presentments for the current expenditure of gaols; and also that it should be lawful for the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, upon the representation of the Chief Secretary of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, to defray out of any funds which should be provided by Parliament for that purpose, either the whole cost of the care and maintenance of any juvenile offender so detained in any reformatory school, at such rate per head as should be determined by them, or such portion of said cost as should be recommended by the said Chief Secretary.

Miscellaneous
Schools.

And it was further provided that the parent of any juvenile offender so sent to any reformatory school should be liable, if of sufficient ability, to contribute to the support and maintenance of such offender a sum not exceeding 5s. a week, each contribution to be recoverable in manner therein mentioned, and to be increased or diminished according to circumstances, provided that in no case it should exceed the weekly sum of 5s. The Act also provided for the appointment of an inspector of reformatory schools.

At the date of our inquiry there were in Ireland ten schools certified as Reformatory schools, in the manner provided by said Act, viz.—for Protestant males, Dublin, Hehahoth-place, South Circular-road, and the Malone Reformatory, Belfast; and for Protestant females, the Cork-street Reformatory, Dublin; for Roman Catholic males, St. Kevin's Reformatory, Glencree, county of Wicklow, Philipstown Reformatory, King's County, and St. Patrick's Reformatory, Upton, county of Cork; and for Roman Catholic females, High Park Reformatory, county of Dublin, St. Joseph's Reformatory, Ballinasloe, St. Joseph's Reformatory, Limerick, and Spark's lake Reformatory, Monaghan.

Reformatories being public institutions under the inspection of the Government inspector (Sir John Lentaigue, &c.) we did not consider it necessary to inquire into their management, or to notice them further in our report than by stating their names and the Act of Parliament under which they are supported.

CONCLUSION.

We have now endeavoured to fulfil the duty with which we were entrusted, of ascertaining and reporting upon the existing condition and present management of the Endowed Schools in Ireland.

The Warrant of the Lord Lieutenant under which we have had the honor to act does not commission us to put forward suggestions for the remedy of the evils which we may have found to exist, or to make recommendations for the improvement of the system upon which the Schools are conducted and the endowments managed.

The information which we have obtained as to the matters of inquiry specified in the Warrant, will be found collected in the annexed Tables, which have been prepared as nearly as possible in the form adopted in the Report of the Royal Commissioners, 1854-8, and as a continuation of the Tables annexed to that Report. It must, however, be remembered that we possessed no compulsory powers of investigation, and that all the information which we received was voluntarily supplied, or was obtained by our own references to public sources of knowledge.

In the foregoing pages we have stated such matters relating to particular Schools or classes of Schools as appeared to us to call for special remark. It would be impossible, without repetition, to present a complete summary of the observations which we have made, but it may be useful to mention the most effective agencies which, since the date of the Royal Commission, 1854-8, have operated for good or evil upon the Endowed Schools, and also to refer to some of the most important matters noticed in the course of our inquiry.

The inactivity of "The Commissioners of Education," and the inadequacy of their powers have continued to cause the inefficiency of that Board, and tended to confirm "its failure as an institution for the promotion of education." In this and other instances the selection, as the ex-officio managers of endowments, of dignitaries and officials whose time and attention are otherwise occupied, has tended to preclude that active personal exertion and interest, and that sense of individual responsibility on the part of the members of a governing body, which are necessary to secure efficiency.

Considerable improvements have been introduced (chiefly since the appointment of the present Treasurer) in the management of the Schools and property under the control of the Governors of the Schools founded by Erasmus Smith.

The Incorporated Society has made some improvements in its mode of administration, and has maintained the comparatively favorable character for efficiency and good management which it held at the date of the Royal Commission, 1854-8.

Since the passing of the Irish Church Act, 1869, the resources of the educational Societies and of the independent Schools connected with the Church of Ireland have generally diminished, and many of the primary Church Schools have in consequence been brought into the system of National Education. Where this step has not been taken these Schools have generally deteriorated.

Provision has been largely made for the education of Roman Catholic children under the supervision and management of members of their own denomination, in Colleges and Schools which have been established throughout Ireland by the exertions and from the private resources of the Roman Catholic clergy and laity. The members of that Church claim to participate in the public endowments, and complain that they have been unable to avail themselves of them.

Several important institutions have also been founded through similar exertions on the part of Protestant denominations.

A growing tendency has been manifested, especially by the members of the Church of Ireland, to place primary Schools, possessing endowments or aided by voluntary contributions, in connexion with the National Board, retaining the patronage or management in private hands. The Schools so placed have generally benefited by the change, but have remained practically denominational. We met but very few instances of "non-exclusive" Endowed Schools where the attendance of children of one denomination did not largely preponderate, and owing to the objections of Roman Catholics to "mixed education," and to the mode in which the majority of the "non-exclusive" Endowed Schools were managed, we found that the benefits of such Schools were usually enjoyed by Protestant children, and that the management of their endowments had generally passed into Protestant hands.

The want of summary powers for the control of the Irish educational endowments, through the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests or otherwise, and the expense, delay, and complication of the legal procedure available in Ireland for that purpose, have produced injurious consequences in many cases. The absence of an inexpensive, independent, and regular audit of accounts, and of an efficient and responsible system of periodical inspection of the buildings and property of the Schools have resulted in the insecurity and misapplication of pecuniary endowments, in wasteful and irregular expenditure, and in the neglect of necessary works of repair and maintenance, while the landed endowments have almost universally suffered from defective supervision, and failed to produce a due return. There is also a serious difficulty in legally dealing with endowments and premises which were formerly vested in persons or bodies affected by the Irish Church Act, 1869.

While the course of discipline and instruction in the larger Grammar Schools is in most cases satisfactory, and much sound and careful teaching is given in the Schools of every class, many of the smaller local endowments (especially for higher education) have proved inadequate, and have failed to effectuate the intentions of the founders. With few exceptions the teaching of natural and experimental sciences and of modern languages has been comparatively neglected; the Schools are in general insufficiently furnished, and imperfectly supplied with libraries and the appliances required for special instruction and for recreation.

The want of more extensive provision for practical and technical training, and of an education adapted to prepare pupils for commercial life and other pursuits not calling for classical study, has been much felt.

The fortunes of many and important Schools have been exposed to injurious fluctuations from the absence of any provision for the removal or retirement of masters who have proved inefficient, or have become incapable of further service, and at the same time meritorious and successful teachers have suffered from the want of the promotion which they deserved.

We desire to conclude by acknowledging the services of those who have assisted us in the discharge of the duties of the Commission. Our Secretary, James Creed Meredith, Esq., M.D., rendered us his services with indefatigable industry, uniform courtesy, and remarkable ability. We are indebted to Messrs. Hunt and Holt, who acted as our shorthand writers, for their accurate and expeditiously furnished reports of the evidence given at our public courts. Our Assistant Secretary, Mr. G. W. Bradshaw, who acted under our direction throughout the Commission, Richard E. Meredith, Esq., who assisted the Secretary in the preparation of our Report, and the other gentlemen who aided in the completion of the Report and of the Tables which are annexed to it, have performed their several duties to our entire satisfaction.

The exertions of the Rev. John P. Mahaffy, of Hugh Keys Moore, Esq., and of Edmund Murphy, Esq., in the inspection of the Schools and Estates which they were engaged to visit, and in the preparation of their several Reports, have supplied us with much of the information of which we have availed ourselves. Especially in reference to the Estates, the inspections were attended with many difficulties which were cheerfully met and efficiently overcome. The observations of our Inspectors, which we have caused to be printed in full, will, we have no doubt, be found valuable and practically useful additions to our Report, though the opinions expressed may perhaps, in some instances, relate to subjects which are beyond the scope of our Commission, and as to which we therefore do not feel at liberty to offer any observations.

All which we have the honor to submit for your Excellency's consideration as our Report in the premises.

Witness our hands and seals this 30th day of October, 1880.

APPENDIX A.

REPORT OF REV. J. P. MAHAFFY, F.T.C.D., INSPECTOR OF GRAMMAR SCHOOLS.

INTRODUCTION.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN—I beg hereby to lay before you my report upon the Grammar Schools of Ireland, made in accordance with your appointment and directions in August, 1879. It will be desirable before proceeding to details to inform you briefly of the course pursued in my inspection, and of the order adopted in the classifying of the various schools.

As it was understood that I should not spend more than two days in any school—indeed the Treasury seemed to contemplate one day for each—I spent two days in each of the larger schools only, and one in the smaller, so that each received a proportionate amount of investigation. My visits to the schools were not specially announced beyond the formal circular of your Secretary, and thus I had the advantage of seeing them when unprepared for official inspection, and in their normal working order. But this advantage, suggested by your general directions, was counterbalanced by the fact, that here and there I chanced upon a school in holiday, which postponed my examination of the boys.

But for the pressure of time, and the urgency of the Commissioners to have this report before them, I should have paid these very few schools another visit; but, as will be seen from the detailed statement, they are very few and unimportant.

From the amount of time given to each school, you will understand that it was totally impossible to examine each class minutely in several subjects. To do this in the larger schools would have required at least a week for each, and would have indefinitely extended my inquiry. Nor was it fair to submit the smaller schools to a stricter examination, even where it was possible.

This was accordingly my general procedure. I inspected not only the buildings, but the out-rooms and play-grounds, giving special attention to the dormitories, latrines, and other parts of the houses which best indicated either care or neglect in their daily management. In order to test the diet and ventilation, I dined, whenever possible, with the boys, and also visited the dormitories in the middle of the night, wherever they were fully occupied, and this, too, without notice or preparation.

I spent hours in school time, going from class to class, taking up some in classics, some in elementary mathematics, others in English, French, and German; others (and especially juniors), in dictation, modern geography, and history. This was done without any regularity, and often the same boys were taken through several subjects, in order to test their general development. In pursuing this course one may often hit upon the inferior, and pass by the superior boys; and this was in some cases complained of by the school-masters. But my object was not to discover the shew boys, it was to test the average, and if I missed good boys in some cases, it is equally certain that I missed many more backward boys in others, so that while it is quite likely that in particular cases I may have been misled and made errors in judgment, it is not likely that my general estimate of the schools is far from the truth. The details of the inspection were noted down in every case at the moment on printed sheets, and these now serve me in preparing this report, and save me from errors of memory, or from any confusion among the schools. But the inspection was too general, and in many cases too incomplete, to allow me in fairness to print these rough notes of individual cases, and of the answering of particular classes.

I have to report the greatest alacrity on the part of almost all the school-masters in furthering the investigations of the Commission, and the greatest kindness shown to me personally everywhere. The school-masters are agreed that nothing is more urgently wanted throughout the higher schools of Ireland than regular inspection, and they hailed even this occasional and exceptional inquiry as of great service, both in stimulating their pupils in showing weak and defective conditions, and in suggesting opportunities for farther improvements. While several non-endowed schools solicited inspection, one endowed (Lisnora) consented, with some hesitation, to submit to it, and one other (the Wesleyan Connexion in Dublin), refused, on the ground that it was not endowed, and, therefore, not within the scope of the Commission.

There was the same kindness and readiness to assist me among the head-masters of the great English schools, who placed everything at my disposal, and allowed me to examine classes in any subjects and after my own fashion. To these gentlemen I am bound to record my sincere thanks.

The order followed in the subjoined list of schools is as follows. First come the Royal Schools, and the lesser schools managed by the Royal Commissioners, next come the Erasmus Smith's Schools, then the Incorporated Society's Schools, the remaining Diocesan Schools, and the various schools with private endowments, arranged, as far as possible, according to the date and the management of the endowment, lastly, the Roman Catholic Colleges, and the unendowed schools which invited inspection.

There are added at the end of the report some general suggestions as to the better economy of the endowments, and the better management of the schools, which have arisen partly from this study of the Irish schools, partly from a comparison with English schools, partly from suggestions made concurrently, though independently, by several Irish head-masters.

DETAILED REPORT UPON THE ENDOWED GRAMMAR SCHOOLS.

I. a.—ROYAL SCHOOLS.

My visit to the four principal Royal schools took place in last November, when they were well advanced in their autumn term, and should have been in full working order. In no case had the head-masters more than a few hours notice of my visit, and I saw them in their ordinary condition, without any preparations on my account. I will take them in the order of their present importance.

ARMAGH.—(67 boarders, 65 day-boys, of whom 29 live in the boarding houses of two of the masters.—There are 10 assistants, including music-master, they generally teach two subjects. The first thing to be noted is the position and character of the buildings and grounds. They are not as good or as commodious as might be wished, being cramped in on two sides by high roads, and by the walls of gardens belonging to various proprietors. These now permanent objections can only be obviated by selling the whole of the present buildings and grounds and moving the school into the country. If it belonged to an English board, and was under English management, no doubt this would at once be done, and it would tend to the permanent good and probably to the permanent prosperity of the school.

But assuming that this large change is impossible, or at present impracticable, the following suggestions strike me as easily to be carried out. The play-ground, which is small and badly situated, is limited on one side by the head-master's garden wall, and by no more important obstacle. As the grounds all round the present infirmary, and even to the opposite slope of the hill, belong to the school, there could be no difficulty in moving the garden and thus gaining as much ground as is required for the boys' play. But on a second inspection lately made, I think that the construction of a second play-ground, for cricket, beyond the garden might be a cheaper and more satisfactory change, as it would accommodate the out-boarders also.

In the present play-ground the wall separating it from the town might be improved into a valuable and sunny cloister merely by building a narrow shed along it and flagging this shed underneath. Thus a dry and pleasant place would be secured for wet weather in which the boys could amuse themselves. This has been carried into practice by Rev. F. H. Wall, at Portlannington school. The large ball-alley should be divided into two ball courts.

I visited the dormitories carefully in the middle of the night, in order to test the ventilation, after the boys had been sleeping in them for some time. There was one of them, the senior dormitory, very fresh and pure, but both the others were close and showed a want of proper ventilation. This difference was mainly due to the much greater width of the senior dormitory, which accordingly contained a much greater cubic area. The dormitory lately built is not as well constructed as it ought to be in this respect.

The ventilation of the school-rooms is also inadequate. By keeping windows open any room can be ventilated, but this is a somewhat rude method, and the constant use of large jets of gas all through the winter afternoon tends to make the rooms very close, apart from the very injurious effect which open gas jets have upon the eyes.

Turning to the intellectual side of the school, it appeared on the whole in a state of energy and progress. Though the classes were, in my opinion larger than they should be, there was a great deal of careful teaching, and consequently of good answering, especially in the younger classes. The answering in dictation and modern history was better than I had then found in any school in Ireland, so also was the answering in elementary arithmetic, in which many younger boys did questions easily without paper. I can say the same of the elementary classics. In the higher school and among the elder boys there was not a corresponding progress except in geography, and this seems owing partly to the accident of the elder boys not being so clever (as the head-master pointed out), and partly to the injurious effect of the competition for intermediate scholarships and prizes. This is a large question to be discussed hereafter; but I will note two salient facts. Under the rules of the Intermediate Commissions it is found more advantageous to answer in a number of unimportant subjects, of which a hastily learned smattering suffices, than to study with earnestness the great subjects of education—classics and mathematics. Hence, boys spend every leisure moment, and even part of their proper school time, in learning little text books on natural sciences, music, and even Irish, to the detriment of their solid progress. This is not all. Owing to the appointing of fixed texts in classics, and the pendency of new passages in the examination, the boys are merely crammed in the appointed texts without being taught real scholarship. When examining a senior division in classics I observed that they all brought up annotated texts, in fact so fully annotated that every second clause was translated for them, and upon observing this to the master, he replied that he knew the evil, but that he could not get them through the intermediate course in any other way.

As regards the discipline of the school, there is still something to be desired. The classes were not very docile or attentive during my examination. In one dormitory a prefect was up after twelve o'clock at night making himself coffee, nor did the head-master, who was with me, think this wrong, but told me that he allowed the prefects to sit up till twelve. It appeared to me that all the dormitories should be perfectly quiet by eleven o'clock.

Here are a few more points. The boys in the assistant-masters' residence houses are, to all intents and purposes, day-boys at the school, and not boarders. They do not associate generally with the boarders in the house, and when they are taken ill they are not admitted to the infirmary. They are, however, both comfortably housed and well cared. Yet they did not appear to me as a real fraction of the large boarding-school, and their position is doubtful and undefined.

The town of Armagh is probably the most suitable place in the north of Ireland for a Royal school. It now supplies (apart from the day-boys in the residence houses) about 40 day-boys, and the college is therefore, in spite of its insufficient grounds, the most successful boarding school in the north of Ireland.

In my opinion the school exhibitions should be kept quite separate from the intermediate scheme, and I cannot think that a change of the present arrangements in this respect is at all desirable.

Finally the school is in crying want of proper book-shelves for the boys' library. At present there is a room applicable to the purpose; but the books are huddled into clothes-purses in a passage, two or three tiers deep, and the task of keeping them in order, and even of getting at them, is no small one. In this particular Armagh presents a striking contrast to other schools, and the expense of a few pounds would effect a remedy. Whether the library itself was adequate I could not see, as I could not make any survey of the books.

ENNIISKILLER.—(45 boarders, 30 day boys, 5 assistants, teaching 2 subjects each).—As regards the grounds, this school is very handsomely and commodiously situated, and ought to be most attractive were it not that the boundary of deep water affords an opportunity for boys running into danger. No amount of precaution can entirely obviate this risk. The buildings are rather extensive and handsome than really commodious, for they straggle over an inconvenient amount of surface. Not only is it very difficult to keep such premises in repair, but the separation of the school and class-rooms from the other buildings compels both masters and boys to pass constantly through the open air in crossing the yard.

The present head-master feels it a grievance that certain heavy outlays have not been refunded to him by the Board—a question which I do not discuss; but I think the discontent and weariness caused by this controversy, and his increasing years, have prevented him from applying to the Board for the necessary repairs of painting and papering. Hence the school has, internally, a somewhat neglected appearance. Whitewashing, painting, and scoring of floors are urgently needed, indeed an additional supply of soap to the boys would not come amiss.

A yearly inspection by the Secretary of the Commissioners, or other competent officer, would obviate this evil, which is sure to arise after a head-master has been many years in office. With the exception of this general cleaning and painting, I do not see that anything could be done for the buildings except to make a covered way from the main house to the school-rooms. This is very much wanted, and would not cost much.

I found the dormitories (at 1 a.m.) admirably ventilated and cool; indeed the whole house was very well managed in this respect. The means of heating the school-rooms seemed to me quite adequate; nevertheless a very untidy habit prevails among the boys of carrying railway rugs into school, and sitting with them wrapped round their knees. When I was there the weather was warm, and such a thing inexcusable; an inspection in cold weather with a thermometer would show whether there is, in winter, any cause of complaint.

My examination of several classes showed the following results. The highest class are admirably taught in classics, nor is there any sounder or more patient scholar in Ireland engaged in teaching than the chief classical master. I speak from discussions with him, as well as from testing his pupils, and believe that his best scholars ought to turn out superior to any in Ireland, except those of Mr Ringwood, who has the same high personal qualifications. There was the same good teaching in French and German by a really competent gentleman from Göttingen, but who is not likely to stay in Ireland. I here call attention to the fact that (with rare exceptions) the only decent teaching of French and German which I have found in Ireland is that conducted by respectable foreigners, especially Germans, and I differ wholly from the opinion of many head-masters, that this study is efficiently or even better done by English or Irish masters. This may, no doubt, here and there be the case; but the mistake made by the head-masters who have found foreigners useless or objectionable, is that they have obtained them by advertisement or through London offices, whereas an application to the rector of a German university would say day obtain a learned and competent teacher. There are numbers of really high-class German scholars whom £100 per annum would tempt to come to Ireland for some years.

In Mathematics the answering was indifferent, but this is not due to the present science-master, who seems (like all Santry men) very competent. He has not been appointed long enough to produce any large effect. In history and geography, and in dictation, as well as in classics, I found the junior classes deficient, and think much improvement is required. The head-master fully agrees with me that any modification of school work or of school prizes in the direction of the intermediate examinations would be injurious, and he does not encourage this tendency.

The discipline of the school leaves something to be desired. The present head-master was the apostle of a new theory, that of treating boys with lenity and generous confidence. There is no doubt that this is the right extreme, if any extreme be right; but the order and regularity of a school may suffer through such lenity. I have already noticed the travelling rugs in the school-room. While I was there, two or three boys were absent from dinner without any reprimand or inquiry. In the dormitory there were two boys (one of them a prefect) up at 1 a.m., and this the head-master justly censured; but a proper inspection of the dormitory at 11 o'clock would render such a thing impossible. I have also reason to believe that reports to parents are not furnished with either the frequency or the regularity which is desirable. These defects result mainly from the weariness of thirty years' unbroken school-work and can hardly be obviated by any precaution except the establishing of retiring pensions for head-masters.

The library arrangements were very good. There were both good shelves and room for books and readers, and there appeared to be a fair stock of books. But these libraries ought to be included in the annual inspection, and a small annual grant for books would keep them up and replace such as get worn out from constant reading.

The town of Enniskillen is by no means so well suited as Armagh to produce a good class of day-boys, but still there is a large number of rich Protestants, and some boys whose parents cannot afford boarding fees, come to live in the town and attend as day-boys. At present there are about thirty day-boys attending. But the great proportion of these boys desire merely a mercantile education and do not proceed to universities. Hence their parents seem content with a low standard of education. There was a general feeling about the country that the estate had been mismanaged and might produce a larger income, but it was not my duty to verify this rumour.

DUNGANNON.—(16 boarders, 20 day boys; 2 assistants, 1 classical, 1 science).—The actual site and the buildings are the best in Ireland. Not only are the buildings isolated on a healthy hill, but they are admirably planned and compactly put together, so that the present head-master, by whose plans and advice they were carried out, deserves the credit of having permanently benefited the school. They were, moreover, kept neatly painted and white-washed, and were all in good order except the so-called library or boys' play-room, which is the most difficult place to keep clean. But it seems a pity that these fine buildings should have been erected in a place so near the other schools and yet not so important in situation or so likely to be permanently useful. I have reason to believe that if offered for sale, they would, however, bring their full value.

I found the senior classes exceedingly well taught in classics, and they also answered well in Euclid and French. But I found the junior classes backward in all subjects, and in dictation there were very few either senior or junior who did not make mistakes. One young boy who came from a National school, showed a remarkable superiority to the rest in arithmetic, but he may have been a smarter boy naturally. The science-master had been lately appointed, and was, therefore, not responsible for the answering. The head-master is strongly opposed to the multiplication of subjects supported by the Intermediate Board, which sent inaccurate and ill-taught pupils far better than those who learn the great subjects thoroughly.

The discipline seemed good, but of course it is very easily kept up in a small school. Though there is a very good library-room, the books formerly collected have been worn out and not replaced, and there is now no adequate provision for the boys' improvement in this direction. I found that neither at this school nor at Enniskillen were there regular reports sent home to the parents. It is possible they do not require this, but still it should form part of the routine of strictly managed schools. The head-master has been thirty years at work, and is naturally weary of his labour. No head-master in Ireland better deserves a pension. I do not feel confident that all his assistants stand high enough in qualifications, and think there is a great contrast between his teaching and theirs. There is, unfortunately, a strong tendency in a failing school to economise in masters, and thus its recovery becomes impossible.

The conditions of the town of Dungannon are unfavourable to a large supply of day-boys. It was reported to me that owing to the policy of the owner of the town (a parliamentary borough) leases for building were until lately refused, and thus respectable dwelling-houses could not be built for the people who desired to come and reside for the benefit of their children. Neither are there such attractions as Armagh possesses, nor does Dungannon lie in a good railway thoroughfare, so as to command a large district. County towns of this sort are now decaying in Ireland, and I see little chance of Dungannon ever becoming a desirable place of residence. Hence the school can only succeed as a boarding school, and will probably do so at the expense of Armagh and Enniskillen. But no doubt a young head-master would cause it to revive considerably.

CAVAN.—(15 boarders, 10 day-boys, 2 assistants, one in science and the other in classics).—The buildings here are commodious and well situated, but the play-ground is too narrow, and an adjoining field (which now belongs to the head-master) should be secured for the boys. The rooms are large, and the dormitories high and airy, but there are no partitions or small bedrooms. The master who sleeps in charge of the boys has no privacy. This should be remedied. Owing to the small number of scholars, there is little difficulty in keeping the rooms aired and fairly clean.

As to the knowledge of the boys it should be remarked that many of them are very young and have not been long at the school, but nevertheless I got good answering from them in Accidence (Latin). I did not think the classical answering of the higher classes good. In science they were decidedly bad, and attempted to do sums and easy algebraic questions in the clumsiest way. I may say the same of their geography and their dictation. Their geography was learned (I fancy) out of a book without reference to maps—a sort of thing constantly to be found in schools, and most of them made mistakes in dictation. But both the assistant-masters were newly appointed, and so far the blame does not rest with them. I formed a very high opinion of the science-master (Mr. Todd) who comes from Satory, and anticipates that in a year or so he will produce a marked change in his department. The head-master has been far too long in office and ought if possible to be relieved from active work. In fact if a responsible assistant-master could be appointed and paid directly by the Commissioners, the head-master might practically retire upon his present salary and residence. He seems to have been harshly treated by them in former years, and such a policy is sure to react injuriously upon the school.

The people of Cavan, as well as the head-master, complained to me, that after a distinct promise that school exhibitions should be given, this promise was not carried out, and they regard this as a breach of faith on the part of the Commissioners. A respectable man in the town, who was preparing his sons for the school, came to complain that he had sent up a memorial on the subject some weeks ago, at the suggestion of some members of your Commission, and that its receipt had not even been acknowledged. Surely this apparently just complaint should be met by granting at once the promised exhibitions. If the Board felt any difficulty as to the conducting of the examinations, joint examinations might be held at one of the schools, or at some convenient centre (like Clones) for boys entering or attending the several different schools. A joint board of examiners might be selected, from the masters of the schools, and perhaps it would avoid any complaints if the science master of Cavan (already mentioned) were at times appointed to take part in them. It is fair to add that since my visit some of these matters have been rectified, and the exhibitions granted.

Though the town of Cavan is a far cleaner town than either Enniskillen or Dungannon, it does not seem a good centre for a school, which can never command a large number of day-boys, and has never yet (I understand) been well filled. If this school were changed into a preparatory school, admitting boys from nine to fourteen only, it might enter upon a new sphere of usefulness. The want of such schools is much felt in Ireland; they are at present few, and only carried on in private schools, where the want of endowment prevents the engaging of efficient masters. For most Irish people cannot pay the very high charges demanded by such schools in England.

BARROW.—(15 boarders, 30 day-boys, of the latter two-thirds Presbyterians; 2 assistants, one in classics and one in mathematics).—This school is doing quietly, and, without making any display, a considerable amount of work. It lies in the centre of perhaps the richest agricultural population in Ireland, and farmers' sons come, at day boys, on ponies and cars, from several miles off to the school. The style of the school, which is ruder than the other Royal Schools, is perhaps suited to the class who chiefly attend it. The head master, in spite of his deafness, is a sound and careful teacher, and his assistant in science is perhaps the best of the kind I have met in Ireland. I noticed that the vegetables and fruit of the garden appeared not to be applied to the use of the boys, but sold as a perquisite of the head master. The day I dined in the school no vegetables appeared on the table (middle of September), and when I found quantities of gooseberries dropping off the trees in the garden, and asked why they were not given to the boys, I was told that they were kept for sale. I also noted that the boys were silent during dinner—a practice both unsocial and unwholesome, and one which a careful schoolmaster should take care to obviate.

I desire to call attention in all the Royal schools to the dirty condition of the school-room floors—owing to day boys coming from a distance in muddy boots, and boarders coming in from play in the same way; hence the floors are so filthy as to give a grimy and disgusting appearance to the whole room. People are so accustomed to this in all Irish schools that they wonder at my remarking it. As is done in St. Stanislaus' College, every day boy should be obliged to keep a neat pair of house shoes in an ante-room, and neither he nor the boarders should be allowed to enter the school-room in muddy boots; also to avoid permanent ink stains, the school-room floors should be covered with oilcloth or some substance which could be easily and completely washed. I need not speak of lesser improvements while this remains not even desired.

The history of these schools seems to point to the fact that a frequent change of the head masters is beneficial. Whenever an active young man is appointed the school improves for some years. Hence the promoting of elderly and already wearied men to such posts is inadvisable. On the other hand it is necessary, for the success of the school, that the assistant masters should be experienced and patient, and I do not know whether Irish schools have suffered more from elderly head masters or from juvenile assistants. The disproportion of the allowances for assistant masters at the various schools requires the Commissioners' attention. At Armagh the allowance is not half that of Enniskillen.

BANAGHER.—(4 boarders, 9 day-boys, no assistant masters).—This school is a complete failure, nor do I think the appointment of a Protestant head master, or any other internal change, will make it recover. The buildings were dirty and in decay, and I found only eight or nine boys preparing for special competitions, such as Civil Service or bank appointments; in fact rather private pupils over the ordinary school-age than ordinary scholars. But if the school were removed but a few miles to Parsonstown—a town of a similar character to Armagh, and always the residence of gentry—it would, doubtless, become a large school. This might be more efficiently secured by amalgamating it with the present good preparatory school flourishing at Parsonstown. The present Head master of Banagher is intellectually a competent man, nor could any charge of inefficiency in this respect be sustained against him.

I. A.—LESSER SCHOOLS UNDER THE COMMISSIONERS OF EDUCATION.

BALLYROAN.—(No boarders, 11 day boys, 1 assistant).—As regards the position of this school, it is now impossible that it should ever become suitable for the purpose. The village is several miles distant from any town, it is out of the reach of any railway station—being about five miles from Abbeyfeix, nor is there any special trade or industry likely to produce an increase of the population. The few boys who now frequent the school come from some miles distance on the Kilkenny side, where there are small coal mines, but they are obliged to come on ponies or in donkey-carts. There is a girls' school in the village, to which their sisters come, and so the same conveyance suits both. But so far as I could judge there will never be a sufficient number attending to make the establishment satisfactory. The present schoolmaster is trusted by the Roman Catholics, who do not object to send their sons to him. But this is probably exceptional, and arises from his being brought up in the place (his father was his predecessor in the school), and thus they know him from childhood.

I found the school-buildings quite large enough for the attendance; indeed, there were several bedrooms which had once been occupied by boarders, now empty. The hall and reception rooms had been recently painted and papered, and this was done at great inconvenience to the master in the middle of winter. But in many respects the place was in bad repair, and not properly furnished. The school-room was not supplied with maps on the walls, or with convenient benches. The condition of the lavrine outside (there was none for the boys inside) was simply disgraceful, and the out-offices round the yard were in a state of ruin or decay. The master complained that he had applied frequently to the agent of the estate, and to the former secretary, to have these matters repaired, but in vain. No doubt the necessary repairs might still be executed at a moderate cost, and they ought to be carried out without delay. It is also clear that if the building and out-offices were put into proper order, a yearly inspection should be made by some one from Dublin, in order to secure proper attention on the part of the master to keeping them neat and clean.

As regards the land round the school-house, the master complained that he had till recent years been obliged to pay an excessive rent for it, and that even now he was paying rent, which seems a hardship considering his small salary (£80 and house), and the fact that there is an ample estate for the endowment of the school. But he complained still more that certain valuable grass fields, which he showed me adjoining his lawn, had been taken from his father by the late agent, and let to a distant farmer. He is thus deprived of the best part of the school farm, and is also annoyed by threats of prosecution for trespass when his boys cross the dividing fence. There is no house attached to these neighbouring fields, and he believes there is no lease to the present tenant, who resides at a distance, so that their recovery for the schoolmaster might be easy. So far as my information could reach, this grievance of the schoolmaster was a reasonable one, and the increase of his grass farm would be in effect a considerable increase of salary without cost to the Commissioners.

The teaching in the school, as it now exists, labours under great difficulties. For the number of boys though small (11) comprises boys of various ages and degrees of advancement, who require to be in separate classes sometimes containing only one or two boys in each. This could only be done by the present staff (of two men) if the assistant was an active and able teacher of the primary work, the head-master taking the higher and collegiate teaching. For this latter the present head-master seems to me well qualified, and the more advanced boys were soundly and well instructed. One of them (a boy named Welsh) showed remarkable talent.

But when we come to the assistant-master, we find things in a deplorable condition. He holds his place by appointment of the patron, and is not removable by the head-master or Commissioners, or perhaps by any one. The present usher is a man of about eighty or ninety years of age, indeed he may possibly be one hundred; he is so dull and shrivelled with age that he only comes in late, and is unable to teach anything; I do not think he comprehended who I was, or what I wanted. His appointment dates from the remote past, and when I asked what his qualifications were, or had once been, I could learn nothing but some vague legends about his great severity in early youth; in fact I was told he had once put the ear off of a boy. But these were venerable traditions. The Commissioners should communicate with the patron, and have this man pensioned out of the funds lying to the credit of the school. There ought not to be much difficulty in persuading him to resign, if he cannot be removed.

If the school be maintained in its present place, it is hard to see what can be done to enlarge it, except to offer some money prizes at a yearly examination. For the offer of free tuition will effect nothing. The master informed me that if he made this offer, the farmers were offended, and took it as a tender of charity. On the other hand when he charges £2 or £3 a year, they undertake to pay it, and do not keep their promise. But a couple of £3 prizes would probably stimulate the boys now at the school, and bring down some more from the mines. Of course the Intermediate examination makes the offering of larger prizes quite unnecessary.

MILNATON.—(45 boarders, 27 day boys [10 R.C.], 5 assistants, not including the drawing master).—This school is evidently situated in an important and convenient place, but owes its remarkable and steady prosperity during the last fifteen years, first to the ability and zeal of the head master, secondly, to the fact that the county of Cork, and even the city of Cork, does not possess any day or boarding school of high repute. From what I heard in Cork by careful inquiry, there is no good collegiate teaching to be found there. From the moment Mr. Moore was appointed, the school, which had practically ceased to exist, sprang into life, and being well-supported and favoured by the Commissioners, through their late secretary, has averaged (between day boys and boarders), at least 90. The railway brings boys daily from the neighbourhood (as far as Youghal), and the Roman Catholics seem disposed to support it.

As regards the actual buildings, they are not at all so well situated as appears at first sight. Though the house is on a slight eminence, it is built in a hollow on that eminence, so that all damp immediately about the house runs into it, if not secured by deep drainage for a short distance. This is a serious disadvantage, and affects particularly the outside latrines, which are in a very bad and unwholesome condition. The drainage question should be examined by a competent architect, and reported on specially to the Commissioners. The buildings have been lately increased by class rooms, in addition to the large school-room, and these are, of course, in good repair, but the older part of the house, and the out-offices, are in a very bad state, the wood-work is decaying and wants painting and a considerable outlay upon it is imperatively demanded. The whole of the school-house appeared to me much wanting in cleanliness. The usual habit of allowing boys to run in and out of the school-room had reduced the floor to the condition of a road. Benches and walls were very dirty and looked squalid. So also the dormitories and beds in anything but a satisfactory state. The w.c. upstairs was not free from bad odour. What was still more serious was the habit permitted in the dormitories of boys using paraffin lamps of their own, by which they read after the gas is turned out. When I visited the dormitory, the smell of paraffin which had been spilt was very offensive, and I found those wooden ledges, or tops of drawers, on which the lamps were placed, saturated by a course of such accidents. If cleanliness were a quality esteemed by the middle classes of the county Cork, these fixtures would be a serious drawback to the school; and if the use of paraffin lamps be continued, we may some day bear of a terrible catastrophe, involving the loss of the school-house, and of the lives of some of the boys. But I represented the matter so earnestly to the head master that he promised me to have the gas kept lighting an hour later, and forbid the use of lamps. In answer to the natural query, how such a habit should ever have been allowed, I may say that it had grown up gradually among diligent senior boys, who wanted to study late, that the head master had never thought about it, and that he himself complained very fairly of the total want of periodical inspections under the Commissioners' authority, by which such matters as at once strike a stranger, should be noticed, and by which a country schoolmaster can obtain new lights and suggestions as to the conduct of his school. Nothing could be fairer and more candid than the way in which Mr. Moore received my criticisms.

It is obvious that the present income applicable to the school is quite insufficient, and I understand there is an endowment of £200 at Cloyne, which should be united by legislation with Midleton, reserving privileges for Cloyne boys at Midleton.

As regards the teaching, it appears to me that the work done by the head master is excellent and that the classes under his management were doing good work. But in the case of the other classes I did not think so. The assistants were either antiquated (though not very old) or very young. If the young assistant in classics remains, he will make a good master, but what all require is experience got by teaching, or what may be learned from a proper yearly inspection, and from this point of view the masters were much interested in listening to my examination. The success of Midleton boys in Trinity College shows that on the whole the education must be fairly good. But there seemed to me great want of school libraries, newspaper clubs, and of that general stir which is to be observed about other schools not better in actual learning.

It is to be observed that both the head master and one of his assistants take clerical duty—a practice not to be encouraged, and which may lead to abuse. The present head master does so, not for the sake of emolument, but to help the clerical work of the diocese. Still, this duty separates him from his boys on Sunday; it gives him labour on his only holiday in the week, and it seems to me that his duty to the school should override all other considerations. The assistant-master is at present, I believe, curate of Midleton, and has boys residing as boarders in his house. Such an arrangement may be advantageous in a poor school, provided always the master is appointed to be curate, not the curate appointed to be master. In the latter case the teaching may suffer seriously.

There is no doubt that Midleton school is an important foundation, and ought to fulfil the duty of giving the better middle classes in the county of Cork a good education. But it needs a considerable sum of money expended upon it, and also some increase of endowment. I suggest that this may be provided chiefly by the endowment at Cloyne, but also by persuading the Duke of Devonshire to apply his endowments of £40 and a house at Youghal to the providing of cheap and convenient trams for Youghal boys to Midleton. Some actually come at present. All the Youghal boys might be reached by this small outlay, and their school-fees would materially strengthen Midleton. Thus is, in fact, the general policy to be pursued all over Ireland. In the days of the old founders small local centres were necessary, and the few subjects taught could be compassed by one master. We must now, with the aid of railways, and to meet the varied requirements of modern education, pursue a different policy.

The method of election of the head master seems unsatisfactory, although a fortunate accident has secured the present head master. Such matters should not be left to the chance of an exchange, or to a local body, who may be ignorant of the true conditions of education.

CLOYNE.—(3 boarders, 26 day-boys).—There are three resident and two non-resident assistants. The position of this school, in a large town, and with a large number of good middle class residences in the neighbourhood, makes it peculiarly suitable for a good day school. There are, in fact, few places in the south of Ireland better situated, and hence the older history of the school shows it to have been very successful. As a boarding school, it is a failure. There are only nine at most now in residence, and the appointments are not adequate to the reception of any considerable number. There is no bathroom in the house, and water is only obtained by being pumped up, with a troublesome process. In the matter of playground the school is also badly supplied. I will not say that if all these things were remedied, a master of high qualifications would not attract boarders, but it ought to be a good and full day school under any but untoward circumstances.

I know nothing particular about the estate of the school, except that it seems sufficient with proper care to do all that is necessary for sustaining the buildings and staff.

As regards the teaching of the school, I was impressed with its want of soundness and efficiency. There was one clever boy of about sixteen who answered me well, but the rest of the twenty-six present were unskilled and slow in all their knowledge. Thus even in dictation, which the smaller boys could not attempt, ten out of seventeen made serious mistakes, and this in a tolerably easy passage. In Latin, in arithmetic, in geography, there were the same results. The elements of modern languages only were well taught by a very competent and intelligent foreign master. Indeed the other assistants seemed to me gentlemanly and sensible men, but their salaries were quite inadequate, and the foreign master was allowed to take out his £40 per annum by giving lessons in the town. It is not in this way that an efficient school can be kept up.

We have here the natural results of that sort of election which has accidentally turned out so well at Midleton. The electors are two absent lords, and I suppose a more unlikely Board to select a good schoolmaster could not easily be found. In the present case a rule has been followed the very opposite of that which prevails in England. There a schoolmaster retires upon a living; here a clergyman has retired from a living upon a school—not, probably, from any other motive than that of improving his income. It appeared to me from examining carefully the case he was himself teaching, that he could hardly have undertaken school work from a strong desire for this kind of life, or from any zeal or experience in teaching. According to his own very fair and candid statement, he took it as promotion, obtained by interest with the electors.

NAVAN.—(There is one assistant). The day I visited this school (April 10th) I found that the boys (10 day boys) had been granted a holiday on the score of the Meath election. But this was of the less importance, as the present master—the Rev. James Keene—had only just been appointed, and no examination of the ten little boys who had come to him would give any clue to his efficiency, or the general character of the school.

I examined the buildings with care, and found them very clean and in good repair. They consist of two dwelling-houses joined by a large school-room, so that rooms can be made use of as class-rooms which open on the school-room. There are no dormitories, the space over the large school-room being divided into bed rooms. In these about fifteen boys could be accommodated, but baths, lavatories, &c., would still be wanting. There was a great deal too much accommodation for the present size of the school. Of the two dwelling-houses, one is allotted to the head-master, and the other to the assistant, but has not lately been so occupied. It will be, however, soon applied to its purpose. The school furniture—maps, benches, &c.—was ample, and in very good condition. There is, however, no playground whatever for the boys, the adjacent field being formed by the head-master. Even with day-boys, some such outlet is desirable, if the master took boarders, it would become essential. The water-supply in Navan seems also bad, and the water obtained by pumping is of inferior quality. Drinking-water is obtained from a neighbouring chalybeate spring.

The appointment of the head-master and of his assistant is on a most unsatisfactory basis. I can speak the more freely, as the present head-master is a man of the highest collegiate distinctions, and experienced in teaching, so that no censures can possibly be considered to apply to him personally. I can also speak the more freely, because the assistant—a brother of the late head-master—is now in New Zealand, but has appointed a locum tenens, with the consent (I was informed) of the patron. But the present head-master is also rector of the parish of Navan; and though the parish contains only 400 Protestants, all in the vicinity (I am informed) of the town, the simultaneous holding of both offices is only compatible with a very small school, and the natural tendency must be to acquiesce in this condition of things. The curate of the parish is about to be appointed assistant-master, to occupy the second house and receive the salary of £50 a year; and thus the endowment of the school will practically be applied to the relief of the Church parishioners of Navan, or to improve the stipends of their clergy. This result is brought about, I presume, by the private influence of the bishop with the patron or his agent, and though fortunate in the present case, is surely liable to grave abuse. For here as elsewhere the school would come to be used as a pension for a disabled rector, and it would be worth while for an old man to discourage the school, and take out a quiet subsistence by merely holding the place.

As to the position of the school as a centre for education, it appears to me that the advantages outweigh the disadvantages. It is urged that the great majority of the population of Navan are Roman Catholics, who will not support the school; but, on the other hand, there is no other higher school for many miles round. Railways run into Navan from four directions, and the local gentry all keep houses and parties, on which the boys can come in from considerable distances. Thus an energetic school-master must command no small public, and that, too, of the better classes. But so long as he is either curate in sole charge (as the last master was), or rector, I do not think he will be able to make the school all that it should be. It is, of course, also necessary that he should have his assistant under his control.

But if it be true, on the contrary, that even the most efficient management cannot command more than ten boys, this would be a strong argument for obtaining power to transfer the endowment to the next town, Drogheda, and so strengthen a fuller and more populous centre. Perhaps the very suggestion of this would stimulate the surrounding people into active support, as most people do not value their privileges until they find themselves in danger of losing them. I have found this spirit strong in many places, when I ventured to make similar suggestions.

II.—ERASMUS SMITH'S SCHOOLS.

THE HIGH SCHOOL IN HARCOURT-STREET—(no boarders, 146 day boys when I saw it (November 25), now 170). There are five assistants, with a drawing and a French master. This school, founded not many years ago in Dublin, ought to supply a great want. Dublin, as compared with Belfast, is singularly ill supplied with large high schools. The recent appointment of a young head master with a high reputation has caused the school to increase rapidly, and if properly managed and inspected, it ought to stand first among the day schools of Ireland. But here as elsewhere, I found that the immediate patronage and supervision of the Governors, whose official meetings are actually held in the house, had not conferred the benefits that might have been expected. I was detained some time at the door, owing to the deafness of the porter, and thus having ample leisure to inspect the front of the house, found that the exceeding dirt of the windows made it pre-eminent, even among its shabbiest neighbours. I learned on inquiry that most of the window sashes are not movable, and that accordingly the cleaning of them is attended with danger to life, and never (I suppose) attempted unless some adventurous person can be induced to do it. It is surprising that the members of the Board are not offended by this aspect of squalor and decay. I found the playground a mass of mud which was carried on the boys' boots all through the stairs and school-rooms, thus making the inside of the house correspond with the outside. This mud, when turned into dust, injures the air of the rooms, which are in any case very deficient in ventilation. Many of the boys were untidy in dress, and sufficient attention was evidently not paid to these external matters.

I was only able to examine parts of this school, on account of its numbers. But a careful investigation of the senior classes showed me that the boys had been unsoundly taught, and made the grossest mistakes in ordinary grammatical forms. I also found the answering of junior classes in arithmetic, in history, and in modern geography decidedly bad. I found especially that the latter was taught from a very poor text-book without the use, or at least with inefficient use, of maps, so that many children who had learned off pages of facts from the book, were quite helpless when asked practical questions about maps. The higher mathematics seemed to be carefully and well taught, and the head master is working hard, and after original methods of his own, to implant an intelligent interest in English literature in his pupils. Nothing struck me more forcibly than the fact that owing to a wretched system of management, an exceedingly able and enthusiastic head master is unable to cope with the defects enumerated, and that he is wholly free from any blame as regards either the permanent repairs of the house, or the intellectual condition of the pupils. The Governors give him no control in appointing or discharging his assistants or even his pupils. Thus if they are respectable and diligent, but incompetent, as this last defect can hardly be proved before a Board, and no man will risk the attempt, they are practically irremovable. Moreover, the number of them was quite inadequate. Most of the classes I saw consisted of thirty or forty boys, and if some of the Governors choose to inspect the school, and cannot see this crying defect at first sight, there seems little use in their personal supervision. Indeed it seems hardly reasonable to promise the head master a capitation fee on each boy over 150, and yet give him a staff hardly sufficient for eighty boys. The fact is that the Board is too large to exercise proper control. A small sub-committee, say of three practical educators, accustomed to the new ideas concerning ventilation, and particular about cleanliness or order, would soon operate a vast change. But all this will be of little use, if the head master is not given the complete control of his staff. He will then surround himself with men of like sympathies, and of modern ideas; and any failure may then fairly be laid to his charge.

There is perhaps less reason for the Governors to provide a library in this school, than in those situate in the country, and containing boarders. But still if we consider how many of the boys come from modest homes, where there is little literary cultivation and little reading, a proper lending library might be of real and permanent advantage. The free boys are elected by the Governors without examination, are not submitted to any sufficient periodical test, and are not under the complete control of the Head Master, hence there is a tendency in them to think lightly of their privileges, and these boys were reported to me as among the worst and most troublesome in the school. This serious evil could easily be remedied by making them submit to a qualifying examination every half-year.

It is but fair to add that since my visit, some attempts have been made to improve matters in the school. The play-ground has been drained and levelled, and I hear that an estimate is being obtained with a view of making the window sashes movable, and so clearing them occasionally without danger to life. If the constitution of the school were changed from the cumbersome one under a Board to that of a despotism tempered by dismissal, very important results might be attained.

ENNA.—(39 boarders, (3 R.C.) 18 day boys, (1 R.C.) There are 3 scholars and 2 pupil assistants. I found this school in a surprisingly good state considering its antecedents. The last master left under such circumstances as must necessarily have brought the school to a low ebb. Since the new master has come, one boy's life has been lost by an accident, and another by sickness. But he was so popular in his former place (Dundalk) that he brought all his boarders with him, and that he has since obtained others from distant parts of Ireland. He also labours under disadvantages of situation and of appointments, which are difficult to overcome. Hence his success so far is somewhat remarkable, and only attributable to his peculiar fitness for his duties.

The buildings are large and straggling—indeed, too large for the requirements of the place, and requiring new plaster over the whole outside surface. A considerable outlay appears to have been made within the last few years in building useless and disfiguring walls, and in adding unnecessary class-rooms, whereas additional bath-rooms are really needed; and, still more, the levelling of the playground, which though ample in size, is so rocky and irregular as to be useless for games. The present head master feels this to be an urgent difficulty, and when I pointed out to him that it could best be removed by turning his garden (which is level) into playground, and taking in some of the playground for a new garden, he declared himself quite willing to submit to this great temporary inconvenience. If the money laid out of late years by Erasmus Smith's Board had been laid out with reasonable judgment all this might have been done long since. Two enormous ball-alloys have been built, whereas one was sufficient, and if divided into proper five-courts, would have served its purpose far better than the present extravagant erections. A yard immediately outside the school-rooms, surrounded on three sides by house walls, could have been covered in and lighted from the top, so as to form an excellent gymnasium at small cost, yet this was never thought of.

The present keeping of the buildings seemed to me fairly good. The supply of water is difficult, and must be pumped up to a great height; nevertheless, the inside latrines were well kept, the dormitories clean and airy, and, when I inspected them in the night, were fairly ventilated—indeed, one of them perfectly so. The outside latrine was in very bad order, and ought to be kept in quite a different way, with some flow of water through it. The boys' diet was comfortable, and they seemed cheery, and talked freely at their meals. Indeed, they were all genial and ready to talk, from which we may infer that they were happy and kindly treated. If Enna be an out-of-the-way place, it can at least boast of very pure and exhilarating air, and great healthfulness of climate.

A very brief examination showed me that in science the boys were admirably taught. The head master is himself a distinguished science scholar, and devotes his whole time to this side of the school, accordingly the smallest boys could answer readily in mental arithmetic, and the elder understood Euclid very thoroughly. The most advanced I did not examine. The little boys also answered me well in spelling, not so well in easy geographical questions. The answering in French and German was fair, but none of them had yet got a good hold of these languages. I also examined the upper classes in Latin and Greek, and found them fairly prepared, though only one of them showed any high faculty for classics. But, on the average, they were not behind the boys of the other schools. There is hardly any teaching as yet in natural science, but, no doubt, the Intermediate Examinations will presently produce here, as elsewhere, such cramming in it as will obtain a certain amount of marks in that competition.

The modern languages are taught by a cultivated German gentleman, who only knows enough English to give his lessons; and this class of teacher I have always found the most efficient for the purpose.

In addition to the levelling of the playground, there is urgent need of a school library and a reading-room for the boys. One of the class-rooms should be fitted up with proper shelves, and the Board should make an annual grant towards this object. It would be easy to persuade the older boys to add something by way of parting gifts when they are leaving the school. This plan has been followed with great success at Marlborough and other schools in England.

A detached infirmary would also be desirable.

TIPPERARY—(48 boarders, 28 day boys, [17 R.C.], 5 assistants).—My visit happened only two days after the boys had returned from home (January 29 and 30, 1879), and thus I found them in lower spirits than they might otherwise have been, and also not so fresh in their knowledge. The school is, on the whole, flourishing, when it is remembered that up to two years ago there were constant and severe epidemics, probably owing to the position of the school grounds below the ancient town of Tipperary. By careful revision of the drainage the evil seems now perfectly removed. Marlborough College has had a very similar sanitary history. The buildings, however, did not seem to me attractive, and the infirmary was too small, too near the main building, and had no proper convalescent room.

The playgrounds are good, but there is no gymnasium. There is one bath-room, in which the boys get baths in rotation; the water supply, being obtained from a deep pump in the yard, is not very facile, though it may be sufficient. The inside was seemed to me insufficient. The dormitories are arranged on the cubicle system, which is approved of by the master on account of its privacy, especially for the boys' prayers. But there are other things promoted by privacy besides prayers, and in England, where morality is not so good, and the boys not so innocent as they are in Ireland, the cubicle system is out of favour, and in some schools, such as Winchester College, will not even be tolerated. I fancy cubicles are also stuffy at night, but in the way of neatness and comfort they are very attractive, and are to be found in many of the best and newest dormitories.

No doubt the discipline of the school is very good, perhaps too strict, for the boys did not talk freely at meals. There is a great want of a school library, though the boys, by private subscription, have collected a few books. The religious teaching in this school is peculiarly careful and complete, but I do not mention this as if it were at all neglected by any of the rest. The diet was good, and the whole tone of the school gentlemanly.

On examining them I did not find the answering very good. Out of 48 dictations set by me of varying difficulty, according to the advancement of the boys, 26 were bad, and only 12 were without mistakes. Some boys answered me very well in Euclid, and some fairly in French and German, but others were very slow in arithmetic, and the Greek and Latin was not above a moderate average, though I got some excellent replies in Greek and Roman history. There is nothing done in the way of teaching natural science. The boarders are mostly the sons of people residing in the country through the south of Ireland; there are very few gentry in the neighbourhood, and the town being a garrison station, and not a busy place, is, on the whole, not very desirable for a boarding school. The neighbouring Galtees, however, afford fine walks for the boys, and even some fishing in the streams which run through their glens.

GALWAY SCHOOL—(28 boarders [9 Protestant Dissenters], 40 day boys [7 R.C.], 54 actually present, 4 assistants).—This school is situated in a place eminently unsuited for a boarding school, but for the same reason eminently requiring a good day school, or any other culture which can be promoted there. No advantage is offered by Galway except good sea bathing. The town is full of decay and pauperism. Idle boys trespass on the school grounds, and molest the school, because it is respectable. It does not command, by means of railways, a populous or thriving country. Nevertheless, the conditions of Erasmus Smith's property, which compel the Governors to keep a school there, are not to be regretted. Nowhere have I seen day boys of so respectable a class; even some of the free boys were particularly remarkable for their gentlemanly appearance and manners. The neighbouring gentry are among the few Roman Catholic gentry in Ireland, and are less likely than the lower classes to be prevented by their priesthood from taking advantage of a secular education. I found the school buildings commodious, though unfortunately in the suburbs of the town, and surrounded by wretched cabins. They were not in perfect repair, but I was told that whitewashing and other improvements by the Governors were impending. Meanwhile neither were the school-room floors nor the boys' well kept, and both wanted brushing and cleaning. A small close yard inside the house was in a very bad condition—in fact the air of Galway seemed to have exercised an unconscious influence on the keeping of the school. For, otherwise, the head master is a very able and thoughtful man, full of new ideas, and exceedingly attentive to his school. He is stricter about sending reports, and these even weekly, than other Irish schoolmasters—a very important point on which most of the schools are deficient. His discipline is also strict, and he has devised the excellent punishment for idleness, of making the offender get up an hour earlier next day to prepare his work. Games and sports are carefully encouraged. In examining the boys, I found their Latin and Greek on the whole good, and their mathematics very good—as might be expected from the head master's antecedents—but their English, both writing and spelling, as shown in dictation, was deficient, and their French indifferent. There were weekly lectures in natural science; and a small library merely of boys' books of amusement. This might be improved. I consider the staff of masters at this school peculiarly good in this respect, that they are all experienced teachers who have made this their profession, and are not hurrying or hoping to attain some other way of living.

DROGHEDA GRAMMAR SCHOOL—(25 boarders [7 Dissenters], 18 day boys [5 R.C.], 3 assistants).—Is now a small school, owing to the deficiencies of the former management, but is rising steadily in numbers under the present master. The buildings are very commodious—indeed, the school-room, with its adjoining class-rooms, is a model of what such a building ought to be. There is an immense hall alley in perfect condition, which would make two good and useful fires courts, also an excellent gymnasium, and the boys' sleeping rooms—separate bedrooms, containing six to eight beds each, are clean and well aired. The master's residence is also a fine mansion, with a great deal of valuable oak panelling—partly, also, covered with paint. Water being supplied by high pressure, the lavatories and latines are clean and well provided. But the situation of the school in a street of Douglas makes it impossible to obtain a proper play-ground, so that the Governors are obliged to rent a field for cricket at some distance. I did not visit this, and cannot, therefore, report upon its fitness for the purpose. But it should always be remembered that most fields are quite useless for modern games, and that without proper levelling and sodding, a play ground, however extensive, is of no avail. I examined the boys in the principal subjects, and found them on the whole fair in their answering. But in some points improvement is desirable. A senior class wrote almost uniformly bad dissertation exercises, and a junior class were almost all puzzled by an ordinary sum in interest, though they were familiar with the rule. Yet, both in languages and in science, one or two of them showed remarkable talent. A chemical laboratory has just been started, and attention is paid to the teaching of natural science. But most of the boys are very young, and the present master has not been here long enough to give his teaching a fair trial.

A large outlay on the school buildings was, as usual, made without much judgment; a distant and detached building was erected for a laundry, with empty rooms on the upper floor, whereas the infirmary is in connexion with the boys' house, and not even isolated by doors. If an epidemic ever breaks out, these buildings must have their uses interchanged, and people will wonder what suggested to the Board the present arrangement. By way of completing the absurdity, the recovery room in the present infirmary faces north—an architectural vice not uncommon in Irish schools.

III.—THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S SCHOOLS.

The Incorporated Society's Schools are scattered all over Ireland, but are managed on so regular a system, that the education in any one of them is a fair index to the rest. I visited carefully the more important of them, the Peacock Institution near Kilkenny, the Dundalk Institute in co. Louth, the Ranelagh Institute at Athlone, and Primrose Grove, within a few miles of Sligo, the last-named smaller than the rest, but the most beautifully and healthfully situated school in Ireland. I did not examine the boys in these schools, for it appeared that the best of them were all sent up to the head school at Santry and so afforded an opportunity of testing their knowledge there. But the system of these schools hardly brought them within the scope of my inquiry, for the only compulsory subjects seem to be Scripture and Mathematics, and in the latter there can be no doubt, judging from results, that the teaching is thoroughly efficient. With the exception of the highest classes at the Belfast Academical Institute I found no boys so advanced in their studies, and the atmosphere of all the schools was essentially an atmosphere of work. No idling was tolerated, nor had the masters any trouble in enforcing either discipline or attention in their pupils. In comparing the several schools I found that the master of the Ranelagh Institute was the most enterprising, as he had lately engaged both a classical master, and a native Frenchman, in the expectation of being paid by an increase of boarders. The fees required from boarders (£30 per annum, with a few extras) are so low, that luxuries cannot be expected in return. But surely the Inspectors of the Incorporated Society should see that a better supply of water and means of bathing are provided in the schools. They should also direct that the immense and very ill-repaired bell-alloys should be subdivided into proper fires-courts, and kept properly flagged and cemented. The danger in all their schools is that the boys will overwork themselves, and therefore games and recreations should be made as attractive as possible; the masters should also insist upon the playing of games, and on proper exercise. Though the Society has lately made some small grants for books, I found the library arrangements in all of them very deficient, in fact libraries could hardly be said to exist. A small annual grant spent in buying well-bound standard books at sections, and the appointment in each school of a deserving boy as librarian, with a trifling emolument, would raise the tone of the schools, and perhaps indicate to the pupils that there exist useful and interesting works outside their fixed courses. I also think that the school-rooms should be better whitewashed, and the floors kept cleaner.

All these defects exist, perhaps, more obviously in Santry school, which is under the immediate supervision of the Society, than in the rest. The buildings are here partly older, and partly more out of repair than in the other schools. Plastering and decorating are urgently required to make the place look comfortable or attractive. The school-rooms were unswept. There are no bath-rooms, nor has the river which runs beside the house been utilized for a plunge-bath. There is not even a lavatory upstairs, so that when the boys get up, they are obliged to come down to a distant room on the ground floor, which is quite insufficient for their wants nor can they come there without partially dressing; indeed I suppose they dress first and wash afterwards. Moreover, the principal school-room is under the principal dormitory and is ventilated into it, there being apertures through the ceiling of the one into the floor of the other. For these defects the Society is clearly to blame, as a head-master cannot be expected to spend his time in constant complaints or appeals for improvements. But what may be fairly charged against the management of the house was this, that I found the boys' dinner, which professedly consisted of hot stewed beef, oat and served out on the several plates at 1 o'clock, with a second plate laid over each under pretence of keeping it warm. At 1 o'clock it was barely lukewarm, when the boys came to dinner at 2.15, it must have been extremely unwholesome and unpalatable. I do not think that the fact of these boys, being poor and economically kept is the smallest excuse for such miserable fare.

I examined some classes carefully in Latin and Greek, in Geography and History, and looked over some dissertations. The classical answering was not good; the boys though not young had either begun the languages lately, or had made little progress. One boy who had qualified in Latin at the Intermediate Examination last year seemed to know very little. In Geography and Modern History the answering of some of the boys was very good, and they showed clearly that many of them had been selected by a careful competition.

General Remarks on the Incorporated Society's Schools.—There appear to be no other higher schools in Ireland which have had the benefit of constant and careful inspection, and hence there have been no grave abuses allowed to grow up, the masters seem very competent men, and there is good economy practised in the management of all the details. But there might be room for improvement in the following respects.—In the first place, there is a great deficiency in classical teaching through all the schools, a deficiency not arising from neglect, but from the original conception having failed to satisfy the clever and ambitious youths trained under the old system. The schools only profess to teach Mathematics, English, and Scripture, whereas of late years all the most brilliant of the pupils seek scholarships and other honours in the University of Dublin, and thus require the "humanities" to a larger degree. The Mathematical teaching is no doubt the best in Ireland, but so far as we may judge, from the many instances before us in Trinity College, the most careful teaching in English, without Classics, fails to produce good English scholars, and I have known more than one first-rate Sonty pupil suffer miserably from a vicious English style, if not from more serious defects. This is a most remarkable practical instance of the old theory which is now reviving, that the teaching of English in the modern fashion is of little value, and that the old method of teaching Latin grammar, and allowing English to take care of itself, is really sounder and more practical. If a boy in the Incorporated Society schools has classical tastes, he is obliged to prosecute them outside the usual school hours, he requires no classics for his school competitions, and he often begins his Latin and Greek at an age far too advanced for the easy and thorough acquisition of languages. If the elements of Latin were allowed to replace the inordinate amount of Scripture insisted upon at the entrance examination for foundations, and if some allowance was made to the masters for classical teaching, these excellent schools would become far more efficient.

Secondly, as the fees obtained from boarders are so low, and hence the profits of the schools so small, the Board should supply for cricket-grounds, gymnasies, &c. the funds which in richer schools may be supplied from the profits, or even by subscription among the boys themselves. An allowance of £10 per annum to each school under this head would be well spent, and would conduce greatly to a cheerful and happy life among the boys; and this seems to me not well attained by the present system. Lastly, the inspection by the Society should extend to the question of baths, lavatories, and general cleanliness.

IV.—THE STILL REMAINING DIOCESAN SCHOOLS

The Diocesan School at Sligo (2 boarders, 25 day-boys, 2 assistants).—This school is in a most unsatisfactory condition, owing to the curious forgetfulness of education manifested in the general scramble for compensations under the Irish Church Act. The diocesan school-masters were all very justly compensated, but no attempt was made to preserve for the diocesan the grammar schools which had given the principal higher education in many parts of Ireland. Thus when the present head-master of Sligo school dies, the school must collapse, if not reconstructed by the people of Sligo; and even now the school is conducted principally by a deputy-master, who is indeed an able and competent man, but who has no material interest in the school. The head-master induces boarders, as it is not convenient for him to have them, and his health compels him frequently to absent himself. It is evident that the inhabitants of Sligo, which is well provided, by model and national schools, with primary education, should combine to found a proper grammar school, and the Board of Erasmus Smith, which owns property in the neighbourhood, should be one of the principal subscribers.

The Diocesan School at Tralee (19 boarders, 1 day-boy, 9 resident and 1 visiting assistant).—Is in a better condition than that at Sligo, not by having better teaching, but through the fact that the head-master and his wife are attached to it, and spend all their life and energy in keeping it up. Yet it is not a desirable place for a boarding-school, and there is little doubt that the school will disappear, at least as a boarding-school, when the present master, who has compounded for his salary, resigns or leaves. I found the boys very carefully and kindly kept, and the contents of the school well attended to; but I was not impressed with the teaching or answering in the various classes. The school is at present decaying, the present master having been twenty-two years at work, and the rise of the Erasmus Smith's school at Galway, which is less out of the way than Tralee, has, no doubt, affected its prosperity.

The town of Tralee ought to support a good Grammar day school, but as the great majority of the people are Roman Catholics, it cannot prosper under the religious management of a Church of Ireland clergyman, who thinks it his duty to instruct in his own religion. I think in a rearrangement of endowments, Tralee might have a fair claim to have a perfectly unsectarian Grammar school established, or if a really competent Roman Catholic layman could be found, it might be well to appoint him as head-master, though nothing can be more vicious than the appointment of masters because of their religion.

Ballymena.—I visited this school, which is the remains of a Diocesan school, at an unfortunate time, for it has lately undergone an amalgamation with another (intermediate) school in the town—an experiment which has not yet had sufficient trial, and, moreover, there had lately been such serious sickness in the master's family and throughout the town, that many of the boys had scattered, and were not yet re-assembled. It is, however, a great pity that in entering upon a new scheme a young master was not appointed, for the very worthy and learned clergymen who still occupies the post must now be getting weary of his work, and anxious for repose. I examined the children present in the elements of Latin and of arithmetic, as well as in modern history and geography, but they were mostly new scholars, and had as yet made small advance. The difficulties in the school management in this place arise from the jealousy, not of Roman Catholic and Protestant, but of Church people and Protestant Dissenters. The latter, especially the Presbyterians, are the majority, but the Church people socially the superior, and so there was much difficulty in finding a governing board to satisfy both parties. This seems to have been done, as all sides had much confidence in the learning and fairness of the present master of the diocesan school, and the master of the rival school had lately died. Perhaps the most remarkable feature in this school, and one of great importance to the Commissioners when considering the question of endowment, is that the inhabitants of Ballymena—a town of moderate size—subscribed £530 per annum to its support, when they became convinced that it was necessary for the proper education of their children. Instead of begging for endowments, and pretending a desire for education as a means of obtaining them, these people showed that where education is really wanted, means are easily forthcoming; and there is little doubt that in a few years Ballymena will become, like Coleraine and Lurgan, the focus of a very good and well-attended day-school, though it is not likely to attract many boarders. The old diocesan school-house is, however, not well fitted for its purpose. The dormitory accommodation is probably sufficient, but in due time more schoolrooms and class-rooms will be required.

V.—THE OLDEN PRIVATE ENDOWMENTS.

Kilkenney College, a fine building, with a good endowment, and with most respectable traditions, is in a melancholy state. The house and grounds are there to testify that there was once a flourishing school, but various untoward circumstances have reduced the boarders to three, and the day-boys to four. The present master is too old, and otherwise unfit to raise a school. The Provost and Bishop of Cewsey, as visitors, have lately ordered an inquiry into the school, and are actively considering the best means for improving it. The appointment of a good and young head-master, with some connections, would probably raise it again to a condition of usefulness.

The Grammar School at Elphin is endowed with a considerable income from Bishop Hodson's bequest, and as there are no religious directions whatever in the will, but strict injunctions that the school is to give free instruction to the poor of Elphin, it might have been made a most useful establishment but for the resistance of the Catholic priesthood, who prevent their people from enjoying its benefits, and have even set up a rival school.

If the will does not permit its removal, it seems a pity that the dean and chapter, who are the trustees, should not at least appoint a layman (if not a Catholic) master, and encourage the Catholic authorities to join in the management of the school. As it now stands, there are only a very few Protestant children there, but the present dean has done a great deal towards making it a resource for the poor Protestants of the district. Indeed he thinks that by establishing a cheap boarding house in the adjoining girls' school, which is now available, for want of pupils, the school might benefit all the poorer Protestants through the country parts of the diocese. This is an ingenious and well thought out plan for utilizing the school, under the terms of the will, but for Protestants only; with the Protestant curate acting as master, it is not likely that the Catholic children of the town will ever be induced to attend. Half the proceeds of the estate are bequeathed for "beautifying the Cathedral," a parish church attended by about forty people. Here, if anywhere, the waste of some £150 per annum should be stopped by legislation, and the whole, or almost the whole, estate applied to the school.

The claim made lately by the people of Sligo to have the school transferred to them, is not only at variance with the directions of the founder, but a very melancholy instance of the begging turn of the western Irish. If Sligo were a northern town, the condition of the schools there would long ago have been settled by a body of governors, and by private subscriptions. A place so large and so important has no claim whatever for extraneous aid in education, which the people could easily provide for themselves if they really valued it.

The school is chiefly primary, and of the 17 boys on the roll only two were reading classics, &c., in a special class, for the Intermediate Examinations.

Currickmacross—This school affords one of the most signal cases of an endowment which has lost its usefulness. The house was given, and endowed with £70 per annum, by the Earl of Weymouth, and afterwards the Marquis of Bath. So long as railroads did not exist, and many of the lower gentry were still scattered through the counties, and so long as the Roman Catholics did not object to sending their children as day-boys to a Protestant school, this endowment was very useful. Dormitories were added by various masters, there were at times twenty-five boarders, and a good many day-scholars, and the school was of good repute. Now all these things are changed. No parent is likely to choose this school, in an out-of-the-way country town, as a boarding-school for his boys. The Roman Catholics will not use it. The Marquis of Bath will not keep a large empty house in repair. The result is that the present master, an elderly man appointed in 1807, lives as a sort of pensioner on the endowment, and in a small part of the house, of which the rest is falling rapidly into decay and ruin. He still teaches ten little boys, who have lately come to him, with some hope of intermediate prizes, but his zeal and interest in the school are gone, nor is it likely ever to revive. If the endowment be not handed over to the Roman Catholic schools in the town, it should be applied in some other way for the benefit of Lord Bath's tenants in other and more efficient schools. A certain number might be sent as boarders to the Dundalk Grammar School, and thus this latter school would be strengthened, while the scandal of an endowed ruin and its pensioned occupant would be spared to the town of Currickmacross.

Lismore, Ballymena, Foughal, and Bandon schools are founded upon the small, old-fashioned endowments of a house and £40 per annum, which were very useful when locomotion was difficult, and many local centres were necessary, also when a single master was sufficient to teach the small number of subjects comprised in our school education. I found at Foughal that a new master had just been appointed, but being in bad health the school was not to meet for some days. He had not more than eight pupils. At Bandon the master was dead, and the school closed, since that time a new master had been appointed, but hitherto this school also has been very small and of little importance. It is, nevertheless, the most important school entire on the peeron's (Duke of Devonshire) estate, as there are many Protestant tenants living on his land round this town. But neither in Foughal or Lismore can there ever be many Protestant day-boys, nor is there any reason why they should be selected as boarding-schools.

In the case of Foughal the obvious suggestion for the better use of the endowment is to apply it to paying the railway fares of boys to reach Millston, where they will get better teaching than they can ever expect in Foughal, with its poor house and small endowment. Bandon may possibly, under its new master, rise to the condition of a useful day school, with some boarders.

Lismore I inspected in its working order and found 20 boarders and 4 day-boys, 2 assistants, 1 non-resident. I found the assistants men of good qualifications, and the building, though not suited for a very large school, commodious and well ventilated. There is a good play-ground, and a large asphalted ball-court which serves as a racket-court, but is kept locked to prevent the boys playing in it without proper shoes, so that it is not very useful. The town is beautifully situated, and of so small a size as to afford no temptations to boys. But the teaching seemed rather for special competitors, than regular schooling. It struck me here very sorely as elsewhere, that the boys, even when not overworked, were addled with a quantity of subjects. Some of them answered well in science; but in languages, both ancient and modern, there was little accurate knowledge. Occasional good answers in all the subjects, rather surprise an examiner, but they are another proof of what I have observed. The boys are taught a great many valuable truths, they have not assimilated them, and only answer by accident. I have found this mental condition all over the country.

Dread St. Endowed School—(8 boarders, 23 day-boys on roll, 22 in all present)—is one of those small foundations which is of little service, and might profitably be abolished. The patron merely pays his £40 per annum, and cares no more for the school. The house is not commodious, or well situated; yet under the late master, who is now removed to Knaish, it was prosperous, and when the present master, who is but lately appointed, begins to make way, it may again become a useful day-school, at all events. It has been remarkable of late years in producing several very eminent scholars. I examined the children, and found them fairly taught, but do not think that the present master is here long enough to make him responsible for any defects.

The Tailors' Hall school, Dublin—(26 day boys present)—has been removed to a building, lent by the merchants on the quay, at the Metal bridge. This building, otherwise suitable, is very dirty and in bad repair, the latrines being exceedingly disgusting. The children are taught free, and elected at a monthly Board. This requires modification, for there are now funds only for a single master. Though he is an exceedingly competent man, and teaches all the subjects in a manner surprising to me, this curious relic of the ancient fashion is an anachronism. If the children paid but a small fee it would help to improve the school, and if the numbers rose accordingly, would pay a second master. This advantage would be far greater than that of admitting boys free. It would save a great deal of the boys' time, which is now lost by the master in going from class to class, and striving to do what seems high impossible—to teach 28 little boys in five or six subjects. Nevertheless, it is well done even under these difficulties.

VI.—THE NEWER PRIVATE ENDOWMENTS.

FOYLE COLLEGE—(52 boarders, 52 day boys, 7 assistants)—may fairly rank beside the Royal schools, on account of its important situation, its high character, and the good endowment granted to it by the "Irish Society." There is no school in Ireland, except Enniskillen, so well endowed, but then the Governors only grant the master's stipend quarterly, and refuse to call it an endowment. If they have of late been liberal in this respect they have not been so as regards the accommodation for the boys, which is here very inferior to that of any of the larger Royal schools. As the house is situated (picturesquely enough) on the side of a steep hill, the playground is quite useless for games, and the boys are obliged to tent (for £25 per annum) a cricket ground at a considerable distance. There is no gymnasium, but a wretched shed stands suggesting its absence. Though the master is anxious to teach natural science, which might be very useful to boys preparing for mercantile pursuits in Derry, there is no laboratory. The condition of the latrines, both inside and outside, is very bad, those in the bath-room being particularly objectionable. This is the more inexcusable as the town (and school) is supplied with water at high pressure, and the draining of the playground rising behind the house would afford water for the filling of large tanks, both for lavatories, and to help in case of fire. More classrooms are much wanted, and altogether the school seems not to have profited as it ought by the patronage of a rich and liberal corporation. The outlay recently made appeared to me almost pure waste, and it were much to be desired, that when the members of the Irish Society visit Derry, they should themselves inspect the school, and obtain from some competent adviser his suggestions on the spot, otherwise their money will be (as it has been) squandered, and their school buildings will remain, as they now are, a discredit to them. But in any case there is required a considerable outlay in permanent improvements. Some of the Governors ought to visit any good English school and then compare its appointments with what they now control and tolerate in Derry. We should expect a wealthy English corporation to show an example to the less enlightened and less endowed Irish Boards, and yet there are unendowed schools in Ireland which now put them to shame. There is a good hall-alley, of the Irish kind, and a separate house, conveniently situated, for an infirmary.

As regards the actual management of the house it seemed fairly comfortable. The dormitories were well ventilated, but the floors wanted sweeping under the beds exceedingly, the diet seemed fairly good, and the boys cheerful and happy. The peculiar theories of the present head master as to discipline are well known from his writings. He has abolished all corporal punishment, and relies by moral suasion. By making himself the companion and friend of his boys, he has succeeded perfectly in making them docile and manageable, and they struck me as peculiarly open and friendly in their manners. But I have doubts whether their intellectual development is equally successful. There is in many boys an ingrained idleness, which is not (like more serious vices) to be overcome by moral suasion, and perhaps the answering to me might have been better if more tangible advice had been sometimes administered. With a diligent boy such incitements have of course no place. Except in French I did not find any good answering. The knowledge of classical forms was not accurate, and the answering in science slow and unsteady. But still it is not wise to infer that the teaching was inadequate. I attribute it partly to the fact that I did not chance, out of so many, to pick out the best boys, partly to the kindly and not very diligent atmosphere of the school. The head master has himself paid special attention to Latin grammar, on which he has published an important work, but he finds it difficult to make his assistants adopt his ideas, or rival his energy, and thus the teaching is perhaps not uniform in quality.

ST. COLUMBA'S COLLEGE—(73 boarders, 7 day boys).—The history and traditions of this school make it unique in Ireland. It was founded avowedly on the plan of an English public school, and intended to be a model in Ireland of the system which has been one of the most active and splendid causes of higher English culture. It is not too much to say that what distinguishes the Englishmen all over the world above men of equal breeding and fortune in other nations is the training of those peculiar commonwealths, in which boys form a sort of constitution and govern themselves under the direction of a higher authority. So far as this sort of school can be carried out on a small scale, it is done at St. Columba's. The endowment consists of the buildings, with a considerable library, handsome furniture, and very spacious grounds (under a rent of £100) in a beautiful situation. Moreover, so important are the 'old boys,' and so fond are they of the college, that additional subscriptions are easily obtained for new buildings, and in this way a handsome stone chapel is now being built instead of the older wooden one. The chapel, with its service twice a day, is very imposing, and distinguishes the school from the rest in Ireland, the boys attend in gowns or surplices, and the music is well performed by them. It, nevertheless, appeared to me that even the shortened services, which are performed twice a day, though very attractive to a stranger, are burdensome to little boys, and not the best way of fostering a love of true religion.

The dormitories and school-rooms are well ventilated and spacious, and very well kept, the cubicle system being here in fashion. The only room actually untidy was the boys' library, which looked uncomfortable and little used. There is an excellent racket-court, and also two Eton five-courts, both almost useless in an Irish school; but strongly enough, the present boys have but little taste for these games, and the courts looked deserted. This is surely a serious sign in a school. It did not seem to me natural that boys should prefer walking about the country to playing good games. Cricket however flourishes, and was to some extent engrossing the boys at the date of my visit. There is an excellent swimming bath within the grounds, and plenty of water at high pressure from the mountain; in fact, nothing is wanting for the boys' comfort but a gymnasium and a workshop, and probably these would not be attractive to the boys who will not play rackets or five.

The education is conducted by the Warden and his assistants in this peculiar way, that each tutor or assistant teaches all the subjects in turn, taking the head class in his own speciality, and the whole school is kept working at the same subjects simultaneously. The tutor also takes great part in the discipline of the boys, and in the supervision of the dormitories, they are all English public school men by education, and their position is made so secure and attractive by the warden that he succeeds in obtaining men of good standing and manners, such as are found in good English schools. They also have a direct interest in the success of the school, one quarter of their income fluctuating with the number of the boys.

From the brief examination made it did not appear to me that this system of having every master teaching everything worked well in science. I found the boys' answering singularly uneven, and the little boys seemed better for their age than most of the older ones. In classics the education is, no doubt, more ambitious than in other Irish schools. Credit is given for essays and for English verse translations, as well as for compositions in Greek and Latin, and this ought to produce better scholars. There are also many special prizes for extraneous subjects, such as Divinity and Irish antiquities. But still I did not meet with any remarkable answering. Probably this English school classical training, which strikes one so at Winchester or Marlborough, requires rather preparatory teaching, and a longer period of higher schooling, than Irish parents can afford to give their children, and without these conditions it rather produces showy than sound results. It is also singularly inconsistent in the Warden, who professes not to care for distinctions in the University of Dublin, owing to its implied inferiority to English Universities, that he should throw himself so eagerly into the lowest and poorest of all public competitions, the Intermediate Examinations.

Nevertheless, taking the whole aspect of the school, its fine situation, and the favour with which it was long regarded by many Irish noblemen and gentlemen, we may wonder that it does not hold a more commanding position. For it is not now more expensive than the Royal schools, and has many advantages which they have not. The dormitories are indeed practically full, under the active and stirring management of the present warden, but they ought to be far larger, and contain twice the number of boys.

I attribute this comparative failure to the harsh system of punishments adopted by the warden, and still more to the theory which underlies them, as appeared in his evidence before the Commission. He considers Irish boys given to lying and immorality, he thinks their home training exceedingly defective in these respects, and that in consequence very strict discipline is required to correct it. He considers that flogging is absolutely necessary, nay even public flogging, and this (as he told me) for the purpose of degrading before his fellows a boy guilty of any self-degrading fault—as if punishment were not intended to correct and improve, but to stereotype a fallen nature! I feel assured that all reasonable parents, if they realized this system in its details, would at once revolt against it, and though I differ widely from most of the educational theories now fashionable, I am firmly convinced that in this point the milder spirit of the age has corrected a grave abuse, and is fully justified in its repugnance to the barbarities practised at the public schools in older days, and still surviving in some of them from the force of tradition. But the aping of this mediæval savagery by modern schools should not be tolerated for an instant. In the case of timid and sensitive boys such a system of punishment must rather encourage lying than cure it, and nothing is more certain to lead to cases of gross injustice than a belief that the majority of boys are given to fraud and profligacy. As a matter of history, the Warden appears to have been less successful in eradicating grave school vices than other schoolmasters. Whether it be the case that under a milder discipline these vices are merely ignored, and allowed to spread themselves unchecked in Irish schools, was a matter of argument between us. From my review of the Irish schools I do not think them morally low. They are rather wanting in public spirit, in the spirit which develops into the political instinct of the Englishman as contrasted with the particularism of the Irishman.

THE METHODIST COLLEGE, BELFAST (40 boarders, 20 theological students, 150 day boys, 30 girls, and ladies' classes, 17 assistants) is a very fine establishment, so far in connexion with the Queen's College in Belfast, that it does the duty of a collegiate residence for Methodist theological students attending the arts course, and hence it must be regarded as a school and college combined. The constitution is remarkable in having a president separate from the head master, not controlling the teaching, but controlling all appointments of assistant masters along with the head master. The theological teaching is under the president's care, and so is the moral side of the college, apart from the question of punishment for idleness at lessons.

The buildings are very spacious, and recently built, in a very handsome site opposite the Queen's College; but like those of other schools in Belfast, they are very deficient in cleanliness. There were pieces of paper scattered about and trampled down all about the grounds. These pieces of paper had been used by the day boys to wrap up their luncheons, and were then thrown at random over the ground. A poster was employed periodically (I was told) to pick them up; such a piece of untidiness should not be permitted for an instant. The inside of the building was also wanting in neatness, and the latrines were in a bad condition. I saw the dinner of the boarders just ready for the table, and was struck with the insufficiency of vegetables. The dormitories were well ventilated, there is a good swimming bath and gymnasium. The infirmary is rather too close to the house, and the recovery-room has a gloomy aspect.

Owing to its character as a college, this school has a good laboratory and set of instruments provided, and there are special classes in natural sciences. Most of the boys, when I visited the school, were under examination in mathematics, and I was struck with the advanced papers which they were able fairly to attempt. The science teaching is no doubt good, and well directed. I was not so well satisfied with the answering in classics and elementary English. The classes of little boys seemed too large, and their training not very methodical. But there seemed to me less of slave driving, and more of higher training in this school, than in its rivals in Belfast, and while it is not likely to be so successful at competitions like the Intermediate, the head master seems to me to understand better how to make his boys fond of learning for its own sake.

Bangor School, near Belfast (8 boarders, 32 day boys) is one of the clearest cases of an endowment which is now badly applied, and might be made of great value. The Ward family have given a house and £60 a year for the benefit of their town. The house is anything but commodious, and the out-offices and latrines are very badly kept. The boys being of various ages, and the summer attendance being far larger and very different from the winter, the master is unable to cope with his difficulties. Nevertheless there are many deserving boys at the school, and one young child of remarkable ability. The endowment would easily afford the poorer inhabitants' children free or almost free railway tickets daily to Belfast, where they could obtain the highest class of teaching in Ireland for the same school fees which they pay in Bangor.

If this change be not adopted, some outlay is imperatively required to make the school fit for any head master to invest in it his time and money. The play-ground wants levelling and improving, there must be a proper water supply; and if the number of boarders be increased, the present sleeping accommodation and beds are quite insufficient.

The fact that the present master started with three boys in January, 1878, and now has over thirty, shows that even under the present difficulties something can be done. But I do not think any outlay in Bangor will ever make it a valuable school. The children now at the school are very young and not advanced, but answered me well according to their knowledge.

Watts' School at Lurgan I visited, but was unable at the time to examine the boys, which I hoped to do on another occasion. The building, which was erected from the accumulated endowment left thirty years ago, is very pretty, and situated in a very healthy, breezy place near Lough Neagh. The head-master is an active, stirring man, who conducts his school on the northern type, and is fully acquainted with the modern needs of education. His boys are chiefly boarders from the Belfast district, and day-boys from the neighbouring town of Lurgan. But his accommodation is not very large, and if the school increases much there will be new buildings required.

Heney's School at Mullingar, placed on my list, is almost exclusively a primary school, under the management of the Christian Brothers. A priest was allowed to teach classes in classics on his own account in one room of the building, but he had very few boys, and no endowment.

The Christian Brothers' school was examined by Mr. Moore.

The Masonic Orphan school has now been settled in a very healthful and pleasant house at Sandymount. The building is however not well suited for a school. The school-room and dining-room are outside the main building, and built of wood, so that they must be draughty and cold in winter, though the master makes no complaint and says he finds them comfortable.

The dormitories have their ceilings too low, and if these were removed, as they are on the top storey, a good many more cubic feet of air could be obtained. They are at present ventilated by keeping windows open at night—a rude and dangerous method in the case of delicate boys, as some of them seemed to be. Again, the lavatories are down stairs, so that the children must go down from the dormitories to wash in the morning. This conduces much to insufficient cleaning, and the scanty use of soap and water.

The school is now in the hands of a first-rate master who understands his business thoroughly, and the Order may feel quite confident that he will do all that can be done for the boys. Their discipline and training seemed excellent. But as they are elected without regard to their knowledge, there are boys of all stages together, and they require to be separated into more classes, and separately taught, more than the same number of boys in other schools. This produces a peculiar difficulty for the master, and should be considered in giving him ample assistance.

THE ACADEMICAL INSTITUTION OF BELFAST—(21 boarders, 238 day boys [religions not ascertained]) is, in many respects, the most remarkable school in Ireland, not only for the large number of its day pupils, but for its curious constitution. It is not under any single head, but is managed by an oligarchy of six head masters—each head of one department—who have equal authority, and who meet in conference under the nominal presidency of each in turn. There are 9 assistants to the 6 head masters. There is besides a Board of Managers and of Visitors, but these, I believe, have little cause to interfere in the working of the school, which is conducted with great regularity and efficiency in each of its departments. As a boarding school, it may be said to have failed, for though two of the masters have ample accommodation in the wings of the building for boarders, there are only twenty-one now in residence. This is to be attributed mainly to the fact that the town of Belfast is not a suitable place for a boarding school; but it may also be caused by the anomalous constitution of the place, as the boarder must pass in his studies beyond the control of his own master to other departments. The buildings are large and commodious, and I remarked that, though mainly a day school, gymnasia and a fine swimming bath have been provided for the use of the boys. On the other hand, an old library, once attached to each department, has been closed and abandoned, so that there is no intellectual stimulus beyond that of the class work.

I found all the entrances, staircases, and school-rooms exceedingly dirty, there being no proper staff of servants to keep them clean, and no interest among the various masters to see it done—evidently one result of divided headship. But whatever the cause, the extreme neglect of cleanliness in the building is a great disgrace to Belfast.

The answering in the various subjects I took up was excellent, and there can be no doubt that the teaching is most efficient. But it struck me rather as a great coaching establishment, which merely regarded the intellectual attainment of a certain amount by the pupil, and neglected all moral control, or any personal interest in the character and general development of the boys, who are hurried from class to class under various teachers who may never see them elsewhere. Nevertheless, this seems to suit the business instinct of the Belfast people, who pay a certain fee for having boys taught a certain course, and get (so far) excellent value for their money. There are no questions about religion asked to day boys, nor do they come there except to learn definite subjects.

It is to be remembered, in defence of this peculiar constitution, that the institution once performed the work taken up by the Queen's College, and had a full staff of professors, and a library. The professors, and most of the books, passed to the College. In former years some Roman Catholics attended, even as boarders, but this is no longer the case. There is a special department for natural science, with a separate lecture-room and appointments, but as yet there are very few pupils. However we may be disposed to criticise it, this institution performs a very valuable function, and is excellently organised, very much after the fashion of a model National school, with higher subjects, by the influence of Mr. Carline, the head master in English. But the knowledge imparted is rather the knowledge fit for examinations than the knowledge which will form and stimulate true scholarship. In this respect it seems to be very analogous to St. Stanislaus' College. It is to be desired, however, that if the managers think it desirable to afford their day boys the luxuries of gymnastics and swimming baths, they should also cultivate in them the habit of neatness, and this would above all things be done if the entrances and staircases of the building were properly cleaned, and an ante-room prepared, in which every boy should keep (as they do at St. Stanislaus') a pair of clean house-shoes, which should be put on as he enters the school. There should also be a proper staff of servants to keep the house clean. It is now in the condition of the large Roman Catholic college buildings which I have visited in various places, where there are perhaps six servants kept to clean a building requiring at least twelve, and these six seem not to have the smallest notion of their duties. This is a reprehensible feature in Irish schools, because there is nothing more certain to prejudice respectable parents at first sight, very justly too, then dirt in the very face and fore-front of a school. It is also necessary that we should combat without ceasing against one of the chief national vices, which reaches even into the educated classes.

The Belfast Academy is in a transition state, and is but nominally worked in a temporary place, pending the completion of the very handsome buildings at the north end of Belfast, and well separated from most of the other day schools. I did not therefore think it necessary to inspect the school in a condition which was so transitory, that my report must have been obsolete before it was printed. But it is evident that this Academy ought to be one of the most important schools in Ireland. Considering, however, the active competition of other large and efficient day schools in the town, it is essential that the governors, who are not educators, but shrewd business men, should put the whole conduct of the school from the very outset into the hands of a young vigorous headmaster familiar with the new theories and fashions in education, and likely to attract boys by his reputation and consideration. To delay in doing this would be a serious injury to the school. They should also insist on making their Academy a contrast in cleanliness and neatness to the other Belfast schools, which are sadly deficient in this respect.

VII. ROMAN CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

St. MALACHI'S COLLEGE, BELFAST.—(58 boarders, 150 day boys).—The assistants are 5 priests and 5 laymen. This school is perhaps the best specimen of those diocesan schools or colleges which were evidently once intended to be affiliated to a Catholic University, but which are now diverted into the pursuit of two objects only (1.) the finding out and preliminary training of candidates for Maynooth; (2) the competing for the intermediate prizes. It is hardly fair to compare them with the non-Catholic higher schools. They have no direct endowment except their buildings, which have been built by subscriptions, or from the funds of the diocese. They are intended to educate even the lowest classes, and the charge made for boarders—at this school £30 per annum, at some of them even less—is meant to tempt the sons of poorer farmers to come to them with the hope of obtaining them for the priesthood. At the same time I am not aware that any pressure is put on the pupils in this direction. In several of them I found, however, that theological pupils had certain privileges. By theological pupils are meant those intended for Maynooth; theological instruction proper is not, I believe, given in any of them. As in the rest of the buildings of this kind, I found ventilation neglected, and little care to supply the boys with means of recreation or encouragement for culture. The dormitories were, indeed, constructed with a great show of ventilating apparatus, but when I visited them (about 1 o'clock in the day) the beds were only being made; the windows had not been opened that day at all on account of the cold, and consequently the air was little short of poisonous. The rector informed me that the servants' orders were to open the windows every morning; but of course every opportunity is taken of evading these orders; for the hatred which the Irish of the lower class have for ventilation is something remarkable. If any one will visit any of these Roman Catholic colleges at study time, and enter the rooms where a large number of students, with many jets of gas burning, with all the windows shut, keep themselves very warm while they read, he will, indeed, wonder whether any real intellectual work can be produced in such an atmosphere.

In St. Malachi's College I found much careful teaching, and fair answering in most of the elementary subjects. In dictation the boys were very good, and so in Euclid and arithmetic. The rector regretted that the want of endowment prevented him from adequately teaching natural science, for which he has good appliances left him by the late R. C. Bishop. But all attempts to obtain any answering in subjects outside the intermediate course were idle. In fact the rector expressly discouraged general culture, and the boys were not allowed to read newspapers. "If they want to read," he said to me, "let them read their business."

Other Catholic Colleges.—I went over the buildings of the Roman Catholic Diocesan Colleges at Armagh, Cavan, and Athlone. That at Athlone is about to be closed, and presently turned into an Industrial school. The rest were more or less empty, owing partly no doubt to the bad season, and the consequent agricultural depression in Ireland, which has kept many farmers from sending their sons to them. I proposed to examine the College at Armagh, if the Rector would name a suitable day, but have not since heard from him. At Cavan the Bishop showed me every kindness. I do not think that his College differs in any important feature from that at Belfast, save that the number of day boys is evanescent; indeed the boarders (80) make up the principal part. But here also many beds were empty, and the Institution, which charges the minimum, and can only prosper by a minute profit on each boy, is not at present successful.

It is not likely that additional endowments given to these Colleges would do more than attain for their boys additional intermediate prizes, and secure to the Church a larger number of intelligent candidates for the Priesthood. For it is certain that this latter will always be a main object with the Bishop and Diocesan authorities, who keep such Colleges under their complete control. I say this though they all insisted on the completely lay character of the teaching, and the readiness with which they seek and accept pupils who do not seek to enter the Priesthood. It is only fair to respect and to record here these assurances, but I cannot see how a great and united profession like the Catholic Priesthood can avoid the constant and anxious endeavour to collect able recruits for their ranks, nor do I know any other means of obtaining them comparable to the influences which they can legitimately bring to bear in these Colleges.

THE FRENCH COLLEGE, BLACKROCK.—(280 boarders, 34 day-boys; there are 34 teachers, each usually occupied with one subject only). Of the large number of boarders at this most successful school, about 70, and these the best, are theological students, selected to supply the foreign missions of the Order of the Holy Spirit, especially on the coast of Africa; these pay reduced fees. Thirty more are candidates for the Civil Service examinations, they are older than ordinary schoolboys, and pay for their special position 74 guineas. The ordinary boarders' fees are 45 guineas, and therefore about the same as those at St. Stanislaus'. The school founded from the funds of the order has become not only self-supporting, but handsomely endowed by its own success, so much so that very high salaries are paid to the lay teachers, nine in number now employed, and a good many school exhibitions are given to younger boys. At the Intermediate examinations this school has been remarkably successful. The pupils are recruited from the most respectable Roman Catholic classes in the country. I found the teaching of foreign languages exceptionally developed, and there were many boys learning even Spanish, but this, I suppose, for missionary purposes. The play-grounds are not very attractive, being somewhat confined by neighbouring villas, but the boys seemed cheerful and keen about games. The dormitories were well ventilated, but the general arrangements of the house as to sweeping and other neatness left something to be desired.

The principal has very large and independent views about education, which are well worthy of serious consideration. He complains bitterly of the low standard of the prize and scholarship examinations at the Queen's Colleges of Cork and Galway, boys having obtained distinctions there, whom he had resolved to send home to their parents on account of their stolid and invincible ignorance. This has a most injurious influence on their class-fellows who remain at school, and often takes away from his care boys who are just beginning to learn something.

He objects altogether to the Intermediate examinations, and says that his profession is ruined by the complete obsequiation of all school-work to the fixed programme, which is quite insufficient to occupy the better boys for a year, and which thus seriously impairs their progress. He fully agrees with me that it is the duty of that examination not to test the coaching in particular books, but the various methods of teaching at diverse schools, and that if no course were prescribed, very different and far sounder results would be attained. He thus differs fundamentally from the theory of the Jesuit Fathers at St. Stanislaus' College. He also protests against the variety of unimportant subjects which produce results fees, and thinks that a minimum of at least 35 per cent should be struck off, the answering of those subjects are retained. It was very satisfactory to me to find my own conclusions backed by the experience of this enlightened and experienced Roman Catholic schoolmaster.

ST. STANISLAUS' COLLEGE, TULLAMORE.—(164 boarders, no day boys) There are 20 assistants, not including the Rector and Vice-Rector.—The Rector of this large school willingly permitted inspection, though not classing his school as endowed. But it may fairly be doubted, whether a school supported by the Jesuit Order can be called unendowed, in any practical sense. The Order supplies the great majority of the teachers, ready trained, and taking no salary beyond their mere support. The Rector being, ex hypothesi, without the necessity of providing for a family, or permitted to amass money, spends all the profits of the school upon its improvement. The average bill of the boys amount to £55 per annum, and thus, even allowing for some free boys admitted by the Rector, there is an income of more than £8,000 to support the school. Perhaps not more than one-half of it is necessary for the mere maintenance of the boys. The rest goes to the support of the Jesuit teachers, the salaries of a few lay assistants, the large hospitalities of the establishment, and its general improvement. The buildings, and a considerable farm at a low rent, are entrusted by the Order to the Rector. Such is the enormous benefit gained by the existence of celibate teaching orders among the Roman Catholic clergy. The results in the case of this college are commensurate. Everything is richly and completely appointed—and there is constant entertaining of visitors. All the buildings are in thorough repair, clean and well ventilated. The boys are supplied with three good school libraries, besides a fourth reference library for the higher school, and a masters' library. They have a good cricket ground, and large ball-field, and so carefully are sports encouraged, that a yearly sum is charged in the accounts for subscription to them. Sports may in fact be regarded in this school as compulsory. Hence their cricket is the best to be found at any school (except perhaps Portlinton) in Ireland. Moreover there are several billiard rooms in the house for the use of the boys, and prizes are even given for proficiency in playing whist and chess. There are six bath rooms in the house, and special arrangements at the gate-ledge for bathing in the adjoining river. There are two separate infirmaries. There is also a debating club, and in many respects, the establishment combines the character of a boarding school, and of a coaching place for older boys who are already matriculated in the London University, or working for Civil Service appointments. When I visited the school, an examination was actually being conducted by an examiner sent from London for that University, and thus I had no opportunity of examining the best classes. The older boys are allowed a good deal of liberty, and even smoking is not prohibited in their case. There are a great many arrangements peculiar to this school, partly the result of the well tried and perfect Jesuit system, partly the work of the present able and enlightened Rector. In addition to what has already been mentioned I noticed an admirable rule that all boys coming in took off their dirty boots in a convenient corridor, and placed them in a numbered spot on a rack over a hot water pipe. Thus the boots were rapidly dried, and nothing but clean house shoes worn indoors. There is besides an excellent hot room for clothes, and a tailoring room, to which any torn clothes can be at once brought, and replaced from the boy's store, which are there kept under his number.

In the matter of discipline, which is much stricter than would perhaps, be tolerated in Protestant schools, there were many points new to me and very interesting. The Prefects, Jesuit fathers with moral control, are separate from the masters, and are constantly with the boys.

In case of an offence against a Prefect, he reports it to another, who punishes the boy, in serious cases with the Rector's consent. Thus the offended Prefect never can revenge himself by vindictive punishment. No formal flogging is allowed.

In the working of classes, there is first the excellent rule of the order, that none shall work more than two hours continuously, and thus the working hours are far better distributed than elsewhere, and diversified with study in a different room. Secondly there is the curious principle of dividing each class into two compartments in which each boy is matched against a special rival, and the two divisions struggle to gain an aggregate superiority in answering, for which they obtain credit. This is a better method than that of moving up each boy in class according as he answers what the boy above him misses—a clumsy and disturbing process during lessons, which I saw in operation at the City of London School. Thirdly, there is a good collection of physical instruments, and every boy in the school is taught natural science—a matter on which the Rector lays great stress. In my opinion the number of subjects already taught in schools is too great, and if we except the university students living at the college, no class is benefited by it.

The intellectual outcome of all this splendid discipline did not appear to me commensurate. I repeat that the best pupils were at the moment under examination, and so my visit was rather one of courtesy than of formal inspection, I did not obtain a thorough insight into the working of the classes. But it was evident that the whole energies of the place were directed to passing various competitions, especially the Intermediate Examinations, and that this running along fixed grooves has a very injurious effect on the growth of the mind. I should expect that while turning out many successful pupils, and thus gaining much credit, and perhaps justly, with the public, the system of this College will produce few real scholars or men of science. The boys I examined seemed to me not to have thought round their subject in the way that boys of the same age in English schools are encouraged to do. The answering in Euclid was indifferent, possibly because I asked questions out of the regular groove which pays at examinations. The Rector thinks that he labours under unfair disadvantage in not having endowments in the shape of scholarships for his pupils. Yet it is clear that if such scholarships entailed upon them additional competitions, they must do more harm than good. I am quite averse to encouraging the present grood of ignorant parents to make their children's education a lucrative speculation.

The relation of the college to the university question has constantly occupied the Rector, and he has basied himself much in the various attempts to obtain a system of university examinations for his boys after the London fashion. The new Irish University will probably be arranged (like the Intermediate system) in such a manner as to suit his views exactly.

Though the various school boards and head masters through Ireland may find, as I did, a certain restraint among the boys, which diverse people will attribute to diverse causes, they would all profit greatly by visiting the college, and learning from it the many points of good management, of neatness, and of order which make it quite exceptional in the country.

I may add, in fairness to the school, that I examined it just after a vacation, so that the boys were somewhat rusty in their back work.

VIII.—MISCELLANEOUS MODERN FOUNDATIONS AND NON-ENDOWED SCHOOLS WHICH SOLICITED INSPECTION.

The Académie Institute of Coleraine (60 boarders, 70 day boys, 5 resident and 2 non-resident assistants) is a large and flourishing school. When I visited it the boys had just re-assembled after an epidemic of scarlatina, so that the number of boarders was not up to the normal strength. The whole house had undergone thorough painting and whitewashing, and looked very clean. Some defects in ventilation were at the time in process of being remedied. In addition to this improvement the governors should add (1) a detached hospital; (2) a covered gymnasium, which in our damp climate is of the last importance; (3) a proper play-ground, free of rent, and adapted to playing the modern games. In older days any field was thought sufficient for a play-ground. The requirements of modern amusements are much more exacting, and so large and thriving a school as this should at once be provided with these now necessary appointments. There was also a want of a good library for the boys—a deficiency which should be remedied by a small tax on outgoing boys, and by a grant to the master. A very small sum expended annually at book auctions would acquire good copies of all the older standard works at a cost less than the value of the binding. This school is provided in a manner quite peculiar to it with a plunge bath in the basement story of the house—an admirable arrangement due to the ingenuity of the present master. As regards the intellectual condition of the boys, I found them much more advanced in science and English than in classics or French, and this I attribute mainly to the character and tastes of the Coleraine people, who like the people of Belfast are too essentially "business people" to understand the value of a classical education, which does not represent immediate money value. The present master is fully alive to this defect and is doing everything to counteract it, so far as it is possible when many boys will not go on to the universities. They are all taught book-keeping.

The religious difficulty, here as elsewhere in the north, seems hardly to exist. Boys of various religions meet without any difference, and dogmatic questions are never asked.

Thus was one of the schools in which the pronunciation of French was very incorrect, as the practical spirit of the school fully appreciated its uselessness in the preparation for the Intermediate Examination.

PORTARLINGTON SCHOOL.—(107 boarders, 5 day boys, 8 assistants).—I visited this really unimproved school at the wish of the head master, and found it worthy of very special remark. The buildings, though old, and not very lofty, especially in the dormitories, have been most comfortably fitted up with cubicles—perhaps not the best arrangement in such a case. Still, I found them well ventilated into at night, and in all the class rooms there was plenty of fresh air. In play-grounds, ball-courts, gymnasia, swimming baths, and every other reasonable comfort, this school stands, with St Stanislaus, quite at the head of the Irish schools. No expense has been spared by the head master, the chief is, perhaps, the head of the Irish schools. A separate house for the lower school, with open dormitories, and rather too luxurious, and there is a separate house for the lower school, with open dormitories, and a drawing-room where the little boys assemble in the evening, and spend their leisure in games and music. Nothing can be more attractive than this homelike and humane practice. The whole management of the discipline is in the hands of the head master, and of six senior boys, who are prefects, and have considerable liberty in consequence; I do not believe that this government is sufficient, but the results of their mild and gentlemanly rule are very apparent in the cheerful and friendly manners of the boys, who are all taught to conduct themselves like gentlemen.

The head master has undoubtedly paid more attention than any of his compars to external points, and he has been rewarded by a great success. It is surprising that this valuable experiment has not been more widely attempted, but it requires a taste for the refinements of life, as well as a bold outlay at the beginning, which most of the Governing Boards would not sanction. And yet the deficiency in elegant externals and in refinement are the real obstacles in the way of many Irish schools, and the main reason why so many of the better classes send their sons to England.

Whether the intellectual condition of Portarlington school stands equally high, may, I think, be doubted. The head master pointed out to me that the cleverest boys are sure to be sent to endowed schools where they obtain scholarships, and that therefore he does not compete on fair terms. Moreover, he absolutely refuses to grind his boys in the mill of competition, and rules with the mildest of discipline. The boys' handwriting was not properly watched, and their dictation exercises to me were bad. In classics, the answering was fairly good. It appeared to me that some of the assistants then (October 22, 1879) at the school were not sufficiently qualified, and I do not know any better method of spending the bibe or perverted endowments than to grant a yearly sum to such a school as this, while successful, or when promising, for the appointment of good assistants. They have all been changed since my visit, and are now on a better footing, but the frequent changing of assistants is in itself a considerable disadvantage. French and German are particularly attended to, and many boys have made some progress in them.

Parsonstown School (58 boarders, 10 day-boys) is a very well situated preparatory school, not endowed, but successful both under the former and the present master. It is now quite full, indeed the separate rooms intended for an infirmary were occupied, and the buildings seemed hardly sufficient for their purpose. Yet in Ireland it is so risky an investment to increase a school-house, that few head-masters will attempt it. Parsonstown is a very neat town, in which many respectable people reside, and thus this school serves as a day-school for their children, as well as for those of the officers on duty in the garrison. I found the boys comfortably kept and kindly treated, though in many lesser details more niceness were desirable. The school-rooms were very dusty, and an aerial adjoining details more niceness were desirable. The school-rooms were good and convenient. In answering the boys did not strike me favourably. No doubt many of them had only been a short time at school, and had come from home perfectly ignorant. For it is not an uncommon thing for Irish parents to delay parting with their boys from home until they have acquired idle habits and a dislike for learning. They do not the less expect that schoolmasters are to make good this waste of time, and turn out their boys as advanced as those who have been early watched and trained. On the other hand, perhaps part of the indifferent answering to me might arise from the fact that the assistants were young and inexperienced, and did not teach upon a strict enough method. Still the head-master deserves great credit for carrying out an idea not usual in Ireland—that of weeking a preparatory school, to which little boys can be safely sent. The junior divisions of St Stanislaus' Armagh, and Pecklington schools are the only other high-class schools professedly of this kind, though all admit young boys, and it is often the necessity of sending little boys to England which has determined parents to educate them altogether outside this country.

KINGSTOWN SCHOOL (29 boarders, 47 day-boys, 3 resident and 6 non-resident assistants).—This unworlded school has for a long time enjoyed a very high reputation, especially since the rise of competitive examinations for the Army and Civil Service, in which its pupils have been singularly successful. In fact it combines the advantages of a coaching establishment with a school, and many of the day-boys are really over the ordinary school age, and pay as much as 36 guineas for their special teaching. These classes account for the large number of non-resident masters, generally University men of the highest calibre, who devote a couple of hours in the day to special teaching. But no day-boy pays less than 14 guineas, an unusually high fee for an Irish school. The boarders do not pay more than the average. The grounds appeared beautifully situated, and the buildings though old and enlarged by patchwork not inconvenient. But the short tenure of the lease of both ground and buildings, and the want of endowment make it difficult to obtain any large investment from a head master, and without such investment no school can keep up well with modern requirements. There is, however, a good cricket ground, and sea-bathing is within reach. In the boys answering I found the French and the Science above the average. Intelligent masters there have complained to me of the absurdity in the intermediate examination of setting papers in natural philosophy to boys not required to know, and perfectly ignorant of, trigonometry. But this is only one point among many such.

GENERAL REVIEW OF THE STATE OF THE IRISH GRAMMAR SCHOOLS.

I should premise that though my principal duty was criticism, and I have therefore spoken clearly and without mercy concerning the defects of the Irish schools, so fair inspection could fail to notice a great quantity of honest hard work done by both head masters, assistants, and pupils. Most of the head masters are men of high intellectual attainments and (originally at least) of zeal for their profession. Many of the assistants are in no way inferior to them in either quality, and it was often a wonder to me that the younger among them taught so well as they did, seeing that they did not regard their duties as permanent, or likely to lead to advancement. But from these very conditions arose the many exceptions I noted in zeal and earnestness, and no doubt much of the slovenly answering in classes of intelligent and diligent children. As for the boys, I considered that wherever they were fairly and kindly treated, they were easily to be managed, and more easily to be taught than English boys—I mean more easily taught owing to intellectual quickness, for in point of order and method it was not so. The real faults of Irish boys, so far as they differ in degree from those of other boys, are, perhaps, a little more idleness, owing to the fact that the Irishman has more means of enjoying idleness than his diller neighbours, and certainly more thriftlessness, shown in his want of regularity, and his want of order and tidiness. There is, no doubt also, a less attention to cleanliness, which arises from the general neglect of this virtue among the people. But on the other hand he is certainly morally cleaner than his English or German or French equal. Gross offences against morality are very rare in almost all the Irish schools, and cause but little difficulty to the masters. As to the charge of untruthfulness, which certainly prevails the lower classes generally, and which is commonly thought a national characteristic, I am persuaded that it is not a feature in Irish boys, and that with proper management it ought to produce no special difficulty. I examined this matter very carefully, and am convinced that in a sensitive race, and one even now not yet possessed of that self-respect which is only created by national freedom and importance, it is, indeed, easier for a master to induce lying by tyranny, unfairness, or stupidity, than it would be to induce it in England. For an Irish boy suffers more from a flogging, and is more prone to conspiracy against ill-used authority. Yet my complaints of general untruthfulness are not the less a confession of incompetence on the part of the master, and probably a confession of injustice and cruelty. The position and character of the Irish boys at most of the English public schools afford, indeed, sufficient refutation of such a charge. The real want in training Irish boys is a very firm but kindly discipline, enforcing order and neatness, punctuality and thoroughness of work, with constant and zealous care. Hence, the general impression produced by a survey of the Irish Grammar schools is this, that while a great deal is being done for the youth of Ireland, while there are many earnest and able men engaged in teaching and in improving the condition of education, all these efforts are individual efforts, or scattered efforts, and the results produced are vastly inferior to those which might be expected from the existing national endowments both of money and of talent. For the Irish nation, with all its patent faults, is a clever nation; Irish boys are above the average in smartness and versatility; if the system of education were at all perfect, great intellectual results might fairly be expected.

The hindrances to these results may be divided into those which act upon the schools from without, and those to be found in their internal economy. To take these in their order:—

I. (a) First comes the want of endowment—a complaint which would, perhaps, not have been heard, but for the proximity of England, with the lavish wealth of its old foundations. And it should be remembered, that such establishments as Marlborough, Cheltenham, and others, show that without one penny of endowment, people who are in earnest about education can found great schools, and that no enterprise is more thoroughly self-supporting than a successful school. It is not money which is wanting in Ireland for such a purpose, it is rather want of earnestness about education, want of enterprise in its management, and the consequent distrust felt by Irish people in anything undertaken by themselves. This feeling is, of course, increased by the contrast of England, and by the facility with which the richer classes can now send their sons there.

It is, indeed, not to be expected that we can ever rival the public schools in England, but the number of Irish boys sent to them is really small. It has been pointed out to me by the head master of Foyle College that the competition is with smaller and inferior schools in England—schools which profess to educate boys for about the terms usual in Ireland (£80 per annum), a proper organization of the Irish endowments ought to make Irish schools easily successful as against these. I say organization, for I have no sympathy with the cry for more endowment; it is merely another form of the cry which is now under our very eyes reducing the majority of the people to the condition of beggars and liars. Success in schools as in everything else must come by energy from within, not by largesses from without.

(b). Next to the want, or rather the dissipation, of endowments, comes the want of proper inspection and control. Most of the Irish schools I visited had never been inspected; they carry on their work in isolation; until the foundation of the schoolmasters' association, a very few years ago, the principal schoolmasters had never met each other. These defects are allowed to grow up from the mere ignorance of isolation, which any periodical inspection would at once check or remove.

There may be called the negative causes of the defects in Irish schools, which act from without. There are also positive causes—the production of a false or unhealthy stimulus by the attempt to attain some object, or rival some false model.

(c). The most obvious of these is the attempt to imitate the English public schools with insufficient means, and for insufficient reasons.

Thus, for example, there has been considerable outlay in some schools in erecting separate cubicles in the dormitories—a plan now going out of favour in England, and certainly open to many grave objections, both physical and moral.

There is also a desire of having English assistants, however incompetent, on account of their accent. Of course the accent of a master has little effect on his boys, so that it must be chiefly intended to impress the outside world. It is based, too, on the very reasonable desire of many parents, that their children shall not be marked in after life as provincials by their speech. But to this feeling far more important objects are often sacrificed.

The imitation of the flogging system at the older English public schools is the most unreasonable of all these defects.

(d). Vastly more important is the false stimulus now supplied in the system of intermediate examinations established by Government. This system at best, and with all possible precautions, must tend to substitute for the good schoolmaster the successful coach; it must tend to subordinate the general moral and intellectual training of boys to the attainment of money successes at a special examination. Thus the school most successful in all Ireland at the last competition is the very school which has most assimilated itself to a grinding establishment, and which takes no thought for the moral welfare of its pupils beyond their actual working hours. So strong a mercenary spirit has been excited both in masters and parents by this system, that all the schools in Ireland, with one exception (the Friends' School in Waterford), have been forced into the competition; every boy is being taught the Intermediate course, every error in the management of that course is affecting the whole country, and the best educator is unable to stem the tide, or do more than protest against any of the defects. But the only protests hitherto of importance, have come from the very bodies which ought not to have had such importance, I mean the associations of schoolmasters with a direct pecuniary interest in the examination. Thus the Roman Catholic schoolmasters, whose boys come to them very late, clamour for extending the limits of the age of candidates, while others, who find they cannot create good scholars in a very short period, urge the multiplication of subjects, and the equalisation of classes, in order that a general smattering in the elements of many things may outweigh the sound knowledge of a few great subjects. This produces large results, but what about the interests of knowledge?

II. We now come to the defects within the schools themselves, so far as these can fairly be separated from external causes; for, of course, all of them act and react, produce and result from, one another.

1. Foremost is the difficulty of old head masters. I found in England that such an obstacle would not be tolerated. In the newer schemes he is required to retire at sixty, and generally pays something yearly towards his own pension, which is supplemented by funds from the Governing Body. But in many others there is no such provision, and yet it is clearly understood that he must retire after a reasonable tenure of his office, and generally much earlier than sixty. The result is that the spectacle of a school languishing under an old and weary head master, so frequent in Ireland, is unknown among the better schools in England. Still less, I suppose, could we find, as we do in Ireland, men of so scholastic competence obtaining by interest or otherwise the management of an Endowed school as a sort of pension. When the school dies away the assistants are dismissed, no new scholars acquired, and the head master lives on the income of the endowment in part of the school-house, allowing the rest to fall into decay. These are the worst cases. But there are many others where the head master, having no retirement provided, is obliged to stay against his will, and so stops the way of younger, if not abler, men, who would at once restore the school to some prosperity. Many of these posts are held by charter, or in such manner that no Board has the power to remove the occupant except in the case of flagrant crimes. The majority of the greater Endowed schools in Ireland are at present in this condition, which is, of itself, enough to account for their languishing state.

2. Next, and hardly less important than the defect of old head masters, is that of young and inexperienced assistants. It is, in some respects, the direct consequence of the other, for when the school is decaying, the head master will not afford to pay able and experienced assistants, and will be content with undergraduates, or men of no literary training, who seek these posts, not as an honest profession, but as a bridge to some other advancement in life. Indeed the profession of assistant master presents so few attractions, it has so little social status, and such small chance of preferment, that able and gentlemanly men cannot be expected to embrace it, nor will any remedy be found till this important profession is improved as to emoluments, and so organised that the better men will be recognised and advanced while they are still young. Let me add that the difficulty of obtaining even decently qualified assistants is daily increasing; they are becoming so rare and precious as cures, and in my position as a College Tutor, I am constantly receiving despairing applications to find either from many parts of the country. But no promising classical student can now be induced to leave Dublin for a school charge, except on the ground of poverty. It is regarded not as a profession but a hindrance to a profession.

Of course this youth and inexperience of the assistants specially affects classical and literary teaching, whereas science suffers but little. There are many science teachers of the highest competence through Ireland, especially those trained by the Incorporated Society; for arithmetic, geometry, and algebra are definite matters, which can be learned by a lad of no other talents, and no collateral culture, sufficiently to know them and impart them thoroughly. This is not the case in classics. The mistakes in form and in style of half-trained masters are being perpetuated to their pupils, and thus the classical education of the Irish boys is lagging far behind that of the English at their public schools.

The same thing may be said about modern languages, which are frequently in the hands of Irish masters who know them very imperfectly, nor is there any teaching of them worthy the name, except that carried on either by foreigners, or by those rare natives who have been brought up abroad, and have spent there a considerable portion of their lives. The study of natural science is exceptional, and not now worth considering. For

3. I find that by the spirit of the age, and the various requirements of many competitions, both English and Irish schools have been driven into the great vice of multiplying subjects of instruction, and so crowding together hours of diverse teaching, that the worst results must inevitably ensue. There is in the first place that everlasting mental fatigue, and consequent ill health, which is beginning to occupy the attention of the learned, and has been fully discussed of late in the columns of the Times (April, 1880). When I visited Winchester, it was easy to distinguish in a large class the boys who had won their way into the foundation by competition; they were remarkable for their worn and unhealthy looks. Many of our finest boys are being, if not killed outright, killed in a worse sense by this early and continuous strain; they come into mature life weary of work, and unfit for any energetic or fruitful labour. They may even pass their university examinations brilliantly, but what then?

This evil, however, the evil of overwork, at examination courses has already excited public attention, and is, I trust, in a fair way of being remedied, either by the wisdom of school authorities, or by the indignant rebellion of parental affection. Nor did it strike me as at all so frequent in Irish schools as another mischief arising from the same cause. It rather appeared to me all over Ireland, and in England also, that the majority of boys, without being overworked, were added by the multiplicity of their subjects, and instead of increasing their knowledge had utterly confused it. I heard everywhere from the masters the same complaint. Whenever I asked them to point me out a brilliant boy, they replied that the race had died out, that brilliant boys could no longer be found; that ten or fifteen years ago they had been frequent enough, but now they were gone. Is it conceivable that this arises from any inherent failing of the race, and not rather from some great blundering in the system of our education? The great majority of thoughtful educators with whom I conferred agreed that it was due to this constant addition of new subjects—to the cry after English grammar, and English literature, and French, and German and natural science, to the subdivision of the wretched boy's time into two hours in the week for this, two hours for that, alternate days for this, alternate days for that—in fact to an injurious system of teaching him everything so elaborately that he can answer intelligently in nothing. I cannot speak too strongly of the melancholy impression forced upon me by the examination of many hundred boys in various schools through England and Ireland. I sought in vain for bright promise, for quick intelligence, for keen sympathy with their studies. It was not, I am sure, the boys' fault. It cannot have been the master's. It is the result of the present too constrictive system of competitive examination, which is strangling our youth in its fatal embrace.

There is but one more criticism to be made, which has a general application to Irish, as contrasted with English schools. It is the reflex of a serious national defect, which is not foreign even to the better classes. Many schools in which the teaching was careful, and in which the boys were otherwise well trained and mannerly, were exceedingly unsatisfactory in their keeping, unventilated or unwept, and even squalid in appearance. Many which were in some respects clean and airy, failed on a closer inspection of corners and passages. Those places in our modern houses which most of all demand fresh air and tidiness were often grievously offensive. The school-room floors were in most cases exceedingly dirty, nor had it occurred to any but two or three schoolmasters, that boys should be required to change their shoes when coming in to work in school. In the large buildings of the Roman Catholic diocesan colleges the staff of servants is generally quite insufficient to keep them, nor did such an idea appear to have occurred to any one in charge of them. Yet the class of pupils trained in them are above all those who would profit by habits of neatness superior to those of their homes.

I cannot avoid indicating briefly, in conclusion, the feasible changes and improvements by which a wise legislation might remove these defects, and make the grammar schools of Ireland more efficient for the requirements of the middle classes throughout the country.

I. In the first place the various governing Boards might be amalgamated, and the control of the schools, both as to property and as to the appointments of head masters, might be in the hands of one responsible body, not made up altogether of lords and bishops and judges, who give their spare moments to such duties, but mainly of practical educators, and men young enough to keep pace with the changing fancies and theories of the age. For these are the real conservatives in such matters. No one is so likely to be led away by novelties as the elderly amateur in education, who knows nothing of its practical working, and legislates on specious theories. So long as Boards in Ireland are chiefly made up of people of social or political importance only, education will not prosper. The amalgamation of the Commissioners of Education, the Erasmus Smith's Board, and the Incorporated Society's Board, would effect considerable saving in office rent and salaries, and thus supply one or two retiring pensions for head masters.

II. Following out this idea, a good many of the endowed schools should be suppressed, and the endowments applied in other places. When these schools were founded, locomotion was difficult, railways and steamers unknown, and many local centres of education were imperatively required. With the change of the times these conditions are reversed. Except for day scholars, local centres are of no use. It is a matter of hardly any importance to parents, in what part of Ireland a good boarding school is situated. The boarders at Dundalk school lately migrated with their master to Ennis, and did not complain of the change. Thus the four Royal schools are now unnecessary as boarding schools. The wants of day boys in their respective towns would be amply satisfied by supplementing the model National school in each with a classical master. One of them should be turned into a preparatory school, of which there is still a want in Ireland. One should be suppressed. The resulting funds would help to endow the remainder so as to secure better assistant masters, and place the head master on a different footing.

Something similar might be done with the other schools. Drogda and Dundalk do not require separate boarding schools. The school in Banagher might be suppressed, and its funds applied to Parsonstown. But these are matters of detail, which would require careful consideration. Still more imperative would be the suppression or amalgamation of numerous small private endowments, which were once very serviceable, but are now worse than useless. They are fixed in places so decayed, that they can command neither boarders nor day pupils. The endowments generally amount to £40 and a free house—a reasonable bequest when one man could teach the whole curriculum, and the ideal village was in the condition of Goldsmith's Auburn. But a single master is quite helpless in the face of modern requirements.

Some of these local endowments, such as Elphin, Ballyroan, and others, are considerably greater. Their estates have often been mismanaged, and sometimes even dissipated. If the private patrons were compensated by part of the proceeds, these estates—as, indeed, all the school estates—might be and, and the Central School Board would have a far simpler and larger income to administer. Special privileges might be reserved at the new school centres for the boys who would have been educated at the suppressed schools. In some cases, such as Bangor and Youghal, the endowment might most profitably be applied to conveying the boys by rail to the nearest efficient school—an arrangement by which both the boys and the selected school would benefit considerably. Indeed, our policy should now be the reverse of that justly adopted by the pious founders. They sought to have as many local centres as possible; we should strive to reduce the number.

As I am discussing the improvement and consolidation of these endowments, not their diversion, we need not consider the claim which would be made by the Roman Catholics for a share in the redistribution. I will only remark that in no case, except that of the Incorporated Society's boarders, are the grammar schools worked in a religious spirit, that Roman Catholics are treated with every respect and consideration as to conscience in all of them, and that the number of Roman Catholic boys now attending them would be very largely increased but for the active interference of their clergy. They cannot show a single case of attempted proselytism; they might even have formed the majority in many of them, and given a tone to the school. But this is not the clerical policy.

Whether such pertinacious obstruction deserves success I leave to politicians to decide. The last Liberal Government even tried the experiment of appointing a Roman Catholic master to Bangor Royal School, but the antagonism of the clergy caused it to fail.

It may be added that in their teaching orders the Roman Catholics have provisionally a large endowment already provided. The Christian Brothers in the primary, and the Jesuits in the higher schools, teach, without salary, with devotion and success. Thus the Rector of St. Stanislaus' College, with his magnificent grounds and buildings, erected by his Order, with most of his masters supplied by the Order—all bound by their vows to poverty and celibacy—is really, though styling himself non-endowed, the best endowed schoolmaster in Ireland. Yet as this is the benefaction of a private society, it may be argued that the endowments of Bangor should in fairness be made over to the school which in the south of Ireland has been doing the work which the Royal school ought to have done.

III. Returning to less controversial points, it seems obvious that the Central Board, or the present Boards if they remain, should have power to dismiss their head masters, and that the failure of a school ought to produce as a natural consequence the retirement of its master. It is, of course, absolutely necessary for the discipline and management of any school that, as the head master is under the control of the governing body, so his assistants should be entirely under him; but though he should have power to dismiss them, their salaries should remain untouched, so that he should be allowed to choose his men, but not interfere with their pay. If this were provided out of the endowment, and the head master's salary made up almost entirely of capitation fees, a failure of the school would of itself force him to resign. This prospect should be relieved by some system of pension after a reasonable service.

By encouraging boarding-houses, as at Armagh, by raising the salaries of experienced assistants to £300 and a comfortable residence, and by providing pensions, a different class of men would be induced to enter the scholastic profession. But I do not propose that the head master should be chosen from the senior assistants. It seems, perhaps, paradoxical, but it is nevertheless true, that we want young head masters and well-tried assistants. The former is in contact with the public, he must know the new theories and fashions, he must cultivate a connexion with the rising generation. The latter must have the patience and temper of middle age, they must be men of settled and quiet life. Hence it will be seen that all the most successful head masters in Ireland (with one exception) were appointed when very young, and full of zeal and vigour for their work.

As to the qualifications of assistants, we have now none to guide us but collegiate distinctions. It were much to be desired that something like a College of Preceptors existed in Ireland, and that candidates for masterships were tested not merely in their knowledge, but in their method of imparting it.

IV. I have already spoken above of the need of regular inspection, and of inspection in minute details, especially as regards neatness and gentlemanly habits. Perhaps the Central Board should choose English inspectors, or at least such men as were known to have a taste for neatness, to appreciate this quality, and censure its opposite, for many learned men, otherwise highly qualified, tolerate, whether from dulness of organs, or preoccupation of mind, this untidiness in their own establishments, and are, therefore, unfit to pick the notes out of other people's eyes. In testing the knowledge of the classes, they should be versed not only in science and classics, but in English and modern languages, and thus points to a sub-division of their duties, and the appointment of pairs of inspectors to undertake each school in succession. Of all the suggestions here made this is the easiest, that which will produce the most immediate good, and the least possible harm. It were also desirable that the inspectors were frequently varied, as the peculiarities of each man are easily learned, and are apt to become unduly attended to if he regularly visits the same schools.

V. We come lastly to the reforms desirable in the Intermediate Examinations, which now have so great an influence on the country. My experience is, that numbers of boys who succeeded last year, not merely in passing, but in getting prizes, knew nothing of the subjects in which they competed. They had, no doubt, learned the text-books off by heart, but as they had been occupied in doing this with five or six subjects, their education was at a standstill. There were, of course, some cases of cheating of candidates leaving the room with their papers; I do not allude to these, which will be obviated by the appointment of proper sub-examiners and examiners. We should consider rather the bona fide cases, in which the learning off of short text-books met with an undue reward. I found this particularly the case in music, in French, and in Latin. In Latin, the worst cases were those of boys who passed only, but who should at once have been rejected. Nothing would be easier than to attach more weight to the translation of strange passages, and to Latin prose. Indeed, I am strongly of opinion that no text-book should be set in this subject, except to the junior class. Above all, long notice of a short text-book is fatal to an examination conducted without visa voce. Very much the same observations apply to the case of French, except that here the absence of visa voce is still more fatal. I found that, in many schools, the reading of the language was omitted, because it did not form part of the examination; and so, when I asked the boys to read the text which they had prepared for the last competition, there came out an unintelligible jargon so ridiculous that they laughed at it themselves. They did not even know the first elementary rules of pronunciation. In other less flagrant cases, they were perfectly helpless at the earliest strange text put before them. As for asking them to write English into French, or to speak with me in French, it was perfectly idle to propose such a thing. Now in Latin, there is something to be said for a mere knowledge of the grammar, without gaining a hold on the language, for it is the key to modern grammars, and has, therefore, an independent value. But surely a study of French which neglects all pronunciation, all reading of new texts—in fact, all practical use of the language—is a mere imposture. Among the many boys examined, I only found one or two who seemed at all likely to attempt the reading of a French book when the examination was once over. This has, indeed, been the case with the teaching of French in English schools for years back. Every day I meet at my lectures boys who have learned their wretched two hours per week for years at school, and have since lost every vestige of the language.

I am, therefore, fully convinced that the present study of French in the schools is generally waste of time, and that parents are being gulled with the idea that their children are learning it. Two or three hours per week will learn no language, if the child has not already acquired a large vocabulary in the nursery, or from residence abroad. Where, therefore, I have spoken above of various schools as efficient in French I mean only that the teaching was efficient, and that the boys answered well in some things they had prepared, or something very easy, not that any of the answering showed a real command of the language. In the Intermediate Examination, as visa voce is impossible owing to the vast number of the candidates, the only remedy is to appoint no fixed books, and to make French composition a very large part of the examination. I know that many of the schoolmasters will cry out against such a change, but let us merely ask them what their object is in so doing? Is it their mere intention to gather prizes into the pockets of undeserving people, and gain results fees for themselves? If this be so, let them state it. But if they really desire to educate the people under their charge, they should not advocate a policy which looks as if they were not in earnest, and preferred the show of success to the acquisition of any real culture. As regards music, Irish language, natural science, and all the other lesser subjects, the sooner they are excluded from the competition the better. The best answers in music knew nothing whatever practically, nor could they apply one word of their theory. In fact, a musical examination without visa voce is perfectly absurd.

The present system makes it far more lucrative to smatter through all these things than to learn the great subjects. Thus it is that boys' time is dissipated, and their brains confused and addled by constant changes of work. If the lesser subjects are not abolished, there should be at least a large minimum struck off in each, so as to deter inferior students. Above all, great credit and special prizes should be given to all very high answering in the greater subjects. For all professional examiners know that every mark gained in any subject beyond the first sixty per cent. is worth three or four times the same number of marks reckoned under forty per cent.

But I must refrain from further detail. If we consider the general working of the examination, the precise limits to which it ties down all the classes, and the impossibility of now getting a boy taught anything at our schools except the Intermediate Course, it seems a pity that the better endowed were not excluded from competing by the Act. For my own part, I feel constrained to recommend schools in England or elsewhere where this enervating system has not penetrated. It may no doubt act as a good stimulus to bad schools, and to a low type of scholars, who had otherwise been subject to no test whatever. To all higher schools, and to the higher class of boys, who desire and deserve a real education in literature and science, this competition is an almost unmitigated evil. To the real schoolmaster, who desires to develop the nature of his boys after his own fashion, and by his own methods, such a system is a death-blow. The day will yet come, when men will look back on the mania for competition in our legislation as the anxious blundering of honest reformers, who tried to cure the occasional abuses of favoritism, by substituting universal hardships, and to raise the tone of lower education by levelling down the higher, by substituting diversity for depth, and by destroying all that freedom and leisure in learning which are the true conditions of solid and lasting culture.

SUPPLEMENTARY REMARKS ON SOME OF THE GREATER ENGLISH SCHOOLS.

It may perhaps be desired that I should say something more particularly concerning the great English schools I visited by way of comparison with those of Ireland. As was already before suggested, this comparison was inadequate to test the whole of the question as to the preference now given by Irish parents to English schools. For in the great schools the fees are confessedly much higher than in Ireland, and consequently the majority of Irish parents are unable to send their sons to them. It did not occur to me to ask for powers to visit smaller and private schools in England, where lower fees are charged, nor is it likely that such an inspection could have been easily accomplished. From the head masters of the great schools, on the contrary, I received not only the greatest hospitality, but every assistance in inquiring into the smallest details of their establishments.

I visited Winchester, Marlborough, Cheltenham, Uppingham, and the great Birmingham and City of London day schools. The above were chosen as representative schools—one the work of centuries, another the creation of a single man, the rest an outcome of the social needs, and the private enterprise of the present day. The Edward VI. school at Birmingham is in its present endowment (£20,000 per annum) out of all comparison with anything in Ireland; so is the City of London school, for it has the endless resources of the Corporation of London available to meet any difficulty. But in them I could study the best intermediate education for the middle, and even lower middle classes in England.

The English schools are not wanting in some of the faults noticeable in this country. The great day schools are, by no means so clean and tidy as might be expected from the habits of the nation, and a considerable reform in this direction would make them much more cheerful, and wholesome for their inmates. A dusty atmosphere cannot possibly be a very healthy one, and the problem of keeping school-room floors clean, and school-room furniture neat, has not been solved by these schools. When the City of London school moves into its new building, I have no doubt the very able and energetic head master will be better able to reform these minor points.

A far graver defect—in fact the most serious defect of modern education, I found to exist in England as in Ireland. This is the confusion of ideas in the minds of boys owing to the multiplicity of subjects which they learn. The evil is not so systematically sanctioned, and heiked, as it is by the intermediate competitions in Ireland, but there are many inducements of the same kind for smattering at diverse things, and consequently the answering even of the English boys was by no means so good as it ought to have been, or as it would have been in the greater subjects twenty years ago. The fundamental mistake seems to be this, that with the proper desire of giving boys general information, and teaching them useful and practical knowledge, there has come in the stupid notion, that this is to be done effectually by pouring these subjects directly into the mind. In the case of young boys it is quite clear that this is perfectly absurd. They require first to be taught how to learn, how to think out a subject consecutively, how to co-ordinate facts, and deduce inferences. Then the acquiring of various knowledge is easy enough, and is done upon principle, and by a rational method. A boy so trained, even if he knows no modern or practical subjects, ought to outstrip easily in the race of life those who have been taught all manner of facts without attaining them rationally. Thus the boy who has French and German and Italian thrust upon him at so many hours per week, is perfectly helpless in acquiring any real knowledge of them, when compared with a boy who has been taught Latin scientifically, and has thus learned the principles of grammar, and the real meaning of forms and of constructions. Nay even in English the same thing applies. We do not find that all the modern study of English, all the subtle analysis and psychological talk about English sentences and constructions, has any effect upon the minds of boys who have not studied, in some other language possessed of a real grammar, what all these speculations mean. Of course Latin is the most perfect for the purpose; the forms are the most distinct, the syntax the most logical. But even German or Italian will show what cases and tenses mean, and will expound the laws of grammar in a way unattainable to the student of English alone. Hence to all boys who study Latin, English grammar is mere waste of time, and to all those who do not, the study of the modern English Grammar will replace it in a very inadequate and unsatisfactory manner. If the study of English, and for similar reasons that of natural science, were struck out of our school teaching, perhaps our boys would lose but little, and gain what is beyond everything else in importance—the habit of studying thoroughly what they attempt. Whether the particular economy here suggested is the best or not, may be doubtful; the principle involved was admitted by every thoughtful schoolmaster (except Mr. Thring) with whom I talked on the subject. They all agreed that the boys of the last generation who learned no English, but Latin thoroughly, were at least able to write purer and better English than those who are now wearied with artificial rules and distinctions about their mother tongue.

But even still the English schools are far more favourably circumstanced than the Irish, as regards classes. In the first place there are many good preparatory schools. The children begin early, and come to the higher schools with some knowledge. Again they remain longer at school. The sixth form boys are generally in a stage unknown in Ireland—boys of 17–19 who know far more than enough to enter an University, but who remain as prefects in their school, perfecting their classics to a degree unknown in Ireland. In fact their knowledge of grammar and of composition is complete before they appear at their University.

UPPERMER (March 8–9, 1880).—This school has been practically created by the present master, Rev. E. Thring, it being before only an obscure grammar school, though of old foundation. The endowment is considered in England very small, but now amounts to about £1,200 per annum. It shows the curious confidence of the English public in a good master, and the enormous pecuniary profits attending a school, that a large number of houses perfectly useless for any other purpose have been recently built there for boarding houses. This outlay, a distinct speculation on the part of the masters and builders, cannot amount to less than £30,000, and is probably much more. The houses are too far separated from the school, and the boys in the head master's house have, I think, a great advantage over the rest. At present there are at the school (counting a preparatory school) 340 boys, who pay not less than £100 each, their school fees (without boarding) being £40, so that the board of trustees has about £13,000 per annum to allocate and disburse. This puts it out of comparison with any Irish school. The assistant masters get salaries far higher than most head masters in Ireland, most of them have besides the profits of a boarding house. Hence these posts are held by men not more able, perhaps, than many Irish assistant masters, but settled men who make teaching their profession, who will only change for good promotion, and whose regularity and interest in filling their houses make them vastly superior as teachers. I took up and examined senior classes in classics, and also read a good many of their compositions and translations. I found the latter far superior to those produced in Ireland, though in most cases the boys were not so clever, or ready to answer. The whole style of the school far exceeded any of the Irish schools, especially in that every boy had a little study fitted up with taste and elegance. Of course the gymnasia and play-grounds, were excellent. The work-shop, the gardens given to the boys to cultivate, and the careful musical training under a first-rate master (with £700 per annum) were very interesting. I heard a choir of little boys singing the choruses of St. Paul with much precision and full intelligence. Thus with a moderate endowment, a good English master can obtain control of a great income, and meet all the outlay of a great school.

This kind of training, combined with the higher training in sports and games, which produces the perfect English gentleman, is one which requires an outlay of time and money impracticable to the mass of the Irish gentry. They are anxious to push their boys into life; they long to see them independent, and working to earn their bread. Hence it is that we cannot expect from Irish schools the refinement of scholarship we find in England. For even the younger boys come into contact with this higher teaching; the masters feel bound to impart it, and thus the English public school remains and will remain a kind of training place to which no nation in Europe, not to say the Irish, can show a parallel. It is, therefore, not the least surprising that Irish parents who can afford it should choose this system for the education of their boys. No foolish talk about patriotism, no idle rant about absenteeism can turn any conscientious parent from studying above all his children's welfare, and if he visits the great public schools of England, he will certainly be impressed with their enormous advantages. The majority of our professional men's children are, however, not born with means sufficient for this education; they have been and will be educated in Ireland, and for them a sound education, though shorter and less refined, may well be provided by the endowments in Ireland.

CHELTEMHAM AND MARLBOROUGH (March 16-21, 1880).—These two great modern schools may be considered together on account of the similarity of their foundation. They were created some forty years ago, to meet the want of first rate boarding schools beyond the old public schools, at a more reasonable cost, and with more attention to actual work. The necessary funds were originally subscribed by a number of private gentlemen, and so valuable did the shares at Cheltenham become that until it was prevented by legislation, they were sold (like Irish bank shares) at 100 per cent. above par. Even now the temporary ownership of shares, which involve a right of nomination, is rented at the rate of 10 per cent. at either school. At Clifton, at Malvern, and elsewhere through England, the same sort of speculation has met with the same pecuniary success.

But quite apart from this, these modern creations have extended and utilised, for the bulk of the better classes, all that is best and most honourable in the public school training of England. Yet with all due regard to economy this is not done for less than double, or nearly double the fees charged by the royal schools in Ireland. To the £60 direct fees charged in Ireland corresponds a charge of about £95 in England. There is in addition the expense of travelling, and those various outlays for the comforts and refinements of school-life, which are natural and ordinary in English schools, and which parents acquiesce in readily as necessities, whereas an Irish schoolmaster proposing such things would be charged with extravagance and even with dishonesty. Thus a sixth form boy at Marlborough thinks it natural to buy the newer standard works on the authors he is reading, or the better histories and books upon classical archaeology. In the boys' studies here, as at Cheltenham or Uppingham, the visitor sees a small but solid library, pretty photographs and pictures, often the lightest ornaments of a little drawing-room. All these things cost money, but without money culture, at least modern culture, seems unattainable.

If we turn to the special features which distinguish these schools, we find the most important to be that of situation. The College at Cheltenham is in a town, and in close relation to it. It is certainly one of the cleanest and best kept towns in England, and therefore in the world. The playground, though surrounded by houses, some of them boarding houses, is vast and in every way suitable. The racquet court, five court, and gymnasium are all commodious and well planned. Even the want of a proper plunge bath, which will soon be remedied, is partly met by the supply of public baths in the town. It may be added to these advantages, that the masters' boarding-houses are close to the College. This is not the case with all the houses at either Uppingham or Marlborough, and it is certainly a great hardship for little boys to be obliged to come in before breakfast to early school or prayers in cold or wet weather, often a distance of half a mile.

If Cheltenham College derives benefits by its proximity to a considerable town in these respects, they are counterbalanced by distinct disadvantages. I could not ascertain in my brief visit whether it affords such dangers to senior boys as towns certainly afford in Ireland, but this I know, that owing to the hospitality of Cheltenham people, and their ample leisure—for no one there seems to do any thing—many boys are invited out, and so come in contact with a very luxurious and thoroughly idle society. The very example of a large number of independent people living for the sake of amusement is anything but stimulating to an idle boy.

In this respect Marlborough has the advantage. The town is so small and insignificant that the College may be regarded as in the country. On the one side are high grass downs, rather a park than a playground, in which successive cricket grounds are terraced, and on which not only football and hockey, but even rifle shooting can find ample room. On the other is Severnake Forest, affording with its birds, its insects, and its plants a perpetual study to the quieter boys, and shady walks when the downs are parched with summer heat.

The original foundation of this College, moreover, gives special advantages to the sons of the clergy, and thus a large proportion of the boys come from sober and studious homes—a fact which has contributed, not less than able and efficient management, to develop the spirit of work, and the respect for intellectual endurance, in which this school is remarkable.

Both colleges have this peculiarity, as compared with the older public schools, that they pay special attention to the competitors for all departments of the public service, and thus the Woolwich classes, and Sandhurst classes, and Civil Service classes are in both an important feature. I confess that to me this special training, though doubtless necessary to the success of any modern school, is no great recommendation. The bifurcation of modern and classical departments works real mischief, for I have known many boys who had taken up the modern side merely to avoid Greek, bitterly repenting this early mischoice when a change of circumstances led them to seek for an university degree.

am convinced that up to the age of fifteen all boys should be taught the main subjects of a liberal education, and among these should be Greek. A change of resolve as to a profession would not then entail upon the boy the tax of beginning again the rudiments which he should have learned in early youth. For it is not possible in most cases to predict what career a boy may adopt.

From what I saw of the modern department at Cheltenham, I thought that a good many of the boys must have entered it from a desire to escape the classical studies, but the working of this department was clearly on the lines of a first-rate coaching establishment, to meet the requirements of public examinations. In this respect the college has been extremely successful. I paid more attention to the classical side at Marlborough, and found, as at Uppingham, that the teaching of the higher forms was very superior to anything we have in Ireland. But the earlier training at good preparatory schools contributes also to this result. In certain departments of knowledge, such as classical geography, I found the boys backward, but this was justified by the master on the bold and sound plea, that as everything cannot now be taught, such subjects as may be afterwards most easily acquired are best omitted. This plea showed an honest and practical view of the present condition of education. I wish it were more largely applied, especially to the subject of English, which has attained undue and mischievous proportions, owing to its convenience as a subject for State examinations.

But both these and the other English schools were inferior to the Irish schools in not cultivating a habit of free and elegant vis-à-vis translation from Greek and Latin. This habit is perfectly compatible with the most accurate scholarship, nay, is generally its most perfect index. It is, moreover, the only sound preparation for young boys in the invaluable acquirement of prompt and ready utterance,—the first condition of good public speaking. This kind of training is, I know, not in fashion with Englishmen, it is vulgarly identified with mere glibness; stammering translation has even become so fashionable, with its affectation of accuracy, as to infect the ordinary conversation of many scholars, especially at Cambridge. All this weight of authority does not shake my growing conviction, based on many years examining of both English and Irish schoolboys, that a properly conducted vis-à-vis examination is not only far the shortest, but the most thorough way of testing real knowledge. Apart from this it tests the quality of ready utterance far better and more soundly than recitations or debates, and for this purpose it is not sufficiently practised at English schools.

WINCHESTER (March 25-4, 1880).—Nothing can be more impressive than the whole aspect and surroundings of the college at Winchester. Separated only by a road from the close of the great Cathedral, with its picturesque ecclesiastical residences overshadowed by the gigantic church, provided with mansions for a provost and fellows, who hold splendid sinecures; rivaling in beauty and quietness the best colleges at Oxford, with their cloisters and chapels and choristers, their towers and peals of bells, their portraits of ancient worthies, betraying in its very language, in its 'moods' and 'hills' in its 'domum' and its 'cloister-time' a long and splendid history since the days of its great founder—this venerable institution is above all others suited to impress the foreigner with the stability and the greatness of the English school system. There are indeed boarding houses, which are kept upon the usual modern system, but the college which contains the scholars now elected by open competition, and almost completely educated by the foundation,—this it is which naturally attracts our attention. The papers set for the entrance competition are very difficult, and the fact that they can be answered by boys of fourteen shows how very superior the English training must be. At the Irish schools such papers would be perfectly useless from their difficulty, and would reduce all the candidates to the same level. But I noticed in examining a class that many of the boys were very pale, and had distressing coughs; others showed an abnormal development of brain, and altogether the general appearance of the scholars, though interesting and suggestive of talent, was not normal or cheerful. Indeed it was not difficult to pick out in the class those who had succeeded by competition, and those who had been allowed to live more natural and healthy lives.

I cannot think that the curious traditional roteness of the scholar's life at Winchester is likely to suit boys rendered delicate by their training. The appointments of the dormitories seemed not to have been changed for centuries, and were of the coarsest description. As housemaids are not permitted within the college, their duties are performed by men, indeed often by the younger boys as fags for the elder. It can easily be imagined what kind of order and neatness is produced by this class of attendance. At their meals the scholars are attended by the choristers, dressed in gray liveries, and nothing can be more picturesque than the old dining-hall, a very grand and rude apartment, peopled by nothing but boys both as guests and attendants.

I read many of the compositions of the elder boys, and was much struck with their smartness and elegance. Indeed while the material appliances are so rude and antique, everything else about the college tends to refinement and grace of manners. I was informed that the former evils of the prefect's rule, with its cruel punishments and its crying injustice, were rapidly passing away, and that purer morals prevailed with milder laws. If the senior prefect possess a solid and humane character he has great power for good in the college, but one shudders to think of little boys exposed to the tyranny of a harsh and cruel nature, at the very time of its life when cruelty often seems an enjoyment, and injustice a delight.

Nevertheless, one cannot wish that any sweeping reform should produce sudden changes in so venerable and so characteristic an institution. It were like that ignorant and cruel restoration of old buildings, which cuts away the work of historic hands for the sake of baser ornament or vulgar convenience.

THE CITY OF LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM DAY SCHOOLS.—It has already been indicated how the wealth of these foundations precludes any fair comparison with Irish schools. But as to the intellectual standard of the boys, it appeared that the lower social scale of the parents had prevented the early training so conspicuous in the public schools, and hence the answering was not above a moderate level. The head master of the City of London School particularly pointed out to me the great ignorance of the boys sent to him, when tested by the easiest possible entrance examination. He considered this evil to arise from small and obscure preparatory schools in London, managed by incompetent persons, where the boys were taught nothing soundly. We discussed the expediency of having all such establishments subject to some supervision, and requiring some license, and it appeared that in this class of schools some authoritative inspection was not less urgently required than in Ireland. The majority of the boys did not intend to adopt a classical or university education, but all those who showed peculiar talent in that direction were encouraged with prizes, and their course made easy both by excellent higher teaching and substantial scholarships. The buildings, as I have said, were neither commodious, nor by any means clean, but they were condemned, and did not deserve any outlay previous to the removal of the school.

The KING EDWARD VI. SCHOOL at Birmingham is rather a great system of schools, including primary and girls' departments, than a mere place of intermediate education. One thousand eight hundred children receive instruction daily in the various branches of this magnificent foundation, which has buildings in several parts of the town. Here I found the very same difference in intelligence I had often noted in Ireland between the boys in the primary, and those in the higher departments. The former, who were taught a few subjects thoroughly, as at our National schools, were exceedingly quick and well trained. It was a great pleasure to examine them. The boys in the classical department were on the contrary stragglers with a variety of subjects, and were comparatively dull and uneven in answering, often knowing a difficult point and yet stumbling at some elementary truth; and this not for want of the very best teaching, but because of it, and because they had got too much of it in too many subjects.

I cannot do better than close my report with the reiteration of this, the most signal fact brought out with remarkable consistency throughout the whole of my inspection.

I have the honour to be,

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

J. P. MAHAFFY.

APPENDIX B.

GENERAL REPORT OF MR. HUGH KEYS MOORE, SCH., T.C.D., INSPECTOR OF PRIMARY SCHOOLS.

30, TRINITY COLLEGE,
Dublin, 4th May, 1890.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN—I have the honour to submit to you my report on the condition of certain primary schools, which, for the purposes set forth in your instructions, I visited and examined during the past six months.

These schools included some under each of the following systems of management, viz:—The National Board, the Christian Brothers, the Erasmus Smith's Board, the Incorporated Society, the Society of Friends, the Church Education Society; and also a number, which are more or less independent, and subject to the regulations of none of the above-mentioned bodies.

As to my mode of inspection, I may state that, in schools of which I had not previously an intimate knowledge, I considered it necessary to examine every class, where time would at all permit it, and, in all cases, I examined at least three classes, choosing the highest, lowest, and an intermediate one; besides this, I availed myself of every opportunity of observing the discipline of the school, and the means used by the teachers in endeavouring to impart instruction to their pupils.

It is absolutely necessary for the efficient working of a primary school that the teachers should be properly trained, that there should be a thorough and minute system of inspection, and a definite and fixed programme of instruction. It is to the observance of these three principles that the prosperous condition of the National schools is due, and any fault found in a school may be immediately traced to the neglect or improper carrying out of one or more of them.

National Schools.

The teachers in National schools have been in most cases educated in such schools themselves, and so have an accurate acquaintance with the system, besides which, many of them have gone through a thorough course of training in the Marlborough-street Training Schools.

They seemed to me, on the whole, an intelligent and competent class of persons, and much superior, as teachers, to those of the Church Education Society.

The system of inspection is effective for two reasons:—

(1.) A large sum of money in the shape of results fees depends on the result of the Inspector's examination; a good teacher, in a contributory union, being able to make from 10s. to £1 by each scholar.

(2.) It is most minute, since the mark of every pupil in each subject must be recorded in the report; thus the only way in which the system could fail would be through the incompetency or neglect of District Inspectors.

With reference to National schools, Mr. Scott Oswald, Esq., reports—"Much of the value of inspection depends upon the individuals who are employed as Inspectors, and its morale—not its least important aspect—affects very much upon them. Their influence reaches to the teachers and through them to the children, and may do much good or may do harm." "I could see very few traces of such influences." "The manners, ways, and general tone observable among the teachers did not convey to my mind that they had been for years in contact with courteous gentlemen, they did not seem to comprehend that one could combine all the respect and kindness due to them, with the strict performance of an official duty." While I have pleasure in reporting that, in many schools under the National Board, I observed, both in teachers and pupils, unmistakable signs of such influences, there is, in this respect, still much room for improvement.

The general tone is undoubtedly lower than in corresponding schools in England, and I concur with Mr. Coward in attributing the deficiency, in part, to the Inspectors. The English Inspectors are, as a rule, of high University distinction, for two reasons this is not the case in Ireland—(1) The salaries in Ireland are lower, and the duties more arduous. (2) The course of examination for Irish Inspectors includes so many subjects, and requires such a limited acquaintance with them, that the University candidate has no better chance of success than the National school teacher.

There is one rule which ought to be strictly adhered to by all Inspectors, that is never to reprove a teacher in the presence of the pupils. It is when the examination is over that reproofs should be administered, and suggestions for improvement made, thus the teacher would see that they were not the mere outbursts of temper, but the result of a consideration for the best interests of the school.

The programme of instruction is as definite and fixed as could be desired. It seems to me to be most admirably drawn out, giving proper weight to reading, writing, and arithmetic, while the more advanced subjects are by no means neglected. The doctrine that the eye is the best teacher of spelling, is acknowledged by requiring the children to transcribe, on slates and paper, passages from the reading book, while the excellent plan is adopted of compelling the pupils to learn by rote, a certain number of pieces of poetry for the annual examination of the Inspector. These two regulations are very important, and might, with advantage, be enforced in other schools.

Paying teachers by result fees has had a beneficial influence in improving the reading, writing, and elementary arithmetic. Owing to the excellent plan adopted by the Board, of supplying the inspectors with printed questions—to be worked on paper by the scholars—it has had no bad effect on advanced arithmetic, geography has suffered, and there is a most lamentable ignorance of the meanings of the words and sentences which occur in the reading books. The latter defect can be remedied by a more searching examination by the Inspectors, in what is called in the programme the "subject matter" of the lessons.

Christian Brothers' Schools.

Of the schools conducted by the Christian Brothers, I visited and examined seven.

These schools are carried on according to a fixed system, and the chief point of difference between them is, that in some the boys—owing to local circumstances—remain longer at school than in others; in such schools, more advanced mathematics, science, music, and drawing, are taught, and sometimes French and elementary Classics.

While the Christian Brothers devote their principal energies to elementary education, they find time to give advanced instruction to those boys who show special abilities. Many of their pupils are thus fitted for high positions in after life.

The system carried out differs from that of National schools in that the greater part of the teaching—particularly in the junior rooms—is done by unpaid monitors, in many cases but little older than their pupils. Now, this would appear to be a very faulty system, and in most circumstances it would prove a failure, because such monitors could not command the respect which is necessary to maintain order, without which it is impossible to teach. However, the influence of the "Brothers" is so great that one of them can perfectly control the 100 boys under his charge, and thus the duty of the monitors is reduced to teaching alone. I believe the efficiency of the schools would be increased by the employment of regular paid monitors. In most cases, the want of funds renders this impossible.

In Cork and Limerick, where the Brothers have numerous wealthy supporters, paid monitors are employed, and with the greatest advantage, these schools being the best Christian Brothers' schools which I visited.

The inspection is carried out by Brothers who are regularly appointed for, and experienced in that work, and, so far as I could judge, it is both minute and thorough.

There is a regular programme of instruction, which, though differing in detail from that of the National Board, is very similar in its ultimate object. The subjects specially well taught are writing, reading, and arithmetic, the boys being unusually smart and accurate in making up long money totals.

It is worthy of remark that the pupils spend from three to four hours a day out of school at their home lessons, and at their exercises, the necessity of which is beyond all praise, and I have in my possession papers worked for me by the boys at St. Mary's-place School, Dublin, which, for good penmanship and neatness, would do credit to the boys in any school, whether intermediate or primary. Where advanced subjects are taught, I found the boys—as a rule—well and intelligently instructed, so far as they had gone. This was most apparent in Euclid and algebra, which are much better taught by the Christian Brothers than in National schools.

Vocal music is always taught, generally by the Tonic Sol Fa method, and there are no schools in Ireland where better singing is to be heard. As to religious instruction, there is no more time spent at it than in National schools, but the reading books contain numerous extracts of a religious nature, which would unfit them for use in a mixed school; while at certain hours, as the clock strikes, the children cross themselves and say short prayers. With reference to the opinions of the Christian Brothers on religious instruction, I quote from the preface to their Fourth Reading Book:—

"As religion, considered even in an intellectual point of view, apart from its necessity and importance, has always appeared to them (the Christian Brothers) an object of essential beauty, brightening and elevating every subject with which it is associated, touching the deepest chords of feeling in the human heart, and thereby exalting and refining the taste, whilst it purifies and strengthens the moral energies, many of the extracts will be found to breathe its spirit or inculcate its principles.

"Their story-book will thus represent their own opinions on the subject of education and embody the spirit of their system, by presenting religion, not in an isolated form, but in its natural connection with science and literature."

"It is only in such a course of training—on based on the principles and pervaded by the spirit of religion—that the Brothers of the Christian Schools, emboldened by long experience, venture to assert that the ardour and generosity of the youthful mind will find their legitimate direction and appropriate object."

Now, while declining to pass any judgment on these opinions, it is only fair to state that they are fully carried out, and with the very best results. It is a special feature of the schools that the pupils take the liveliest interest in their studies, and the intelligence and eagerness to answer, shown by them at an examination, is truly gratifying, and proves that a due balance is maintained between mechanical and intellectual teaching. The school buildings are by far the best of those which I inspected. The rooms are lofty, spacious, and well furnished, while the out-offices are constructed according to the most approved methods—a thing which is sadly neglected by other Boards.

The Christian Brothers seemed to me, more than any others, to have studied the science of teaching, and their ability, as teachers, is of the highest order.

The discipline maintained is almost perfect, as there is prompt obedience, without any sign of fear. The changes of classes are performed with order, with celerity, and without needless display.

Erasmus Smith Schools.

Of the Erasmus Smith English schools, six were on my list, and these were admirably chosen to give me a general knowledge of the system carried out by the Board, and its practical results, as they included some of the largest, and some of the smallest, with regard to numbers; while with regard to situation, some were in towns, others in the country. I have before stated that, for the success of a primary system of education, it is necessary that there should be a thorough and minute system of inspection, and a definite and fixed programme of instruction, and I would now wish to show how far these principles are carried out, and in what particulars they are neglected. The Inspector's report sheets are too indefinite, for, in them the condition of instruction is represented by such words as "good," "bad," "indifferent," &c., which are not sufficient, unless supported by figures, showing the number of children who passed in each subject. I think the Board might even regulate the number of questions to be given in each subject. This number should not be less than five to each child. Only one Inspector, Mr. Rodkin, is employed, and it may be said that, in these circumstances, such formal regulations are unnecessary. This may be answered by referring to the past history of these schools. Mr. Abraham, Assistant Commissioner in 1856, reports—"Of the Erasmus Smith English schools, I may say, as will appear from my reports, that they are miserably inefficient." Now, at that time there was a regular paid Inspector, but from the fact that a new Inspector was appointed, in consequence of the Assistant Commissioner's Reports (see Minutes of Evidence, 2825), it is clear that the Board had but little idea of the then condition of their schools.

There is no programme of instruction, and the teachers have complained to me that while Mr. Rodkin—as far as they could judge by his questions—examined in a fixed course, yet they had no intimation of that course, at least in writing. In this Mr. Rodkin is not in fault, as it is the duty not of the inspector but of the Board to prepare a programme. It seems to me an unreasonable thing that the experience and ability of the gentlemen who form the English or the Irish National School Boards should be entirely ignored, as nothing would be easier than to adapt the inspection forms and programmes of either one or other Board, or at least modifications of them.

Therefore, I cannot state that the schools are properly looked after by the Board, and I would strongly recommend that the inspectors' report sheets should be revised, and that a standard be prepared, and a printed copy sent to each school. The actual condition of the schools was, on the whole, satisfactory, so far as the instruction is concerned (though by no means so good as it might be, if more carefully managed). This is due, not to the regulations of the Board, but to the conscientiousness and energy of Mr. Rodkin (who has to do the double work of inspection and organization), and should the inspection fall into hands of a less competent person, the schools would most probably relapse into the miserable condition in which they were found in 1856. The special feature of Erasmus Smith schools is the excellent manner in which spelling and geography are taught. In these subjects, the pupils answered as well as, if not better than, those of any other school which I examined. The method of teaching spelling is principally by dictation, and the peculiar plan adopted here is that the mistakes made by each child are written in copy-books, kept for the purpose, and then they are examined from these copy-books, both by the teachers and inspector. Now while testifying to the excellent results of this plan, so far as spelling is concerned, and while recommending it to small schools, I am convinced that it is by far too elaborate for large schools, and would entail too much work on the teachers. In comparison with the plan of "transcribing," adopted by the National Board, its elaborateness completely overweighs its special advantages. The answering in geography was excellent, but I fear that the time spent at it is taken from arithmetic, which is very much inferior to that of National schools. Here we see the need of a standard of education, which would maintain a just balance between the ordinary subjects, a thing which, it seems to me, is almost impossible for one man to maintain, without the aid of a standard, drawn out by the experienced men who ought to form the school boards. The school-rooms were generally in good condition, though the teachers' apartments were very often much neglected, and were evidently considered a matter of secondary importance. A gratuity—not exceeding £5—to the teacher depends on the general report of the Inspector. This gratuity might with advantage be increased, and it should be made to depend on the percentage of passes at the examinations. As to the absolute usefulness of these schools to the country, I can only, of course, judge of the six which I visited; these serve merely as parochial schools, but they are much superior to the schools ordinarily called by that name, though not, in my opinion, so useful as National schools. Three, of the six, had not an attendance which would entitle them to any material assistance under the "National" regulations; in such cases, the Erasmus Smith grant is of great service.

Incorporated Society's Schools.

The Incorporated Society have the management of two distinct classes of schools, namely, boarding schools and day schools. Of the former, I visited and examined five, viz. —Pooeoke, Primrose Grange, and Farra boys' schools, and Celbridge and Rosecommon girls' schools. The course of instruction in the boys' schools is thorough English and advanced mathematics, in fact, the boys in the senior class at Farra and Primrose Grange are taught a course of mathematics, which is little short of that for scholarship in Trinity College, and the proficiency shown by them in that course was surprising, and superior to that of any other schools in Ireland, whether Intermediate or Primary. The majority of the boys are on the foundation, and receive board and instruction gratuitously for three years, after which time they may compete for admittance to Santry school, where they receive another year's training, and in many cases gain entrance to Trinity College as seniors, thus winning by their ability, a free education from their childhood until they leave the University. Now, while the pupils are so well grounded in English and mathematics, as many of them make their way to the University, it seems a pity that elementary Classics should not be included in the programme of instruction. Many cases have come under my own observation where pupils from Santry, who entered in the first rank as mathematicians, had to spend the best part of their Freshman years in making up sufficient Latin and Greek to carry them through the ordinary examinations, thus giving their competitors, who could devote their entire time to mathematics, an enormous advantage. It may be said that some classical knowledge is given; but the importance of the annual examination is so great to both teacher and pupil, that any subject which is not included in that examination is practically neglected. I am sure that Latin and Greek grammar, and, at least, two classical authors might, without materially interfering with the English or science courses, be taught in the three years which are spent in the schools.

In the girls' schools the English education is of a high order, and well suited to qualify them as teachers in elementary schools.

The annual examination, of which notice is given, is carried on by a deputation sent by the Board, and is confined to the foundation pupils; thus that part of inspection which relates to discipline, classification of pupils, cleanliness, &c., is totally neglected. There should be a regular paid Inspector appointed, who should visit without notice, and report accurately on the working of the school, cleanliness of the house, &c. This fault was found with the Incorporated Society by the Assistant Commissioner, in 1857, and the appointment of an Inspector was then recommended. In every school I visited, the effects of this want were apparent; in Pooeoke College, the non-foundation boys were much behind the foundation boys; in Farra, the non-foundation boys were almost the most backward, for their ages, that I examined, and the house and out-offices showed very great neglect; while in Primrose Grange, where a large number of boarders are kept, the fact that there was not a single bath in the house showed that it was not inspected by a person acquainted with the ordinary necessities of an educational establishment. Until this suggestion is carried out, it cannot be considered that the Incorporated Society are entirely fulfilling their trust, though the greatest credit is due to them, in every other respect.

The day schools are a very little better than ordinary parochial schools, though the teachers seemed of a somewhat higher class. They are entirely in the hands of the local clergymen, which, in itself, is a sufficient reason for their comparative inefficiency, as those gentlemen cannot be supposed to have that knowledge of primary education, which is only acquired by studying different systems, and comparing different schools. The want of inspection is here more apparent than in the boarding schools. There is no definite programme of instruction.

Society of Friends' Schools.

The six schools, conducted by the "Society of Friends," which I examined, included four Primary and two Intermediate ones. The special characteristics were cleanliness, excellence of moral training, properly paid teachers, and conscientious and intelligent managing committees. It is hardly necessary to say that, with such characteristics, the schools were in a highly satisfactory condition, yet they fail in some points, and the most important failure I believe to be the want of a thorough system of inspection. At present, a different person examines each school, and so no comparison can be drawn between them. All the schools should be examined, once or twice a year, by a professional Inspector, and a detailed report, including the average marks of each class, in each subject, should be sent to the school committees, with a general report, arranging the schools in order of merit. This plan would create a healthy spirit of competition, which is very much wanting under the present system.

It is a marked example of the care which the "Friends" take for the education of all connected with them, that they have a school expressly for the children of parents who, from breach of discipline, have been excluded from the membership of the Society.

Church Education Society's Schools.

The Church Education Society's Schools are far inferior to the National, or Erasmus Smith schools. They are but little use to the country, in their present condition, and they should be immediately placed under the control of an efficient board. In them may be seen all descriptions of abuses: inefficient teachers, useless inspections, with misleading reports, a badly-graduated standard of instruction, and inadequate salaries to teachers. The causes of these abuses are numerous; among the most important are—the want of money, and the ignorance of the local clergymen, in matters of education. It should also be stated that, while the reports of former Commissions have been carefully considered and acted upon, with the greatest advantage, by the Erasmus Smith's Board, they have been totally ignored by the Church Education Society, so far as I could judge, and their schools are now little better than they were in 1857.

The objects of the Church Education Society, the Erasmus Smith's Board, and the Incorporated Society, in reference to primary education, are very similar; and, I have no doubt that, if these three societies would co-operate, they might employ the same inspectors, and use the same standard of instruction, with great advantage. Proper care might thus be taken of all these schools, which, from paucity in numbers, or conscientious objections of managers, receive no assistance from the National System.

Convent Schools.

Of Convent schools, I visited and examined two not in connexion with the National Board, and three in connexion with it. In all these, the zeal and industry of the Nuns were beyond all praise. The school-rooms were in excellent order, and beautifully clean, and the girls neat and tidy, while it was easy to see, by their conduct, that they regarded their teachers not only with respect, but with affection. In cases where boardless were kept, the household arrangements were nearly perfect, while the lavatories and out-offices were built on the most approved principles. I believe, no persons are better suited than nuns to take charge of educational establishments for Roman Catholic children, though, from their position of isolation, none receive more benefit from inspection than they do; and, therefore, I would strongly advise that the Convent schools, which are not at present under the Board, should avail themselves, as soon as possible, of its numerous advantages.

Schools under "The Commissioners of Education"

I examined some schools nominally under the control of the Commissioners, but as they had no features in common, the only general remark I can make about them is, that they are much neglected by that Board, whose connexion with them is limited to the sending of circulars to be filled by the teachers. Some of the schools have been transferred to the National Board; "The Commissioners of Education" should transfer the remainder, if possible, without delay.

General Remarks.

Of the remaining schools, there is but little to be said, which has not been included in my detailed reports, and, indeed, it would be almost impossible to classify them, as they present all varieties, from purely primary to intermediate, and from total imbecility to comparative prosperity. As an example of the influence of an inspector on the condition of education, I may state that the schools examined by one inspector always showed the same faults, and always the same advantages. It seems almost possible to know the state of a school, simply from a knowledge of the opinions of its inspector.

Having now reported on all the various educational systems, which came under my notice in the discharge of my duties, it only remains to draw attention to certain failings of most ordinary occurrence in schools, and to make suggestions as to their remedies.

In the condition of premises, the most common abuse was the improper state of the out-offices, they were, with very few exceptions, built on wrong principles—that is to say, in such a way as to render their cleanliness a matter of great difficulty, in some cases, almost an impossibility. In this respect, the National were not any better than other schools, though it is in the power of the Board to refuse grants, in cases where the premises are not in proper condition. Managers do not pay sufficient attention to the neatness and comfort of their schools, they are generally quite satisfied if the roofs are sound and the walls fairly clean. Too much weight can hardly be given to this particular, and I have no doubt that the proverbial carelessness of the Irish people, with respect to the comfort and cleanliness of their homes, may be traced, in a great measure, to neglect of these things in schools. These remarks do not apply to the Christian Brothers' or Nuns' schools, where nothing is left undone to inculcate principles of tidiness and order.

While recently on a visit in the Eastern Counties, England, I took the opportunity of inspecting some schools in one of the large towns, and the arrangement of the desks in them pleased me very much. Instead of being placed, all together, in the centre of the room, they were in three or four rows, parallel to the side walls of the school, thus leaving a large vacant space in the middle. Again, between the ends of each desk (or of each second desk, according to the size of the classes), a space was left, in which was a curtain-bar and curtains, which could be drawn or not, at pleasure, thus having the children either isolated in classes, or all together. There was ample room in the middle space for teachers, black-boards, &c. The advantages of this simple contrivance are numerous and obvious, and its simplicity and inexpensiveness are not the least of them.

It has been my duty to draw attention to the misleading reports, which I met with in many school minute books, and I would here state what, in my opinion, is a chief cause of them. It is the neglect of the inspector to take proper precautions for the prevention of "copying." Children, no matter how carefully trained, will not look upon it in the same light as teachers and examiners do, and thus it becomes the inspector's duty to make it impossible for the children to assist one another, during the examination. In arithmetic, most failures would result from the neglect of preventing "copying," and in this subject the majority of schools, where such precautions are not taken, showed the greatest inefficiency.

The proper method is to give separate sums of equal difficulty to each child; this may easily be done, without any additional trouble to an examiner of ordinary tact. It is utterly impossible so to separate the pupils—except in very large school-rooms, with very few pupils—that they could not copy, and the plan of putting them back to back is in my opinion equally useless.

The National Inspectors, more than any others, study this important particular, and, consequently, their schools are much better in arithmetic than those examined by less experienced persons.

In grammar, the chief failing is that it is taught too mechanically, children, who are able to parse difficult sentences, having little idea of what it all means, and never dreaming that it has any application whatever to ordinary conversation. I believe it to be almost impossible for a teacher thoroughly to understand English grammar, without a knowledge of that of some other language, and, for this purpose, none is more suitable than the Latin. If the teacher does not understand grammar, how can it be expected that the pupils will do so?

This is an additional reason why the Incorporated Society should have elementary classics taught in their boarding schools, as large numbers of their pupils become teachers in after life.

History, where taught—in commercial and better class primary schools—seemed to be dealt with in a very unsystematic and unsuccessful manner. The ground-work of any lasting knowledge of history must be an accurate acquaintance with the succession of kings, dates of their accession, and Houses to which they belong. The succession of kings might be taught in rhyme, even in infant schools.

In teaching a class history, the first thing to be done is to fix the portion to be learned for the term. The next thing is to teach the succession and dates of kings, in that portion, with one or two striking events in each reign; finally, histories may be put into the pupils' hands to be read at home or in class, and questioned on by the teachers. Of course, in a high class intermediate school, the duty of a teacher is much more than mere questioning, but we cannot expect in the teachers of primary or commercial schools, that knowledge of history, ancient and modern, and, indeed, of literature, which is absolutely necessary, in order to set a boy or girl on the straight road to an intelligent and useful knowledge of this important subject.

The effect of the want of a standard of instruction is very apparent in geography. Much valuable time is wasted endeavouring to teach children the names and situation of towns, rivers, &c., in every part of the world. The short time for which the majority of children remain at primary schools renders such an endeavour fruitless, the result being that the pupils are quite as ignorant of places in Ireland as they are of those in Africa or Australia. When a knowledge is given of the form and motions of the earth, of the general distribution of land and water on its surface, and of the details of the maps of England, Ireland, and Scotland, little more can be given, without interfering with more useful subjects.

It is impossible to estimate the amount of information which may be conveyed to the minds of children by well-chosen and instructive pictures, hung on the walls of the schoolrooms. Such pictures are to be seen in very few schools, though they could be procured for a small sum, and would serve to decorate as well as to instruct.

In many of the schools, which I visited, the average attendances were very small; it is impossible to provide as thorough a training in such schools as in those where large numbers attend. Assuming that as good a master can be employed—which is seldom the case—it is improbable that a teacher should take the same interest in teaching half a dozen children, in the corner of a large room, as he would in superintending and teaching a large number. These schools should—where possible—be amalgamated. This would not only improve the condition of instruction, but would diminish the expenditure on repairs, paying of inspectors, teachers, &c. I believe that but little good can be done to the Endowed Schools, until some system of amalgamation is carried out. In the city of Limerick, there is an excellent building, well situated in Hartestown-street, and suitable for the accommodation of large numbers of boys and girls, within a few minutes' walk stands Villiers' School, suitable for about 100 boys and girls, while, in one of the worst lanes of the city is to be found the Cathedral Grammar School (so called), dragging out a miserable existence, with some dozen scholars. Now, if these three schools were collected in Hartestown-street, there might be formed, with proper management, a first class primary school, with intermediate classes, where boys could be prepared for the higher examinations, and, thus, Limerick would be supplied with a school, which could compete with any in Ireland. A full discussion of this question—the importance of which can hardly be overrated—would entail a minute consideration of all the endowed schools in Ireland, both intermediate and primary. The above case is given merely as an example of the necessity for amalgamation, and the advantages which might be gained thereby.

In towns, where there is but one primary school and an Endowed intermediate School, and where the primary school is small, it would be of the greatest advantage to join the primary with the preparatory classes of the intermediate.

Again, in places connected by railway lines, the endowments might, in many cases, be well spent in making arrangements to convey the children from one place to the other, and thus amalgamate the primary schools.

I had a good opportunity of observing the effect of the late Intermediate Education (Ireland) Act on primary schools, and I regret to report that the results are the reverse of beneficial, in that it encourages teachers, who are in the slightest degree capable, to spend their time grinding the smartest pupils of course, proportionately neglecting the rest. There is but one more point to be noticed, that is the ignorance displayed by managers and teachers of any other system of education except their own, and I would strongly recommend them to take every opportunity of visiting schools, both good and bad, as the former will afford many suggestions for improvement in their own, and the latter will show them what errors are to be avoided.

I would, in conclusion, take this opportunity of expressing my indebtedness to Mr. Keenan, C.S., and the Inspectors of the National Board, also to the Managers and Teachers of Schools, for the assistance which they gave me in the discharge of my duties.

I have the honour to remain,

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

H. K. MOORE

APPENDIX C.

DETAILED REPORT OF MR. HUGH KEYS MOORE, SCH., T.C.D.,

INSPECTOR OF PRIMARY SCHOOLS.

PROVINCE OF LEINSTER.

COUNTY OF CARLOW.

RATHVILLY; HOUSE, BOYS.

This school, under its present master and mistress, is a most useful and successful one. The course of instruction includes elementary classics and French, and the pupils are prepared for the intermediate examinations. The answering in English was very good, with the exception of spelling, which was much below the average, while the senior class showed an intelligent knowledge of Euclid and algebra, and answered extremely well in Latin Grammar.

The premises are now in good condition, but the expense of most of the repairs has been borne by the master, and it seems very hard that a man receiving such a limited salary should have to spend it in such a way.—5th March, 1880.

COUNTY OF DUBLIN.

BOOTHSTOWN; NATIONAL, BOYS.

The school-house, which was built by the National Board, is a very suitable one, and would accommodate 150 boys. There were only 37 present on the day of my visit.

The reason for the low attendance is that Boothstown is principally composed of gentlemen's houses, and there are very few children who would attend a National school. The answering was below the average in National schools. The attendance is very irregular. All the boys are Roman Catholics.—27th February, 1880.

BURLINGTON-ROAD, MASONIC FEMALE ORPHAN.

The girls of this school are divided into three classes, all of which I examined. With one exception, the answering was highly creditable. In the junior class, the geography seemed to be taught without any system, the teacher informing me that the girls had learned Africa, though they had not the slightest knowledge of Ireland or England. I was by no means surprised that my questions in Africa were universally missed.

The course of instruction is admirably chosen to fit the pupils for the highest situations as governesses, and the arrangement by which some of the best girls are assisted in finishing their education abroad seemed to me a most necessary and useful one.

The house was in excellent order, nor could I find any fault, except that there was no fire-place in the junior school-room. The increase in the number of applicants for admission to the institution has rendered it necessary to secure a larger building, which is in the course of erection.—24 December, 1879.

CASTLEKNOCK, PAROCHIAL, BOYS AND GIRLS.

I examined the boys and girls present in arithmetic, spelling, grammar, geography, and Euclid; in all these subjects the answering was indifferent, in spelling and Euclid, it was decidedly bad. The fault here is not with the teacher, who is an intelligent and hardworking person, but with the manager. There were 79 boys and girls present, and these the teacher, with one female assistant, is required to instruct in a course which includes Latin, Euclid, algebra, shorthand, book-keeping, singing, and drawing.

The ridiculous system—so much condemned by the Assistant Commissioner in 1857—of giving the teacher a shilling for each pupil advanced a class is here carried out, with its obvious bad results, and the school is inspected by the clergyman of an adjoining parish—the reports of that gentleman merely consisting of the usual and well-known compliments to teachers and pupils. The large sum of money spent annually in bringing strong healthy children to school in covered vans would be much better spent in increasing the staff, and providing such an education as would make it worth the children's while to walk.

There is no urinal in the boys' play-ground; and the girls' play-ground is disfigured by an ashpit, the front wall of which is broken down. The boys' and girls' schools have been amalgamated.—23rd February, 1880.

CASTLEKNOCK, MERRICK'S.

This institution impressed me as being in a highly satisfactory condition, both as regards the education and the household arrangements. The answering of the 38 girls present, in all the English subjects, including history, was excellent, while they are well instructed in music and drawing, and a few in Latin. Six girls passed at the last Intermediate examination, two being on the prize list.

The house is exactly similar to Morgan's School, and the remarks about the infirmary and lavatory equally apply.—24th February, 1880.

CASTLEKNOCK MORGAN'S.

The answering of the boys, though passable, was by no means so good as might be expected, in a school where there are two masters for 28 boys. The writing was good; and the maps, drawn by the pupils, excellent.

The house is in good repair, and the internal arrangements satisfactory, with the exception of the infirmary and lavatory. The former seemed to me too near the dormitories, and the latter too far away from them, as it is on the basement floor.

All the boys are members of the Irish Church.—24th February, 1886.

HAROLD'S CROSS, ST. CLARE'S ORPHELAGH.

This institution impressed me most favourably, in every respect.

Nothing is left undone by the Nuns to make the household arrangements perfect; and although the domestic work is done entirely by the girls, their answering in the ordinary English subjects was very creditable. The writing was excellent, and the arithmetic quite as good as in any girls' school which I have examined.

The needlework, both plain and fancy, was about the best I have seen in any school.—25th September, 1879.

NORTHEROCK-ROAD (LEESON PARK) IRISH CLERGY DAUGHTERS.

I gave the senior class in this school an essay to write, on an historical subject, and the knowledge shown of the leading facts of the period was creditable, while the composition was very good; they also translated, some into French and some into German, a short sentence, which I read to them in English; the drawing also, and music were extremely good.

The answering, in English subjects was not good; in spelling, geography, and history, the junior class made gross mistakes, while the arithmetic, though a very limited course, was inaccurately worked by all.

The house arrangements were as perfect as in any school which I inspected. The dormitories are provided with separate cubicles for the senior girls, in each of which there is a basin, supplied with water-cock and waste-pipe.

There is much need of a room in which the girls could play in wet weather, and receive calisthenic lessons.

The arrangement that the senior class only should be examined by the annual Inspector seems to me very wrong, as junior classes are much more in need of inspection, and the requirements of the seniors are, to a certain extent, tested by the Intermediate examinations.—18th March, 1880.

NORTHERBERLAND-ROAD, ST. STEPHEN'S, NATIONAL, BOYS.

The answering of the boys was passable, in the National programme, though there seemed a great want of energy about the whole school. This is hardly to be wondered at, as the school-room is one of the gloomiest I have seen, the walls being low and dark, and the roof disproportionately high, while the floor, instead of being boarded, is tiled.

The order, too, of the 36 boys present was not as good as it might be.

The sanitary arrangements were defective.—13th January, 1880.

NORTHERBERLAND-ROAD, ST. STEPHEN'S, NATIONAL, GIRLS.

The answering of the fifth class (3 girls) was creditable, but that of the other classes, very bad in arithmetic and spelling. The school-room was somewhat more cheerful than that of boys', but the mistress's apartments were most uncomfortable.

The 35 girls present were composed of 27 I. C., 7 Pres., and 1 B. C.

In the infants' school there were 55 children present.—13th January, 1880.

PACIFIC PARK, ROYAL HIBERNIAN MILITARY.

This institution has, within the past twelve months, undergone considerable changes, and, as far as I could judge, these changes will materially improve it.

Under the old system, the work of the establishment was done by servants, now it is done almost entirely by the boys. Formerly, the greater part of the day was devoted to school work, and the instruction in trades, drum practice, &c., was proportionately limited; now, three hours a day is devoted to school work, and three to trades,—half the boys being at trades, while the other half are in school. This not only provides for a proper amount of instruction in both, but also greatly diminishes the teaching staff. The house was in every respect well managed, and scrupulously clean.

I examined the boys in the National programme, which is adopted, and the answering was, on the whole, satisfactory.

The trades are generally taught with system and regularity. The work done by pupils in the boot trade is confined to cobbling, and it would seem desirable to teach the making of boots and shoes.—15th March, 1880.

SWORDS, BOROUGH, BOYS.

I examined the 23 boys present in the usual English subjects, and the answering was very creditable, while the writing, in both copy-books and exercises, was neat and legible.

The buildings are in excellent order, and sufficiently large to educate every boy, girl, and infant in Swords.

There are a number of apprentice fees and money prizes competed for annually by the pupils of this school and the Swords National schools. Though a clergyman cannot conduct the examination, its management is in the hands of Canon McDonagh, and it seems to me that the way in which he fulfils his trust is unsatisfactory. His modus operandi is to employ a van and drive down from Dublin with some ten or twelve divinity and other students, whom he sets to examine the classes. It is no excuse that these inexperienced persons are only examining junior pupils, as it is quite as difficult to set a suitable examination for them, as for more advanced classes. These gentlemen are unpaid.—26th March, 1880.

SWORDS, BOROUGH, GIRLS

The answering of the 25 girls present was quite equal to that of the boys, and showed careful teaching.

All the children in these schools are members of the Irish Church.

CITY OF DUBLIN.

ANNE-STREET, NORTH, ST. MICHAEL'S NATIONAL, BOYS

The school-house is, from its situation in North Anne-street, naturally gloomy, but still a plentiful supply of whitewash would make a vast improvement. The answering of the boys, in the National programme, was fairly good, and the discipline, maintained by the teacher, excellent.

The 140 boys present were all Roman Catholics.—26th September, 1879.

ANNE-STREET, NORTH, ST. MICHAEL'S NATIONAL, GIRLS

The answering of the 35 girls, who were present on the day of my visit, was not so good as that of the boys; however, they read distinctly, and spelled very well.

There is a good Convent school almost next door, and the teacher informed me that her girls were those only who could not attend regularly at that school.

There is also in connexion a large infants' school—81 present.—26th September, 1879.

BLACKHALL-PLACE, BLUE COAT HOSPITAL AND FREE SCHOOL OF KING CHARLES II.

The course of instruction in this school seems to me unsuitable for the class of boys educated in it. Too much weight is given to mathematics, and even the ordinary English subjects are neglected, in order to teach Euclid, algebra, and trigonometry. The age at which they must leave the Hospital is 16, which is too young to compete for scholarship in Trinity, as the pupils from Santry do, and the parents cannot send them to any other school, so that they are compelled to enter offices or business houses, crammed with a mathematical education, of little or no use in afterlife. In my opinion, this ought to be a thorough English and commercial school, and the pupils should be prepared for commercial appointments and the Civil Service.

I examined the boys both by paper and vis à vis; and the answering in spelling, grammar, and geography, was unsatisfactory, considering the number of the teaching staff, while the writing was not to be compared with that of the pupils in the Christian Brothers' schools. The house, was in general, clean and well-managed, though there is no bath for the use of the boys, nor are there separate towels for each, in the lavatory.—11th March, 1880.

BRUNSWICK-STREET, GREAT, KRASMUS SMITH'S, ENGLISH, BOYS

I examined a large number of the 63 boys present in English and mathematics, and the answering was, on the whole, satisfactory, though the papers of the senior class were by no means as neat as they should be, in a school where boys are prepared for offices, &c.

The order was not good, and the noise, occasioned by four classes all saying lessons at the same time, was so great that it was necessary to shout, in order to be heard.

There is much need of a class-room.—3rd March, 1880.

CAMDEN-STREET, LOWER, PLEASANT'S ORPHAN ASYLUM.

The principal object of this school is to educate the daughters of reduced gentlemen and others as governesses. The girls are instructed in English, French, music, and drawing. The answering of the fourteen girls present was, on the whole, satisfactory. The house is very old, and it must take a large sum to keep it in its present state of repair. I was greatly pleased with the care which is evidently taken to make the girls happy; they seemed thoroughly to appreciate it.—15 September, 1879.

CIRCULAR-ROAD, NORTH, FEMALE ORPHAN HOUSE.

I confer with the Assistant Commissioner, of 1856, who reported that this institution was cleanly and orderly in every department, and that the children looked cheerful and healthy. I examined three large classes in reading, spelling, arithmetic, grammar, and geography. The reading and spelling were creditable, and the writing legible, but the working in arithmetic—simple and compound rules, and simple proportion—was decidedly bad, while the answering in grammar and geography showed very little knowledge of those subjects.

The entire work, including cooking, milking a number of cows, &c., of this extensive establishment, is done by the orphans, and the way in which this work is divided, joined to the fact that the schoolmistress has no assistance in teaching 75 girls, fully accounts for the low state of instruction. The head girl in the kitchen has no lessons for the fortnight she is so engaged. The laundry girls (5 in number) have no lessons on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays; on Wednesdays and Fridays, they have an hour and a half, if the weather is wet, if not, they are taken out to walk. There are, of course, numerous other duties which take away the girls from their school work, and I merely state these cases as examples of the system at present in force.

The remedy for all this seems to me to be the adoption of the half time system, which regulates that each girl should work six hours a day, three being devoted to industrial work, the remaining three to school work. By this means, a thorough English education might be imparted, and, at the same time, all would be trained in household work, &c. A trained and paid mistress should also be appointed.

The report of Dr. McElin, with reference to the chapel, that "The expenditure of £6,000 in building a chapel so disproportionate to the actual requirements of the charity, appears to have been a capital error on the part of the Governors," might apply in a modified sense to the personage, which has been built for the use of the chaplain, as a memorial to the Venerable Cadwallader Wolesey. It is at present vacant, the chaplain living elsewhere in the city.

The number of orphans is now reduced to 75.—3rd December, 1879.

DENMARK-STREET, ST. SAVIOUR'S ORPHANAGE.

The house is very old, and was not built for an orphanage, but the best possible use is made of it, such as it is. The lavatory arrangements are particularly good, as each boy has a separate basin, supplied with water-cock and waste-pipe. The ashpit seemed to me unsatisfactory, as it is built against one of the walls of the school-room, and is not properly ventilated.

The 38 boys at present in the institution are educated in the National schools attached, and are regularly examined with the other pupils in those schools. The orphans are thoroughly instructed in instrumental music, and they have amongst themselves a well-trained brass band.—31st March, 1880.

DOMINICK-STREET, LOWER, NATIONAL, BOYS.

This school was formerly conducted at Strand-street. The present premises are very commodious, and in excellent repair. The answering of the boys was very bad in spelling and grammar, also in arithmetic; in geography, it was somewhat better; and in reading and writing, all the classes showed fair proficiency.

The teacher was only eight weeks appointed, and he stated that the school was in a bad condition when he came.

There were 26 present.

The roll is made up of 19 Presbyterians, 16 members of the Irish Church, 1 Roman Catholic, and 2 Dissenters.—23rd September, 1879.

DOMINICK-STREET, LOWER, NATIONAL, GIRLS.

The answering here was better than that of the boys, though the mistress is no longer in charge than the master. I am sure that in a few months this will be a flourishing school. Present, 25.

The roll is composed of 28 Presbyterians, and 10 Irish Church.

There is an infants' school, with an average attendance of 55.—23rd September, 1879.

DOCKET-STREET, UPPER, BETHLESDA, FEMALE, ORPHAN.

From the situation of this orphanage, it is impossible that it should be open enough to secure the health of the inmates. This was clearly shown, at the time of my visit by, the fact that 8 of the 29 girls were either in convalescence, or just recovering from that disease. Every precaution was taken to prevent its spreading. Considering existing circumstances, the answering in English was fairly good, though the spelling and geography were decidedly below average.

The house seemed to be kept in good order, most of the work is done by the girls.—2nd December, 1879.

ROCKS-STREET, BERTRAND, FEMALE, ORPHAN.

This institution is, in every respect, a model. The house was in perfect order, though I gave no notice whatever of my visit, and the arrangements, all that could be desired. The lavatory is particularly suitable, being on the same floor as the dormitories, and fitted, in the most approved manner, with basins, water, &c.

I examined all the girls in the usual subjects, and the answering was of the highest order.

The house accommodates 20 inmates, 18 were members of the Irish Church, the remaining 2 being Presbyterians.—3rd December, 1879.

ESSEX-STREET, WEST, SS. MICHAEL AND JOHN'S, NATIONAL, BOYS.

I examined the third, fourth, and sixth classes, in the National programme. The reading was fair, also the writing, the arithmetic indifferent, while the answering in spelling, grammar, and geography was decidedly bad.

The schoolrooms are commodious, and in fairly good order. There were 148 boys present, all Roman Catholics.

The class of children attending these schools is the very lowest in Dublin, and they do not come regularly to school. Taking this fact into consideration, the school cannot be considered unsatisfactory.—1st March, 1880.

ESSEX-STREET, WEST, SS. MICHAEL AND JOHN'S, NATIONAL, GIRLS.

Considering the class of children that attends this school, the answering showed an amount of work satisfactorily done, though it was not so good as it might be, in arithmetic or geography; the reading and writing were good, and the spelling, fair. The buildings are in excellent repair, though in a very poor locality, and quite adequate for the number of girls present.

The girls are all Roman Catholics.—1st March, 1880

FISHamble-STREET: UNITED PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS OF ST. AUDOEN, ST. NICHOLAS WITHIN, AND ST. MICHAEL, AND OF ST. JOHN AND ST. WEINBURGH, BOYS.

The state of instruction in this school was most unsatisfactory.

The reading and writing were disgraceful, the grammar and geography very little better. It is only fair, however, to the present master to state that he has had charge of the school for a very short time, and that it was in a miserable state when he came into office.

The boys are all members of the Irish Church, and belong to the lowest class.—16th September, 1879.

FISHamble-STREET, UNITED PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS OF ST. AUDOEN, ST. NICHOLAS WITHIN, AND ST. MICHAEL, AND OF ST. JOHN AND ST. WEINBURGH, GIRLS.

The answering of the 37 girls present was most creditable in all the usual English subjects, and presented a pleasing contrast to that of the boys.

The writing was particularly neat and legible, and the uniformity in the answering showed good and careful teaching.

The girls are all members of the Irish Church, and were clean and tidy, though children of the poorest parents.

There is an infants' school in connexion—85 present on the day of my visit.—16th September, 1879.

HARRINGTON-STREET, METHODIST, FEMALE ORPHAN.

This institution, whose object is the training of destitute girls as servants, is situated in Harrington-street, and affords accommodation for 10 boarders. The 9 who were present read very well and intelligently, and wrote a clear legible hand; the working in arithmetic was also very fair, quite sufficient for making up any calculations, which the girls might need in after life. The domestic arrangements were quite satisfactory.—18th September, 1879.

MERRION-STREET, UPPER, HIBERNIAN MARINE SOCIETY'S.

The answering in this school in reading, spelling, and elementary arithmetic was fairly good. The discipline was not quite so rigid as it should be, in such an institution.

The house is kept in very good order; there is a good gymnasium on the premises, and the boys have a boat at Kingstown.—3d December, 1879.

MOLESWORTH-STREET, RALPH MACKLIN'S, BOYS.

The building is most suitable, and in good repair. I cannot say that the answering of the boys was good. The senior class, though supposed to be learning Euclid and algebra, failed in the easiest questions. The general answering in English history was very poor, and the working in arithmetic inaccurate. In writing and drawing there was more than average proficiency shown. With an assistant teacher, a drawing master, and French master, the 42 boys present should have answered much better.—24th September, 1879.

MOLESWORTH-STREET, RALPH MACKLIN'S, GIRLS.

The answering of the girls was highly satisfactory, they read extremely well, and answered intelligently in spelling, geography, English history, and arithmetic. I noticed, with much pleasure, a neatly written programme of the day's work, hanging on the wall, and wish that the plan was more universally adopted in other schools. There were 29 present—all members of the Irish Church.—24th September, 1879.

PATRICK'S-CLOSE, KNIGHT'S, ENDOWED.

The house contains an excellent school-room, board-room, and teacher's apartments, all in very good order. The object of the school is to give a good commercial education, this object is admirably carried out by the present teacher, and the only thing to be regretted is the fewness of scholars.

The 7 boys present answered very well in arithmetic and spelling, wrote an excellent commercial hand, and showed a possible acquaintance with grammar and geography.

This used to be a large school, but now almost all the Protestant families have left the neighbourhood.

The success of this school is fully proved by the long list of excellent clerkships gained by pupils, educated in times past by the present teacher.—22nd September, 1879.

ST. MARY'S-PLACE, CHRISTIAN BROTHERS.

I examined a large number of the boys, both by paper and sic voce, and I came to the conclusion that the education, given in this school, is of a very high order.

The papers were by far the neatest and best written of any which I have received, this is a very important thing for the class of boys attending, as they, in most cases, go into business houses.

The answering in English subjects was very good, while the senior class showed an intelligent and accurate knowledge of elementary Euclid and algebra.

In the junior rooms, the pupils are quite as well instructed as in schools where a large staff of teachers is employed.

The school-rooms are large and lofty, and quite adequate for the 411 boys present—26th February, 1880.

COUNTY OF KILDARE.

CHLBRIDGE, INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S INSTITUTION.

This is, in every respect, a well-conducted establishment.

Thirty of the girls are nominated by Mrs. Connolly, the remainder gain admittance by competitive examination.

The answering in geography, grammar, spelling, and arithmetic was very good, and the writing, excellent. The girls are all educated, clothed, and boarded free, and in many cases become teachers in afterlife.

The 59 present were all members of the Irish Church.—20th September, 1879.

CLANE; BETHAGHSTOWN.

The house is large and rambling, but still in sound repair, and quite suitable for the accommodation of the teacher and his eleven pupils.

The Rev. Mr. Cooke and some others are anxious to remove this school, and amalgamate it with the Clane Parochial school, but, I fear, the advantages gained by such a union would never repay the amount of money spent upon it. The answering of the boys was not satisfactory, nor, indeed, under the circumstances, could it be, since the teacher was but a short time appointed, and his predecessor was allowed to ruin the school. I have no doubt, that under its present managers, it will soon rise to a state of efficiency.—30th September, 1879.

KILL, ERASMUS SMITH'S.

I examined the 10 boys and girls present in all the usual subjects, and their answering was highly satisfactory.

The building is suitable, and in good repair.—4th March, 1880.

COUNTY OF KILKENNY.

KILKENNY; ST. JOHN'S, INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S, FODDICE INSTITUTION.

In this school, a high class English and mathematical education is given to some 53 boarders. About half this number are free, and gain admittance by a competitive examination.

The answering of the senior class in grammar, geography, Euclid, and algebra was very creditable; whilst the junior boys acquitted themselves well, in reading and arithmetic.

The school is pleasantly situated, a short distance from Kilkenny, and is kept in perfect repair, owing, I believe, to the exertions of the head master, at whose suggestion all the improvements are made. Amongst the past pupils, who received a free education, there is a classical Student, and a mathematical gold medalist of Trinity College.—2nd October, 1879.

KINGS COUNTY.

TULLAMORE, CONVENT, NATIONAL.

In this school, I examined the second, third, and fifth classes in the National programme; the answering, in each case, was extremely good; and yet the girls could not explain the most ordinary sentences in their reading books, nor give the meanings of commonplace words. Besides the girls' school, there is an infant boys' school, and also a few girls of the better classes are prepared for the Intermediate examinations.

There were 432 girls present, all Roman Catholics.—11th November, 1879.

COUNTY OF LONGFORD.

GRANARD, ERASMUS SMITH'S.

The school-rooms here was in very nice order, but the master's apartments seemed quite neglected; in one bedroom, there was a hole in the roof, through which, the master stated, the rain poured in, and the whole house was badly in need of paint and paper; while the school privy had not been cleaned for eight years.

The answering of the children present was good in spelling and grammar, but in arithmetic, though they could work with passable accuracy, they had no idea of the meanings of the simplest operations.—18th February, 1880.

NEWTOWNFORTH, LEEBARD

This school, though intended for poor children on the estate, is now attended by the sons and daughters of well-to-do farmers, &c. The course of instruction is somewhat similar to that of a Model school, under the National Board. I examined the second, third, fifth, and sixth classes. The answering of the fifth and sixth classes was most creditable in arithmetic, spelling, history, Euclid, and mensuration; that of the third class, fairly good; but the answering in the second class, which consisted of 6 pupils, ranging from nine years old to fifteen, was as bad as it could possibly be. The classes seemed to be arranged in no kind of order; different children, in the same class, working different rules in arithmetic, and reading in various books. The spelling was taught by no acknowledged system.

The local trustee informed me that he leaves the management entirely in the hands of the teacher, and I have no doubt that, but for the efficiency of that person, the school would be again in as miserable a condition as it was found in by the Assistant Commissioner in 1836.—21st November, 1879.

COUNTY OF LOUTH.

DUOGHEDA, BLUE.

This school impressed me most favourably, in every respect. The house is in excellent order, both inside and out, and the education given is thorough and useful. The boys are prepared for the various examinations of the lower branches of the Home Civil Service and for business, at which they have in times past been very successful.

There were 12 boarders and 17 day scholars, and the roll is composed of 25 Irish Church, 5 Presbyterians, and 3 Dissenters.—19th January, 1880.

COUNTY OF MEATH.

KILLS, DEMPSEY'S, BOYS.

This school is conducted by the Christian Brothers, and presents no material difference from the other schools taught by that excellent order. The answering of the boys in the junior room was particularly good.—12th December, 1879.

KILLS, DEMPSEY'S, GIRLS.

I examined a number of the girls of this school, and found them well instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic; but the answering in grammar, geography, and spelling was indifferent.

The schools are very large—182 girls present—and it would, in my opinion, be a great help to the teachers if they were subject to such periodical and judicious inspection, as that given by the National Board. Thirty-seven of the 182 girls compose an intermediate school, which need not be subject to such inspection, as I have mentioned.—12th December, 1879.

NAVAN, FLOWER-HILL.

The teacher of this school seemed a conscientious and painstaking person, and yet I have very little hesitation in pronouncing the school unsatisfactory.

The reason of this, I have no doubt, is the want of proper inspection.

In arithmetic, children who could work practice utterly failed in multiplication of money, while those who were doing long division had not the remotest idea of nomenclature.

There was no knowledge of grammar, and the spelling of the head class was very defective.

The 17 boys and girls present were all members of the Irish Church.—15th January, 1880.

OLDCASTLE, ENDOWED, BOYS.

It would be well if there were many more such schools as this in Ireland, both as regards religious and secular instruction. The former is conducted by two paid chaplains, one being the Roman Catholic, the other the Protestant clergyman. The latter is of a very high order, and fits the boys not only for commercial life, but also for competition at the Intermediate and other examinations.

I examined most of the boys, either by paper or viva voce, in the usual English subjects, also in Euclid and algebra. The answering was excellent in all these subjects.

There were 123 present, and the roll is composed of 144 Roman Catholics, and 32 Irish Church.—11th December, 1879.

OLDCASTLE, ENDOWED, GIRLS.

The answering of the 123 girls present was not inferior to that of the boys, and reflected the greatest credit on the teachers.

These schools are conducted according to the National system, and are examined by Mr. Edw. Gerald, Head Inspector, and I have no doubt that their present state of efficiency is greatly owing to the thorough and systematic inspection of that highly qualified and experienced gentleman.

The roll is composed of 178 Roman Catholics and 18 Irish Church.—11th December, 1879.

QUEEN'S COUNTY.

KILBRICKEN, TENANTRY, NATIONAL.

The boys' and girls' school-rooms here have been thrown into one, and the schools amalgamated. They are under the National Board, and well conducted by the present teacher. The privies are in very bad order, as there seemed no way of emptying them, but they are about to be entirely changed, and a proper system introduced. There were 49 present, and the roll is composed of 61 Roman Catholics and 10 Irish Church.—10th March, 1880.

MOUNTKILICK, SOCIETY OF FRIENDS, GIRLS.

I cannot speak too highly of the excellence, in every respect, of this establishment. The course of instruction embraces all the subjects taught in a high class ladies' school, with the exception of music. The senior class wrote for me an essay, on the comparative merits of poetry and prose, in which the composition, writing, and spelling were all that could be desired. If I might find any fault with the essays, it was the limited acquaintance with English literature which they displayed, but this is fully accounted for by the fact that the "Society of Friends" prohibits the study of many books, which are used as class books in other schools. The success of this and the other schools belonging to the Friends is, I am sure, entirely owing to the great interest taken in them by the Boards of management, who spare neither trouble nor expense, in securing the services of highly qualified teachers.—8th October, 1879.

PORTARLINGTON, FREE, BOYS.

The master of this school has been teaching for 43 years, and, I fear, is now rather behind the times. There was considerable want of regularity in the classes; and the answering was decidedly second-rate. It seems a pity that a pension could not be raised, which would be some compensation for the teacher's miserable salary of £30 per annum, and a more modern teacher put in his place.—20th October, 1879.

PORTARLINGTON, FREE, GIRLS.

This is a prosperous and well conducted school. The 38 girls present answered very satisfactorily, were neatly dressed, and in excellent order. I am sure its present satisfactory state is greatly due to the interest taken in it by the Rev. Mr. Tripcock, who is the nominal master.—30th October, 1879.

STRANGLALLY, THE CURRY, NATIONAL.

This school is not only under the National Board but also under the Incorporated Society. I examined the head class (8 in number) in Euclid and algebra; they knew nothing whatever of these subjects. The answering of the junior classes in the ordinary National programme was very good. The building is a most suitable one, and in good repair.—1st October, 1879.

COUNTY OF WESTMEATH.

BUNBURNNA; FARRA, INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S INSTITUTION.

A thorough English and advanced mathematical education is given to the boarders of this school, which is under the management of the Incorporated Society.

The course in mathematics is little short of that for students in Trinity College, and the answering in that course was highly satisfactory.

The school hours begin at 7 A.M., and thus day boys are at a great disadvantage. The answering of the 7-day scholars present was disgraceful, and I think worse than anything I experienced in the whole course of my inspection.

The premises, both inside and outside, were in a bad state of repair as regards painting, wood-work, whitewash, &c.—14th November, 1879.

MULLINGAR, (HEVEY INSTITUTION), ST. MARY'S COLLEGE.

I examined almost all the boys in the senior room, some by paper, and some viva voce, the answering was highly satisfactory, while the neatness and good penmanship, displayed in the copy-books, home exercises, and papers, was beyond all praise. In the junior rooms, after carefully questioning the boys, I came to the conclusion that they were quite as well instructed as they would be by paid assistants or monitors, in any ordinary National school. The number present—276—was much below the average, as the day of my visit was the fair-day in Mullingar.—13th November, 1879.

MULTIFARSHAM, WILSON'S HOSPITAL.

The answering of the boys was not satisfactory in spelling, geography, arithmetic, or Euclid, and only passable in the other subjects. This is not to be wondered at when we consider that 159 boys are taught a course including history, Euclid, algebra, and drawing by a staff which consists of but one assistant, and one monitor.

The house is very old, but I am quite sure the most will be made of it by the present manager, who has but lately been appointed.

The system of urinals in dormitories, which is in force here, cannot be too strongly condemned, and Mr. White informed me that he would have them at once removed. No encouragement is given in learning trades, and there are no workshops of any kind in connexion with the establishment.

I noticed some seven or eight beds on a very draughty lobby outside one of the dormitories, and on inquiry found that boys were made to sleep there as a punishment for undecent habits. I consider this a dangerous and unsatisfactory system.—20th February, 1880.

TYRRELLSPASS, BELVEDERE ORPHAN INSTITUTION.

This orphanage consists of detached cottages, situated in a lawn, each cottage containing a dormitory, kitchen, and nurse's room. The girls—14 in number—are educated at the parish school according to the will of the founder. They read very nicely, and wrote fairly well, though their answering in arithmetic, spelling, and geography was decidedly deficient.

The present teacher is only a few weeks appointed, and I am sure will raise the school, in a short time, to a state of efficiency.—12th November, 1879.

COUNTY OF WEXFORD

ENNISCORTHY, BRASSIUS SMITH'S

This is an excellent building, containing one large school-room, and two smaller ones, as well as a house for a master. The large school-room is in use, the other two are locked up, and there is a caretaker in the master's apartments, as the 13 little boys and girls who were present are taught by a female teacher, who lodges in the town. The answering in spelling and geography was very good (as it usually is in schools examined by Mr. Rudkin, the Inspector), that in grammar only fair, whilst the arithmetic was decidedly below the average.

The children are all members of the Irish Church. I do not think the state of education in Enniscorthy would be much lowered if this school were closed, as in that case I am sure the scholars would attend the National school.—19th September, 1879.

WEXFORD, TAIT'S.

This school is very beautifully situated on an eminence just outside the town. The building is large, and suitable for about 26 boarders, though Mr. Caldwell, the present master, is only allowed to receive 4. Considering the short time Mr. Caldwell is appointed, and the state in which he found the school, the answering was good, and I fully expect that in a few years there will be a most flourishing school here. The 24 boys are all members of the Irish Church, and are, principally the sons of shop-keepers in the town.—20th September, 1879.

COUNTY OF WICKLOW.

ARKLOW, INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S

The building is large, airy, and in excellent order. The first floor is occupied by the boys' school, and the basement by an infants' school.

The answering of the 37 boys present was most creditable in all the usual subjects, with the exception of grammar. The writing was specially good.

The teacher seemed a competent and intelligent person, and his pupils have been very successful in gaining admission (on the foundation) to the higher schools of the Incorporated Society.—18th September, 1879.

AUGHRIM; CARYSPORT, ROYAL, BOYS AND GIRLS.

This school seems in every respect neglected. It was not professionally inspected, before my visit, since the Royal Commission in 1857. The premises, being built of stone, look well on the outside, but even there signs of neglect may be noticed, in gates off their hinges, &c. Inside this neglect is much more conspicuous, the walls being in a miserable state with regard to white-washing, papering, &c. One of the two school-rooms is used as such, the other is at present occupied with coal and all sorts of lumber.

Just outside the school-room door is an open privy, with no kind of outlet whatever, so that, when from absolute necessity, it had to be cleaned it was necessary to undermine the wall.

The master stated that in summer-time the school-room was almost unbearable.

The 18 little boys and girls answered fairly in spelling and arithmetic, but their writing was not so good as it ought to be. The master seemed to me an intelligent and well-informed person, and I have no doubt that, if he was directed by proper inspection, he would raise the school to a state of efficiency and usefulness.—17th September, 1879.

PROVINCE OF MUNSTER.

COUNTY OF CLARE

ENNIHYMON, CHRISTIAN BROTHERS'.

The answering of the boys in the senior room of this school was as good as it usually is in Christian Brothers' Schools. The boys in the junior room did not answer so well. There were 161 present.

The premises were in excellent order.—17th November, 1879.

COUNTY OF CORK

CLOTNE, ROBERT CROW'S

The master of this school impressed me as being an able and conscientious teacher, and the answering of his pupils fully confirmed that impression.

The house is very old, but in good repair.

I examined the 11 boys present in grammar, geography, spelling, reading, arithmetic, and Euclid, in all these subjects the answering was quite as good as I have heard in any school which I have visited.

The dormitory for the 6 free boarders present was ample in size, and kept in nice order.

I have no doubt that the efficiency of this school is greatly owing to the interest taken in it by Dr. Moore, head master of Mileston College, who is one of the trustees.—1st November, 1879.

CORK CITY, COVE-STREET, ST. NICHOLAS, INDUSTRIAL.

The boys of the industrial school are taught separately and, though examined by the National Board's inspectors, do not gain any results fees. Their answering on the whole, was about the worst I have heard in any schools, the spelling being particularly bad.

The workshops seemed to be conducted with very little order or system, and there is no carpenter's shop. I think that Dr. Webster should institute a whitewashing brigade, and I am sure they would find employment enough to keep them engaged for many a day on the dusky walls of the institution.—28th October, 1879.

CORK CITY; COVE-STREET, ST. NICHOLAS, NATIONAL, GIRLS.

In this school, I examined the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth classes. The answering in the programme was fairly good, but the easiest question outside the programme was universally missed. This, in my opinion, shows that the girls are merely "crammed" for the results fees examination. The writing and elementary drawing were above the average. There were 31 girls present, all members of the Irish Church.—28th October, 1879.

CORK CITY; COVE-STREET, ST. NICHOLAS, NATIONAL, BOYS.

I examined the sixth, fifth, and third classes in this school, the answering of the fifth and sixth was excellent in arithmetic and geography, but they were ignorant of Euclid, though supposed to be learning that subject. The third class answered badly in grammar and tables.

The 38 boys present were children, in most cases, of the working classes, and all members of the Church of Ireland.—28th October, 1879.

CORK CITY; DOUGLAS-STREET, PRESENTATION BROTHERS.

This school is under the National Board. The school-rooms, though in good order, were very much overcrowded, and the ventilation seemed very defective.

I examined the senior classes in Euclid, algebra, spelling, reading, and arithmetic. No boy could define the Least Common Multiple, and in a sum in multiplication of algebra only one boy had a correct answer. Only one boy could demonstrate the fifth proposition of the first book of Euclid. The answering in arithmetic and spelling was fair, and the reading only possible.—4th November, 1879.

CORK CITY; PEACOCK-LANE, CHRISTIAN BROTHERS.

Of the excellent, and truly useful schools conducted by the Christian Brothers, this is, I think, the most efficient both as regards the course of instruction—which includes English, French, mathematics, experimental science, drawing, and music—and the quality of the instruction given in these various subjects. I only regret that the limited time at my disposal prevented me from examining a greater number of the pupils. The senior class, 20 in number, I examined in Euclid, algebra, dictation, grammar, and geography. In dictation, about 15 boys had no mistake, and no boy had more than two. In arithmetic, including long money sums, the answering was all that could be desired, whilst in geography, grammar, Euclid, and algebra the answering was excellent. No praise can be too high for the neatness and legibility of the writing, which, in my opinion, is brought to a greater degree of perfection in these schools than in any other schools in Ireland. The other boys that I examined, about 100 in number, answered most creditably. All the boys in the senior room are instructed in experimental science, and about 100 boys are learning French.

By the indefatigable zeal of the Brothers of this order, they have built a physical laboratory and a drawing school, both well adapted for the purpose. After a careful examination of the instruments in the laboratory, I came to the conclusion that they were well chosen to give the pupils a thorough knowledge of the principles of science, and also to awaken in them a lively interest in the subject. The singing—in parts and by note—both of sacred and secular music, was beyond all praise.

So far as I could judge, nothing is left undone by the Christian Brothers to bring this school as nearly as possible to a state of perfection.—31st October, 1879.

CORK CITY; PETER'S-LANE, NATIONAL.

The answering in the programme was most indifferent, the children being unable to explain the simplest sentences in their reading books. The school-room, though situated in a bad locality, was in good order, and had ample accommodation for the 49 pupils present on the day of my visit. There is a well conducted infants' school in connexion with this school; 38 present.—30th October, 1879.

CORK CITY; ST. ANNE'S, SHANDON, BOYS.

The answering of the 15 boys present was fairly good in the usual English subjects, though there appeared to me a considerable want of life in the school. It would, in my opinion, be a great improvement if the male and female schools here were amalgamated, and placed under the National Board. The pupils are all free, they are children of the poorest parents, and all members of the Church of Ireland.—3rd November, 1879.

CORK CITY; ST. ANNE'S, SHANDON, GIRLS.

The answering in this school was much better than that of the boys. I examined the head class in arithmetic, grammar, dictation, and history; in all these subjects, the girls made most creditable answering, while their writing was neat and legible. The second class answered well also, and read clearly and intelligently.

There were 16 girls present, all members of the Irish Church, with the exception of 3 Presbyterians and 2 Methodists. In the infants' school there was an attendance of 16.—3rd November, 1879.

CORK CITY; STEPHEN'S-STREET, ST. STEPHEN'S, OR BLUE HOSPITAL.

This institution was in a most unsatisfactory condition, both as regards the house arrangements and the school work.

The only provision for washing was a filthy bath in a dark, downstairs room, and there were only two or three towels for the 16 boys. The master's excuse that "his boys were clean boys" seemed rather paradoxical.

The answering in arithmetic, spelling, and grammar was decidedly bad, in geography somewhat better, and the writing of all the boys was excellent. This bad answering is the less excusable when we consider the course of instruction, which is very limited.

This school, being intended for the sons of reduced gentlemen, should impart a thorough English education, and also such a knowledge of mathematics as would enable the boys to compete, not only for the Banks, Encise, &c, but for higher appointments in the second class of the Home Civil Service. As it now is, I do not think this institution is of any use, beyond keeping the boys out of harm's way for the time they are in it.—30th October, 1879.

COUNTY OF LIMERICK.

LIMERICK CITY; BOW-LANE, CATHEDRAL GRAMMAR.

This is, in every respect, an intermediate school, and for such a school no locality could be more unsuitable than Bow-lane. The school-room itself is in good order. The 12 boys present were arranged in two classes. The answering of the junior class was by no means satisfactory; in a sentence for dictation they missed the easiest words, while their answering in grammar, geography, and history was very poor.

The senior class made very good answering in Euclid, Latin grammar, and arithmetic. The boys are prepared for the Irish Universities, the College of Surgeons, &c, and have in times past been fairly successful.

There are on the roll 11 members of the Irish Church, 2 Roman Catholics, and 1 other Dissenter.—25th October, 1879.

LIMERICK CITY; HARTSTOGUE-STREET, LEAHY'S, FREE, BOYS.

The building is in every respect suitable for a large school, and might accommodate 500 boys, though there were but 48 present on the day of my visit.

The answering in the National programme was highly satisfactory, besides which the senior class answered well in English history. The school is examined (by arrangement) by the National Inspector, and I have no doubt that its present efficient condition is chiefly due to that fact.

The roll is composed of 33 Irish Church, 4 Roman Catholics, 6 Presbyterians, and 4 other Dissenters. There are 7 free boys.

The pupils belong to the middle and lower classes of society.—24th October, 1879.

LIMERICK CITY; HARTSTOGUE-STREET, LEAHY'S, FREE, GIRLS.

The building is similar to that of the boys' school, and would accommodate an equally large number. The girls read very badly, but their answering in spelling, grammar, and geography, was good, whilst the working in arithmetic was fair.

There were 38 girls present. The roll is made up of 16 Irish Church, 4 Roman Catholics, 17 Presbyterians, and 1 other Dissenter.—24th October, 1879.

LIMERICK CITY; HENRY-STREET, VILLIERS', BOYS.

I examined the senior class of this school in Latin grammar, spelling, English grammar, geography, and arithmetic; in all these subjects, with the exception of geography, the answering was decidedly bad. In arithmetic they could not work the compound rules with any accuracy, though supposed to know Interest, Discount, &c.

The fault in this school is, I believe, that the master advances his boys too quickly; this would, of course, be prevented by proper inspection. It is only fair to state that the master is but twelve months appointed.

The pupils are, I was informed, principally the sons of professional men, and pay from 10s. to 30s. per quarter.

There were 12 boys present, and the roll is made up of 11 members of the Irish Church and 3 Methodists.—22nd October, 1879.

LIMERICK CITY; HENRY-STREET, VILLAGERS', GIRLS.

I examined the second, third, and fourth classes in this school, they all answered most creditably, the reading and arithmetic being particularly good. The school-room is quite suitable, although it could not accommodate any more pupils. There were 47 girls present, and the roll is made up of 26 members of the Irish Church, 14 Presbyterians, and 8 belonging to other dissenting bodies.

In the orphanage, although the house was clean and evidently well kept, the arrangements were defective. There is not a separate bed for each girl, nor, as far as I could see, a separate towel.

Very little improvement has, I fear, been made in this respect since the unfavourable report of the Assistant Commissioner in 1856.—22nd October, 1879.

LIMERICK CITY; MOUNT ST. VINCENT, NATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

In every respect this orphanage is in a highly satisfactory condition. The dormitories are large, airy, and scrupulously clean, each girl occupying a bed separated from the others by curtains. The lavatories are on the most approved system; and there is a drawer for each girl, wherein to keep her towel, comb and brush, &c. The school is under the National Board, and the answering of the girls, in their respective subjects, was very good.

The singing was uncommonly good.—25th October, 1879.

LIMERICK CITY; ROXBOROUGH-ROAD, FEMALE, FREE, BOARDING.

There were present on the day of my visit 64 boarders and 30 day scholars. These were arranged in four classes. The answering of the fourth (senior) class, in which there were 4 girls preparing to enter Killybeg-place training school, was very good in geography, grammar, and arithmetic; but the answering, or rather missing, of the second and third classes was most disgraceful; in a sum in simple subtraction, only about 4 girls, out of some 20, had a correct answer; and the spelling was about the worst I have ever heard.

The excuse that the boarders had a great amount of house work to do was, in my mind, by no means sufficient. There is no infant school-room or infant teacher, so that a number of children must be in the girls' room, thereby hindering the school work, and being themselves, to a certain extent, neglected. The house was in nice order, except for the lavatory, where there were only about a dozen basins, and not a separate towel for each girl.—27th October, 1879.

LIMERICK CITY; SEXTON-STREET, CHRISTIAN BROTHERS'.

This was the first school, taught by the Christian Brothers, which I visited, and every thing I saw pleased me very much. The relation between teacher and pupil seemed all that could be desired, as there was perfect and prompt obedience, without any sign of fear. The discipline was admirable, the Brothers being able to arrange the boys in any desired way almost with a word. The course of instruction embraces a thorough English education, mathematics, French, vocal music, and elementary sciences.

I examined more than two hundred of the boys in one subject or another, and the answering in every case was highly satisfactory.

In the senior room, I gave some sixty boys long sums in addition of money, which they worked with surprising rapidity and accuracy. In dictation, I read out a paragraph from the morning paper, which a large number wrote without a single mistake; the answering in Euclid was good, and the writing, both in copy-books and in home-exercises, particularly good. I have rarely heard better singing (by note) than in this school. There were 672 boys present.—23rd October, 1879.

LIMERICK; MUNGRET, NATIONAL, BOYS.

This school is temporarily conducted in one of the rooms belonging to the Model Farm. The 48 boys present answered well in the National programme. The boys are all Roman Catholics.—27th October, 1879.

LIMERICK; MUNGRET, NATIONAL, GIRLS.

This school is built on the ground of the Model Farm. The answering was quite satisfactory, the Drawing being particularly good for a country school. 34 girls present, all Roman Catholics.—27th October, 1879.

COUNTY OF TIPPERARY.

CASHEL; ST. JOHN'S, PAROCHIAL, INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S, BOYS.

The answering of the 9 boys present was very good in the ordinary English subjects; the senior boys were learning Euclid, but they failed to answer any questions in that subject. The back-yard, &c., needed whitewash.—7th October, 1879.

CASHIEL; ST. JOHN'S, PAROCHIAL, INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S, GIRLS

The 11 girls present answered fairly, and I have no doubt that they are carefully taught. It is impossible, I understand, to have large schools in this town, as the Protestant families are but few, and the Roman Catholics are well provided for by the Christian Brothers.

The boys' and girls' schools here should be amalgamated.—7th October, 1879.

CLOSSMEL; ST. MARY'S, PAROCHIAL, INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S.

The 23 boys present answered fairly in the usual English subjects, with the exception of arithmetic. The school is carried on in a room belonging to the parish, the Incorporated Society's room being at present vacant.—6th October, 1879.

NEWPORT, INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S

The 9 little boys and girls present, on the day of my visit, answered passably in the usual programme.

There are two large school-rooms, each suitable for about 80 pupils, one of which is, of course, unoccupied. The teacher has but one room to live in, and I think it would be very advisable to partition a room for him off the unused school-room.

There is one Roman Catholic attending this school, but she is a mere infant.—21st October, 1879.

COUNTY OF WATERFORD.

DUNGARVAN, CHRISTIAN BROTHERS.

The children attending this school are very poor, and the course of instruction necessarily more limited than in the city schools. The answering of the boys was very good in spelling, grammar, and geography; and the writing in copy-books and exercises excellent; while the arithmetic sums which I set were worked with accuracy and despatch.

The buildings are suitable, and in excellent order.

There were 364 present.—29th October, 1879.

WATERFORD, BISHOP FOY'S

I examined the boys of this school in reading, spelling, grammar, geography, and arithmetic, in which subjects they acquitted themselves most satisfactorily.

The master is a highly qualified music-teacher, and he has brought the singing of his pupils to almost the highest degree of perfection, as well as having trained an excellent band. He informed me that one of his boys is about to go into training with the object of becoming a regimental band-master.

The house arrangements are in every particular suitable; and I noticed, with very much satisfaction, a well-stocked carpenters' workshop, which has been lately fitted up for the boys.—4th October, 1879.

WATERFORD; LADY-LANE, MASON CHARITY, OR BLUE, GIRLS.

The school-room was in good order, and sufficiently large for the 16 girls who attend.

The course of instruction is very elementary, but I was not able to test the knowledge of the pupils as the day on which I visited was a holiday.—4th October, 1879.

WATERFORD; NEWTOWN, MUNSTER PROVINCIAL SCHOOL OF SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

This school is a model of cleanliness, neatness, and order. The dormitories, lavatories, &c., are in every respect suitable.

The senior boys were provided with separate cubicles, boarded off from the dormitory. I should strongly recommend that half a foot of space be left between the partitions and the floor, in order that a thorough current of air might pass underneath.

The 59 boarders are divided into four classes, of which I examined three. The answering, in each case, was highly satisfactory, as might be expected from the staff of masters employed (fewer in number, and highly paid). I noticed, in masters and boys, a certain degree of listlessness, which is, I am sure, fully accounted for by the want of competition with other schools, either in games or in scholarship. I understand that they are not allowed to play cricket or football matches with outsiders, and the Board prohibits the boys from competing at the Intermediate Education Board examinations.—3rd October, 1879.

PROVINCE OF ULSTER

COUNTY OF ANTRIM.

LISBURN, ULSTER PROVINCIAL BOARDING SCHOOL OF SOCIETY OF FRIENDS, BOYS.

The house is in every respect suitable for a large boarding school, and is kept in thorough order.

I examined the boys both by paper and à vue. The answering of the junior class was good in reading, spelling, and geography, but deficient in arithmetic and grammar. The arithmetic, on paper, of the senior class was quite up to the average, as also the algebra, but the boys were utterly ignorant of Euclid. In fact Euclid's methods are entirely ignored, though the boys were quite as ignorant of that miserable substitute (Wilson's Geometry), which they were supposed to have learned. The writing was particularly good, and the reading, excellent.

The school is annually inspected by a graduate of the Queen's University, sent down by the President of Belfast College, but that gentleman's report—like many other reports, which I have seen in the different schools—does not contain a single suggestion, as to how any branch of education might be improved.—20th January, 1880.

LESSBUR, ULSTER PROVINCIAL BOARDING SCHOOL OF SOCIETY OF FRIENDS, GIRLS

The answering in all the usual subjects was extremely good, with the exception of arithmetic, which was rather bad. The writing was neat and legible, and the girls read distinctly, and with a good accent.

It is a peculiarity of this school that the boys and girls live in the same house, dine in the same hall, and use almost the same playground, and all this, so far as I could judge, without any evil results.

There were 10 boarders and 2 day pupils present, all children of members of the Society of Friends.—20th January, 1880.

MOIRA, BROOKFIELD, AGRICULTURAL, BOYS AND GIRLS

I have much pleasure in testifying to the general good management and satisfactory state of education in these schools. The boys labour four hours a day on the farm, and four hours in school, besides which they have an hour and a quarter's study at night.

The answering of the boys in reading, arithmetic, and grammar, including analysis, was very good, and showed intelligent teaching, while the spelling and geography were, considering the existing circumstances, satisfactory.

The girls answered well in all the English subjects, with the exception of geography.

The sewerage has lately been completely altered, and is now in excellent order.

There were 28 boys and 32 girls in the school on the day of my visit.—19th March, 1880.

COUNTY OF ARMAGH.

ARMAGH, DRELSINCOURT, NATIONAL, BOYS AND GIRLS

These schools are now under the National Board, and well conducted by those in charge. The house is old, but in good repair.

There were 45 boys and 44 girls present on the day on which I visited.—11th February, 1880.

ARMAGH, MALL, NATIONAL

This school is now under the National Board, and in excellent working order.

The boys, that I examined, answered well in the programme. The school-room is in good condition, but much in need of a clean-room.

There is between the doors of the boys' and girls' schools a long porch, which is in very bad condition, as the rain drips down, and completely soaks the walls of the girls' school-room and the female teacher's apartments. The girls' school is similar to the boys', but I could not examine the scholars, as the day on which I visited was a holiday.

The premises were in a very bad state of repair, and totally unfit for use.—11th February, 1880.

LOUGHGILLY, MULLAGHMORE, TENANTRY, BOYS AND GIRLS

The boys and girls are taught in one room, leaving the original girls' school-room vacant. The reading, writing, and geography were good, while the arithmetic was fair, but the spelling and grammar, bad.

The present teacher, who is about to leave, was in the habit of teaching classics and mathematics, out of school hours, and it would be greatly to the advantage of education, if a person were employed who could prepare for the Intermediate Examinations, as this neighbourhood is stocked with primary schools.—12th February, 1880.

LURGAN, ERASMUS SMITH'S, BOYS

This is the largest school under the Erasmus Smith Board which I have visited. There were 167 boys present, though the only help the teacher had was two monitors, nor do I think these monitors were of a high class, as one of them, in the only sentence I heard him speak, made two gross errors in grammar.

The answering was very good, with the exception of grammar, which was bad, and arithmetic which was indifferent. The discipline was excellent, though the boys are children of the poorest people in the town.

25 of the pupils were Presbyterians, the rest, I. C.—23rd January, 1880.

LURGAN, ERASMUS SMITH'S, GIRLS

The answering of the girls was good in spelling and grammar; bad in geography and arithmetic; the writing was very good; the reading not nearly so good as it ought to be.

There were 13 present, and the roll is composed of 106 I. C., 12 Pres., and 3 R. C.—23rd January, 1880.

COUNTY OF CAVAN.

COOTEHILL; BESDAWN.

The answering of the 25 boys and girls present was highly satisfactory in all the subjects of a strictly primary education.

The school is carried on in a miserable farm-house, which is in no way suitable for the purpose, though there is a vacant parochial school-house close at hand, to which it would be very desirable to move it.—17th February, 1889.

COOTEHILL, TULLYVIN.

The teacher of this school is an intelligent and painstaking person, but much in need of proper direction from an inspector. This I fear he does not get, as the examination is carried on by a neighbouring clergyman, who, as far as I could judge from the condition of the school, has little experience in such matters.

I examined in all the usual English subjects.

The junior classes were decidedly bad in reading, spelling, arithmetic, and geography; while the senior class answered well in grammar, geography, Euclid, and algebra.

The school is thought well of in the country, and attended by children of all religious denominations, and it seems a pity that its usefulness should be hindered by the want of regular professional inspection.

There were present 24 girls and 36 boys; and the roll is composed of 40 Irish Church, 24 Presbyterians, 7 Roman Catholics, and 2 Methodists.—17th February, 1889.

COUNTY OF DONEGAL.

DONEGAL, PAROCHIAL, ROBERTSON'S.

This school I found in a very unsatisfactory state. I examined the 26 boys and girls present in the ordinary subjects, and the answering was the worst I have ever heard. The school-room too, was most unsuitable, it is flagged, and the floor becomes quite wet in damp weather, which must, in my opinion, be a cause of sickness, and even of death, to children with bare feet.—3th February, 1889.

DONEGAL, TOWNAWILLY, TENANTRY.

This school is conducted by National teachers, and is about to be placed under the National Board. The answering of the 60 pupils present was highly satisfactory, and they showed an intelligence and quickness very gratifying to an examiner.

In the teacher's house there are only two habitable rooms; if the walls were raised a few feet, two additional rooms would be rendered available, which are at present merely lofts and utterly unfit for use.—3th February, 1889.

LIFFORD, FREE, NATIONAL, BOYS AND GIRLS.

The answering in the programme of the National Board was very good, and I have no doubt that the schools are well conducted by the present teachers.

The house belonging to the school, from the endowment, is very old, in bad condition, and totally inadequate for the number of boys, girls, and infants attending, so that the male school is now carried on in the Parochial Hall, and the old house left to the girls and infants.

A large legacy (some £15,000) has been left by a Miss Prior for the endowment of an intermediate and primary school, and some of the trustees are very anxious to amalgamate the endowments. If this cannot be done I fear the old endowment will become practically useless, as Lifford is not large enough to supply children for both schools.—17th February, 1889.

LIFFORD, NATIONAL, ROBERTSON'S.

I examined here the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth classes, and the answering in all was good.

The school building is very unsuitable in every respect. The school-rooms could only accommodate 72 scholars, whilst there were 100 present on the day of my visit. There is no proper ventilation, the windows being cordless, so that they must be either open fully, or not at all, and the teacher's rooms are scarcely high enough to stand upright in them. I may say that everything connected with the National Board was satisfactory, while everything connected with the Robertson endowment was quite the reverse.—3rd February, 1889.

RAY, INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S.

I examined the 35 scholars present in arithmetic, spelling, grammar, and geography, and the answering in all was unsatisfactory.

The condition of the premises showed culpable neglect on the part of the Society, as the wood-work, and everything which could decay, were allowed to go to ruin, until the appointment of the present teacher, at whose suggestion certain improvements have been made, though the house is yet far from being in a satisfactory state.—4th February, 1889.

COUNTY OF DOWN.

ANNABLY, NATIONAL, BOYS.

This is a well conducted National school, and the boys answered well in the usual programme. There were 38 present; all Presbyterians, except 6, who were members of the Irish Church.—21st January, 1880.

ANNABLY, NATIONAL, GIRLS.

The answering of the girls was quite as good as that of the boys, and convinced me that the school is well managed, and in good order. There were 20 present, and the roll is composed of 73 Pres., 8 I. C., and 2 R. C.—21st January, 1880.

DOWAGRADE, ENDOWED.

This is one of the schools under the Board of Erasmus Smith, and is inspected by them twice a year.

The premises are now in good order, but all the repairs and improvements have been made by the patron, Mr. Delachanale, who informed me that, after applying three times to the Board, he had to pay for everything himself. The answering of the senior classes was good, but that of the juniors deficient in spelling and arithmetic.

Thirty of the boys receive a uniform, and £2, Irish, as a fee when leaving. The roll is made up of 49 I. C., and 3 Methodists.—24th January, 1880.

DOWNPATRICK, BLUE, BOYS.

In this school, 29 poor boys receive a good English education free, 10 of them receive a uniform and £2 10s. when leaving, as an apprentice fee.

The answering of the 19 boys present was highly creditable in the usual English subjects, but the working in arithmetic was decidedly below average.

The school-room was in good order, and suitable for the accommodation of 60.

The teacher's apartments were very much in need of painting and papering.

The sanitary arrangements, both for the schools and old men's asylum attached, were most defective, as the premises had not been cleaned within the memory of one of the oldest men in the institution.—23rd January, 1880.

DOWNPATRICK, BLUE, GIRLS.

This is in every respect similar to the boys' school. The answering of the 18 present was good, with the exception of arithmetic, which was no better than with the boys.

These schools are confined to members of the Irish Church, and are inspected by the Church Education Society.—23rd January, 1880.

HOLYWOOD, SULLIVAN'S, NATIONAL, BOYS.

This is in every respect a first class National school, and the instruction given is of a very high order. The head master, who is a B. Sc. of London University, is a most intelligent person, and peculiarly well fitted to teach and manage the large number of boys under his charge. The answering of the classes, which I examined, showed not only a knowledge of their programme, but also an intelligence rarely to be met with in primary schools, while the writing of the majority of the boys was excellent. There is a good chemical laboratory, and the head master's pupils have been wonderfully successful at the examinations conducted by the Science and Art Department.

There were 125 boys present.—22nd January, 1880.

HOLYWOOD, SULLIVAN'S, NATIONAL, GIRLS.

The answering of the girls was highly creditable in reading, spelling, and arithmetic, and the instruction given in drawing and vocal music seemed extremely good. The discipline is strictly maintained, and the school well conducted in every respect.

There were 62 girls present; and the roll is composed of 68 I. C., 16 Pres., and 8 Dissenters.—22nd January, 1880.

HOLYWOOD, SULLIVAN'S, UPPER.

I examined the 5 boys present, on the day of my visit, in English subjects, Euclid, algebra, arithmetic, Latin and German grammar, and one boy in experimental physics. The answering in English subjects, Latin grammar, and arithmetic was very good, but the knowledge of mathematics and German was extremely limited.

This school is for two reasons unsuitable for an intermediate school, first, its proximity to Belfast, which induces the boys to go into the excellent and very successful schools of that town; secondly, it is impossible for one man to prepare boys in mathematics, classics, and English for the three grades of the Intermediate examinations.—23rd January, 1880.

THE ENDOWED SCHOOLS COMMISSION.

COUNTY OF FERMANAGH.

KERR, TURNER, VAUGHAN'S CHARITY.

The answering of both boys and girls in this school was good, and I am sure it is greatly due to the systematic inspection carried on by Mr. Rodkin.

The dormitories were clean and airy, though I feel bound to condemn the system of urinals fixed in the walls, which is here adopted. The infirmary was unfurnished, and in a room directly underneath, paraffin and other oils are kept, which would render the atmosphere most unhealthy for any sick person in the rooms above.—30th February, 1890.

COUNTY OF LONDONDERRY.

COLERAINE; BERNESFORD-PLACE, IRISH SOCIETY'S, NATIONAL, BOYS.

This school is under the National Board, and is worked most efficiently by the present teacher.

The school-room is commodious, and suitable for the number of pupils attending.

There were 183 present, and the roll is made up of 177 Presbyterians, 137 Irish Church, 23 Dissenters, and 1 Roman Catholic.—30th January, 1890.

COLERAINE, BERNESFORD-PLACE, IRISH SOCIETY'S, NATIONAL, GIRLS.

This school is also under the National Board, and is exceedingly well conducted. The discipline was peculiarly good, the changes are made to the music of an harmonium.

There were 174 present; and on roll 153 Presbyterians, 103 Irish Church, and 13 Dissenters.—30th January, 1890.

LONDONDERRY, GWTN'S CHARITABLE INSTITUTION.

I examined the boys of this Institution in reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, grammar, and geography, and the answering in these subjects was highly satisfactory.

The house seemed nicely kept, and the grounds about it were beautifully laid out.

There were, in the school, as boarders, 21 Presbyterians, 17 Irish Church, and 16 Roman Catholics; all these, though they may attend their respective places of worship, are bound to read the Bible.—31st January, 1890.

MAGHERAFELT, RAINEY'S CHARITY.

This is now only a day-school, and the building, which has been erected for it, is well suited for that purpose, and in good repair.

The present teacher has entirely changed the course of instruction, and now tries to teach classics, mathematics, French, and German, though, I fear, with no very great amount of success. The answering of the boys in English and mathematics was very poor. There is a good classical school in the town, and Rainey's school would be much more useful if it were made an English and Commercial school.

The roll is composed of 21 Irish Church, 16 Presbyterians, and 3 Roman Catholics.—29th January, 1890.

COUNTY OF MONAGHAN.

MONAGHAN, JACKSON'S, NATIONAL.

This is an ordinary National school, and the children answered as well as they usually do in those schools.

The premises consist of two school-rooms—of which one is in use, and the other fitted-up as a room for bible-classes, &c., connected with the parish—and a house, in which four poor old women used to be lodged, which is now vacant.

The premises, connected with the schools, are in very bad repair.

There were 45 pupils present.—10th February, 1890.

COUNTY OF TYRONE.

DUNGANNON, ERASMUS SMITH'S, BOYS.

The boys of this school answered well in spelling, grammar, and geography, but they were very deficient in arithmetic.

The school-room was in good order; and the discipline maintained, excellent.

There were 47 present on the day of my visit.—13th February, 1890.

DUNGANNON, ERASMUS SMITH'S, GIRLS.

The answering was very similar to that of the boys, and showed the same deficiency in arithmetic, which, indeed, is common to most of the schools of the Erasmus Smith Board.

The walls of the mistress's room were damp, and the boarding of the floor broken, in two or three places.

There were 43 girls present.

These schools are, I understand, about to be placed under the National Board, and I have no doubt that they will be improved by the change.—13th February, 1890.

PROVINCE OF CONNAUGHT.

COUNTY OF GALWAY.

CLIFDEN, IRISH CHURCH MISSION, BOYS.

The answering of the boys, 16 in number, was disgraceful; nor could I make any distinction between the subjects, all being about equally bad. The fault, I think, does not lie so much with the teacher, who seemed a suitable person, as with the managers, who employ all inspectors gentlemen who overlook the faults of a school, giving at the same time a glowing account of all that seems to them worthy of praise. It is unnecessary to add that such inspectors are totally useless.—19th November, 1879.

CLIFDEN, IRISH CHURCH MISSION, GIRLS.

The answering of the girls in the usual subjects was passably good, with the exception of the senior class in arithmetic.

The buildings are nicely situated, and in excellent order. There were 22 girls and 20 infants present.—19th November, 1879.

GALWAY, ST NICHOLAS', NATIONAL.

The answering of the 78 boys and girls present was very good in the National programme, though I noticed many signs of too much "rote" work, and consequently a want of intelligence, many of the children seeming to be perfectly ignorant of the meaning of what they read in their class-books. The dictation was particularly good. As to derivation of words, I thought it quite unnecessary to examine children of this age and social condition, so that I cannot state whether they have made much progress, since they were examined by the Assistant Commissioner in 1855; while I have pleasure in reporting that the tendency to "profane swearing," spoken of by that gentleman as noticeable among the girls, has, as far as I could judge, totally disappeared.—18th November, 1879.

COUNTY OF ROSCOMMON.

ROSCOMMON, INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S, BANELASH INSTITUTE.

This is one of the boarding schools belonging to the Incorporated Society, and, as in their boys' schools, the girls gain admittance by competitive examination.

The answering was exceedingly good in the subjects of a primary education, including English history. The house was in excellent order, and very suitable for the 18 girls present.—26th November, 1879.

COUNTY OF SLEIGO.

SLEIGO; FREDERICK-GRANGE, INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S INSTITUTE.

This is, in my opinion, the best of the Incorporated Society's schools, which I have examined.

The answering of the boys, in a thorough English and advanced mathematical course, was most creditable, and the writing was clear and legible.

The house is kept in good order, but I noticed the want of an infirmary, and also of a bath-room. There is not a single bath for the use of the boys.—7th February, 1880.

APPENDIX D.

REPORT BY MR EDMUND MURPHY, JP, INSPECTOR OF ESTATES.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN—I have the honour herewith to present you with my report on the estates belonging to various endowments for educational purposes in Ireland. I have not thought it necessary to have a set of maps prepared, inasmuch as I have had access to the very complete volume of maps prepared by Mr. Murland, Endowed Estates Inspector for the former Commission, which show sufficiently accurately the lands which are the subject of my report. I have visited and carefully inspected the greater portion of the estates comprised in my report, but have not thought it necessary to inspect those lands out of which head rents and other perpetuity interests are derived. I have to express my thanks to the various Boards and their agents, with whom I have come in contact, for the courtesy and kindness exhibited towards me, and for the readiness and facility with which they endeavoured to afford me any information sought from them. I have, wherever practicable, endeavoured to contrast the Poor Law valuation with the rents of the lands under review. This I have done more in compliance with the prevalent ideas of the day than with any hope that such comparison would afford any reliable basis on which to form an opinion as to the fairness of the present rents. All through this inquiry I have found numerous instances in which the valuation is utterly at variance with the letting value of the land, and most uneven as concerning lands of the same quality. As a general rule, all over the grazing counties of Ireland, I have found the valuation very much below the figures placed on lands of a similar quality in the same localities, but which are devoted to tillage purposes, arising, no doubt, from the fact of the low price of beef and butter at the period when the valuation was made in the south and west of Ireland, and of the high price of other agricultural produce. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion that the Poor Law valuation affords no basis whatever on which to estimate the letting value of the lands in the south, west, and midland counties of Ireland. The impressions formed on my mind by the inspections I have made will be gathered from my observations on each estate. I have endeavoured to state as fully as possible the data on which I ground my impressions, so that your Commission may have ample opportunity of arriving at independent conclusions. It will be amply evident from reading my report on the estates of the Royal Schools in Ireland, that I formed a very strong impression of the mismanagement of that property, and I think it only due to the agents of those estates to record my opinion that the fault does not rest at their doors. As a rule, I found those gentlemen to be active, intelligent, and competent—fully alive to the deficiencies of their management, but the complaint was general that their recommendations were not attended to. They have been supplied with no suitable or sufficient records of the estates. The maps, which were evidently got up at great expense, and must have caused much trouble in preparation, are now obsolete and utterly useless. There has been no personal supervision of the estates on the part of the Board, and the agents have thus had no support in carrying out rules and regulations which they are quite aware should have been enforced. Large sums of money have been expended in improvements, and, generally speaking, no return has been received for this outlay. The tenantry are holding their lands at very much below the average rents of the districts in which they are situated. They have been fostered and assisted, perhaps, in a too indiscriminate manner, and yet, with all this, I was sorry to observe on some of the estates a spirit of insubordination, which certainly one would not have expected, considering the treatment the tenants had received from the Board. I am glad to be able to add my opinion that under the management of the present secretary, who has recently paid a visit to most of the estates, and whose very admirable code of rules for their management will be found in my report, matters will assume a more prosperous appearance on those estates. The maps should be at once revised, the rentals corrected so as to be an exact record of the tenancies, the agents should be held responsible that no further subdivisions shall take place, and arrangements should be made for at least one annual visit to the estates by some member of the Board, or other deputed person, qualified to form a just estimate of the various matters of estate management that might come before him. These remarks have general application to all the estates I inspected. I found the tenantry, as a rule, largely expectant of allowances of one kind or another, and not as self-reliant as they should be, and certainly not in as prosperous a condition as the very favourable terms on which they hold their farms would warrant one in expecting, affording further proof of what I have often observed—that a very low rent is not conducive to industry, particularly where the tenancy is a yearly one.

In conclusion I may say that the impression made on my mind in reference to the Endowed Estates is that they are not, as a rule, managed so carefully as private estates are generally, and that the supervision on the part of the various Boards is rather lax. They are, in fact, the worst class of absentee. Usually the agent of an absentee landlord is vested with full authority, or has little difficulty or delay in communicating with his principal; but the agents of the estates under consideration are controlled by Boards who meet only at stated intervals, and who very generally, as represented to me, lend a deaf ear to the agents' appeals.

I have the honour to be, my Lords and Gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

EDM. MURPHY.

I.—ESTATES UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF EDUCATION.

(a.) ARMAHIC ROTAL SCHOOL ESTATE.

This estate is situated about half way between the towns of Newry and Armagh, and on the leading road connecting these towns. It consists of six townlands, as set forth below—

From the above figures the following may be deduced—

The average acreage of each tenant's farm, 14a. 0n. 9p., statute measure; of each tenant's rent, £13 11s. 7d. average rent per acre 19s. 3d. The rent is 1s. per cent over the Poor Law Valuation, excluding the buildings, and 18½ per cent under the valuation, the buildings included. There is a further sum received each year, averaging £22 11s. 6d., the proceeds of auction of hay grown on marshy land to which I shall again refer. The outgoing of the estates estimated for the four years, 1875 to 1878, inclusive, average £272 9s. 8d., from which must be deducted £6 6s. 6d. each year, for income tax and poor rate received from Church Commissioners, leaving the net outgoing at £266 3s. 2d. In the rental to November 1st, 1878, furnished March, 1879, there was only an arrear of £10 2s. due, at the date of Mr. Murland's report in 1867, the arrears amounted to £2,601. There are about seventy acres of land flooded by the Cusher River, and rendered almost useless. The land is of a deep, alluvial character, and would amply repay a considerable expenditure. At present only the small sum mentioned above (£22 11s. 6d.), is realized for the semi-aquatic grass which grows upon it. There is a small mill on Mr. Cope's estate adjoining, which is allowed the privilege of diverting the water from the Cusher River. This is effected by means of a weir, in which are two small sluices, through which the flood water is discharged into the original course. These sluices are so small that they create much unnecessary damage—indeed it is lamentable to see so valuable a tract of land as that on each side of the Cusher, on the property of Mr. Cope, as well as on the lands under consideration, destroyed by exercise of the right of a miserable little mill, to obstruct the flow of the water. A small drainage district under the Drainage Acts should be formed. This obstruction could then be easily got rid of, and a large tract of good productive land added to the resources of the district. I think the system allowed of letting the marsh land by auction is highly objectionable. The ground is marked off into small lots varying from half an acre to four acres. These lots are held practically by the same parties each year for just what they wish to pay for them, and I need scarcely add that the sum paid is the very smallest that decency will permit them to offer. That the prices realized are only a nominal value was forcibly illustrated this very season, when, owing to some personal matter, a man named Weir bid over the head of Michael Murlagh and offered 30s. or 32s. for the lot that Murlagh had heretofore held at 6s. I think strenuous efforts should be made to reclaim these meadows, and if this cannot be effected they should be added to the farms of the tenants at a fair annual rent. Tenant-right appears to prevail to a very full extent on this estate, the lands being sold by auction. In a recent case Samuel Malcolmeson paid £150 for 5a. 1r. 20r statute measure which adjoined his farm, the rent being, in addition, about 20s. per acre. There can be no doubt, however, that the lands are most moderately let, and this accounts in a great measure for the excessive price paid by Malcolmeson. In the same townland (Bolton) Mrs. Malcolmeson has sublet her farm, containing about 16 acres, to Thomas Alexander, she retaining the house and a garden of about half an acre. Her rent is £15 13s. 6d. Thomas Alexander pays this rent and also gives Mrs. Malcolmeson £20 a year. The Poor Law Valuation of this farm, including the house, is £23 11s.; without the house £17. Some of this land is good value for 30s. per statute acre. The Commissioners at an early date gave the tenants assistance to build good slated houses, indeed in some parts of the estate the tenants appear to me to be over housed and all, so far as I saw, appeared to be thriving and industrious. The estate has evidently improved much since 1857, the date of Mr. Murland's report.

(b.) BALLYROAN ENDOWED SCHOOL ESTATE

This estate consists of the townland of Cappakoughlin or Cleard, in the Queen's County, together with 48a. 1r. 34r. close to the village of Ballyroan in the same county, on which latter lot the school of Ballyroan stands, and a head rent is payable of £22 18s. 4d.

The townland of Cappaloughlin is distant about one and a half miles from the town of Mountath and is bounded by the river Nore. The lands of this estate are scheduled below—

| Townland. | No. of Tenements. | Area, Statute Measure. | Average Rent Paid. | Poor Law Valuation of Lands. | Poor Law Valuation of Buildings. |
|-----------------------------------|-------------------|------------------------|--------------------|------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| | | A. R. P. | £ s. d. | £ s. d. | £ s. d. |
| Ballyroan, | 3 | 48 1 34 | 46 8 0 | 42 5 0 | 15 5 0 |
| Cappaloughlin, | 53 | 1,438 1 30 | 741 8 5 | 596 12 0 | 87 13 0 |
| Bog, | | 300 0 0 | — | — | — |
| | 56 | 1,776 3 14 | 787 6 5 | 638 17 0 | 103 16 0 |
| Rate of Turf (Average), | | — | 17 9 0 | 103 18 0 | — |
| | | | 804 15 5 | 742 15 0 | |

From these figures may be deduced that the average area of each holding in Cappaloughlin is 25½ acres statute.

The average rent of each holding is

The average rent per acre, inclusive of bog, £13 6 0

The lands are let at 19½ per cent. over the Poor Law valuation, excluding the buildings, and 7½ per cent. over that valuation including the buildings.

The outgoings of the estate as furnished by the agent, and taking the year 1878 as an average year may be classified as follows:—

| | | | |
|------------------------------------|---------|--|-----------|
| National School Teacher, | £ s. d. | Law Costs, | £ s. d. |
| Fuel for School, | 42 0 0 | Agent's Fees, | 2 8 9 |
| Head Rent of Ballyroan, | 8 13 4 | Stamps and Stationery, | 40 11 4 |
| Quilt Rent, | 32 13 5 | Allowance to one Tenant, | 1 15 0 |
| Tithe Rent-charge, | 14 14 6 | Paid for making a Bog Drain, | 25 0 0 |
| Balliff, | 39 1 7 | | 8 0 0 |
| Taxes, | 10 10 0 | | |
| County Cess, | 32 15 9 | | |
| | 1 13 5 | | £286 17 2 |

The two last items are the exceptional items in the expenditure for the year 1878.

The average outgoings for the four years ending November, 1878, I find to be £237 15s., of which about £222 may be taken as constant, the excess being occasioned by allowances to tenants for drainage or repairs to their houses. I observe in the accounts that the agent debits himself with an annual sum of £5 13s., stated to be "instalment of drainage loan and interest."

The land in the townland of Cappaloughlin is of excellent quality, and the farms are well fenced, and the houses comfortable.

There are over 300 acres of bog conveniently situated in three divisions. There is also limestone on the estate.

The tenants are charged 2s. 6d. a perch for the ground covered by the turf they cut; they hold the same turf banks continuously, outsiders are charged 5s. a perch.

Fenton Conroy has an excellent and well-cultivated farm. He has built two houses, one of which is occupied as a public house, and one is sub-let to a man named Moore. These houses are close to the Mountath Railway Station, and are built on the site which Mr. Murland recommended should be offered as building sites. The Board do not derive any advantage, such as Mr. Murland anticipated, and which, I think, they might fairly have expected for permission to Conroy to erect these houses, as the bog becomes cut out, the tenants reclaim it, and are holding it free of rent.

Kavanagh Dumas complains that his rent is too high, he pays £30 11s. 2d.; the poor law valuation is £26. He was "allowed" slates for his house. He says he drained a considerable portion of cut-away bog five years ago, and was not allowed for it. I think it is very questionable whether he is paying any rent for this reclaimed land.

He thinks he should be allowed for the loss he sustained by death from distemper amongst his cattle.

Tenant-right is recognised on the estate. Widow Delany sold three acres to John Cullen; the price was made by arbitration.

Mr. Hawkeworth holds an excellent farm of 161 acres statute measure, for which he pays £106 16s. a year. The rental of the townland of Cappaloughlin, when Mr. Murland made his report in 1837 was £727 15s. 3d.; the rental of this townland now is £741 3s. 5d. Skerrard and Co. valued it in 1816 at £1,065 15s. 7d.

In my opinion the present rent is very much under the letting value, and the tenants have every reason to be thankful for the generous way in which they have been treated. They were supplied last season with potatoes for seed of the Champion variety by the Board, and the produce is very large indeed.

There is a capital National school on the estate; the Board supplement the teacher's salary by £42 a year. The average attendance, however, is only about forty-five, which is much less than might be expected from the number of the tenants on the estate. The teacher complains that the tenantry are not very anxious for the education of their children. I do not know of any way in which an agent could more benefit the tenantry on an estate than by using his influence to get them to send their children to school; and certainly, on an estate where the tenantry derive so many advantages, the agent ought to be able to use very considerable and very legitimate pressure in this direction. The tenantry of the estate are, I believe, all of the Roman Catholic persuasion, and the Board have very judiciously appointed a teacher of the same persuasion. The teacher's wife assists in the school, but the attendance is not large enough to enable her to obtain salary from the National Board.

The lands at Ballymore are held as shown on the schedule. I visited the school at about three P.M. on a Saturday evening. The master was absent, and the only occupant of the house was the solitary "boarder" of the establishment, a nice intelligent lad. He informed me that about twenty day boys attend the school. The school-room was in a most untidy condition, the books torn and lying about, the walls and ceiling dark, dirty, and dismal, the bed of the "boarder" unmade, and there was a general appearance of a determined abhorrence of soap and water.

The hallif resides on the estate. He appears to be a respectable man who evidently thinks that the "less he knows the better" He could scarcely tell me the acreage or rental of any of the tenants. I asked, both by letter and telegram, for some information from the agent, but I received no reply, and I was, therefore, at a considerable loss to get at the required details to enable me to make my report.

On this estate the agent appears to retain the balance at foot of his yearly account for a considerable time. Thus in his account dated 26th January, 1878, for year ending November, 1877, the balance at foot in the agent's hands is £416 2s 3d, which does not appear to have been placed to credit of the Board until the 29th of March, 1878, at least this is the date given in the Board's cash book. The balance at foot of account for year ending November, 1878, is £423 13s 4d. The agent does not debit himself at all in his account for 1879 with this balance, but he lodged it to credit of the Board in April, 1879, more than four months after his account closed (on the debit side at least). The account gives no clue as to the date at which the outgoings were paid. The agent only debits himself with the cash he receives, and takes no notice of the arena.

I am informed that the tenants of an adjoining estate, to the number of thirty or thereabouts some years ago took forcible possession of a considerable tract of the bog on the estate near Mount-rath, and have held it ever since.

(a) BANAGHER ROYAL SCHOOL ESTATE.

This estate is situate in the King's County, and consists of three townlands, one Bocknarrigg, about one and a half miles north of Parsonstown, and Ballincurrey and Derry about six miles north-east of Parsonstown.

These townlands are set forth in the following schedule :—

| Number of Transacts | Transacts | Account, British Measure | Yearly Rent | Four Year Valuation | | | |
|---------------------|--------------------------------|--------------------------|-------------|---------------------|--|--------------|--|
| | | | | of Lands | | of Buildings | |

| 10 | | 555 0 23 | 179 4 8 | 169 10 0 | | 11 5 0 | |

Of the above acreage 166 acres are now retained in the Board's own control. The remaining 359 acres are in the hands of ten tenants as set forth above. The average acreage therefore of each holding is close on thirty-six acres. The average rent of each tenement is £17 18s. The average acreable rent of land in tenants' hands is 6d.

The Poor Law valuation given above includes £11 for bags in the Board's own hands, the tenanted lands are therefore valued at £138 10. The yearly rent is 11½ per cent. over the Poor Law valuation, excluding the buildings, and about 5 per cent. over the valuation if the buildings be included.

The above average acreage does not convey a correct idea of how the lands are held, as —

The outgoings of the estate, so far as same have passed through the agent's hands, have averaged for the five years ending November, 1879, £35 per annum, made up of the usual outlay of an estate and including a rentcharge to Lord Downshire of £2 10s. 4d. per annum.

In year 1875 the agent charged £10 10s. expenses in connection with the business of the Banagher School and his travelling expenses.

In 1879 he charges £5 10s. expenses incurred in his visits to inspect the school. £1 a year is charged for stamps, stationery, and postage; and in 1879 these charges amounted to £1 10s. for this estate of ten tenants.

The tenants are all yearly. The arable portions of the estate are generally of a good sound fertile character, and the farms are well fenced, and the houses moderately comfortable.

In 1837 the rental, according to Mr. Muland was £164 10s. 7d., it is now £169 10s. The estate was valued in 1816 by Messrs. Sherard and Co., to £288 16s. 7d., in 1842 the rent paid by the tenants was £260 3s. 5d.

The rent was reduced in the depressed times of 1847, and has never since been raised.

Booleenagry townland adjoins Lord Rosse's demesne, there is a considerable portion of scrubby land on this townland. The best part of the lands are held by John Madden, a merchant, who resides in Parsonstown. He holds thirty-three acres, for which he pays £14 10s., the Poor Law valuation being £17 15s. The other tenants on this townland hold at or slightly under the Poor Law valuation.

John Kelly held twenty acres statute measure, at a rent of £6 12s. per annum, the Poor Law valuation being £6 10s. He wished to part his interest, and with the agent's consent, Downey, the adjoining tenant, bought the farm for £40, but before the transaction could be completed a man named Morris, from another estate, offered £47 10s. and Kelly accepted it, and Morris, though warned that he would not be acknowledged as tenant, has gone into possession, and defies the agent.

There is no turf bog on this townland, and the tenants complain bitterly of the way they were treated by the Board, they state that they were offered a turf bog on Ballinacurry, one of the other townlands of the estate, some four and a half miles from Booleenagry, they say they told the agent that the distance was so great this would be no boon to them unless allowed to dispose of the turf bank thus given them, and with the proceeds pay for bog nearer to them, they say the agent agreed to this and the arrangement lasted for four years, when they were interdicted and a demand made, and attempted to be enforced by legal proceedings, which, however, failed, for the four years' rent which would have been charged to strangers.

Legal proceedings having failed the tenants received a notice from the secretary of the Board, warning them that if they did not give up the turf banks they would be evicted, and they accordingly gave them up. They think they have been harshly treated. They say that the Board never expended one shilling towards the education of any of their children, and that until a week or two before my visit the present agent had never "stood on the ground."

I am, however, glad to say that this portion of the estate does not exhibit any signs of want of supervision, the tenants are industrious and apparently comfortable, and their farms well cultivated. In my opinion it was a pity not to have divided the farms now held by Madden, amongst the other tenants when it was vacant, it would have increased their means, and they, with one exception, appear worthy of any kindness that can be shown them.

The townlands of Ballinacurry and Derry are situate some four and a half miles further from Parsonstown, in a N.E. direction. There are only five tenants on these two townlands, Mrs. Mahon occupies the whole of Derry, with the exception of the bog, the extent of bog in this townland is 50A 1R 11R. Mrs. Downey's farm therefore contains 171A. 1R. 11R. She pays £22 2s. 8d., the Poor Law valuation including the buildings is £77 3s., excluding the buildings £74 5s. The rent is therefore close on 20 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation of the lands, as the average rent for letting is only 11½ per cent. over the Poor Law valuation, this poor woman feels aggrieved, her rent, however, is only 30s. the statute acre, only 6d. per acre over the average rent of the rest of the property.

Mrs. Mahon has lost her husband and has a family of four girls, and on the day of my visit the mother and daughters were working in the fields most industriously. The house and out-offices are not such as should be on such a farm, which, in my opinion, is too large for the tenant's means, a considerable portion of the farm skirts the bog, and is becoming covered with gorse. The interest of the estate and of the tenant would be best served if this farm were divided into two.

Ballinacurry is only separated from Derry by the tract of bog before referred to. This bog is let to parties by the season for turf cutting, but the extent to which this can be carried out is limited by the want of drainage of the bog, and as the adjoining proprietor is draining his bogs, the bailiff thinks that in a year or two this source of income will cease altogether, it will not be easy to find an outfall, and I think it was a mistake to let slip an opportunity, which I understand was offered by the adjoining proprietor to aid in establishing an outfall mutually available.

Considerable tracts of the bog as yet out have been partially reclaimed by the tenants, and as I understand are not rented. Thomas Neil has I should say close on fifteen statute acres taken in this way. On Mrs. Sweeney's farm there is a cottier who holds 2s. 2R. 2SP. of what this tenant calls the common, i.e. the cut out bog land, he pays no rent, and repudiates any liability to anyone. I think these townlands require immediate attention in these matters.

Mrs. Sweeney has sold seven and a half statute acres of her farm to Thomas Neil under somewhat peculiar circumstances. Neil was the bailiff of the estate, and as I am informed told the agent that his farm needed the portion of land Mrs. Sweeney wanted to sell, and on this consideration obtained the agent's consent to buy it, and arranged with Mrs. Sweeney, but the representations made to the agent were deceptive. The land in question did not touch Neil's farm, but on the contrary touched Jane Gilligan's, and in fact there was no fence between her land and that under review. Neil has been dismissed from his bailiffship, and I believe a notice to quit has been served on him in order to compel him to give up the land in dispute, which unquestionably should be added to Gilligan's farm, and she is quite ready to pay for the tenant-right.

(d) CARTSFORTH ROYAL SCHOOL ESTATE.

This estate consists of the townland of Sheenamore, in the county Wicklow, about eight miles from Rathdrum, and two from Aughrim. The area of the townland is 590A. 0B. 10P. statute measure.

There are twenty tenancies shown on the rental; but in reality there are only nine tenants of farms, and one of a house and garden. Of the 590A. 0B. 10P. contained in the townland, 284A. 3B. are mountain, which the tenants hold in common. The remaining 305A. 1B. are arable and pasture land, varying in quality from thin poor soil to deep rich loam, and in elevation from six to seven hundred feet,—the mountains being 1,111 feet—over sea level. Of the 305A. 1B. the teacher of the school holds 5A. 3B. 4P. free of rent as a parsonage. From these figures may be deduced that the average acreage of each farm is about 34½., the average rent of each tenant, £14 13s. 6d., and the average arable rent, excluding the mountain, 8s. 9d. The poor law valuation of all the lands is, £129 10s., of which the portion held by the master of the school, free of rent, is valued at £8 5s., leaving the valuation of the lands, for which rent is received at £124 5s. The rent received is, therefore, slightly more than 6 per cent. higher than the poor law valuation. The outgoings of the estate for four years, up to and including 1878, taken from the agent's accounts, averaged each year, £46 7s. 10d., of which £25 1s. 7d. was allowed for June, to be applied to the land, the balance being the usual permanent outgoings of an estate, taxes, rent-charges, fees, bailiffs, and sundries. The teacher of the school receives £55 a year, paid direct by the Commissioners. The school-house is a commodious building, occupied by the teacher as a residence, one small apartment being set apart as a school-room, in which some thirty children receive instruction. These pupils belong to the Protestant denominations. The Roman Catholic children of the estate receive instruction in a National school which adjoins the estate. My inspection was made on a Saturday, when there was no school held, and the house was being whitewashed; but I cannot hide the impression made on my mind, that there is a very great want of cleanliness and order about the whole system. The roll-book does not appear to be regularly kept; the desks old and much abused—the whole place, in fact, seemed to me to pine for supervision, and that healthy competition which the National system of education is so calculated to generate. The tenants appear to be comfortable; they hold their farms very much under the rent which they might fairly be asked to pay, and they receive in the shape of lime, an abatement 15 per cent. of the rent each year! There is no tannery proper on the estate, but the tenants supply themselves with fuel, by cutting away the surface of the mountain, which has already too little vegetable surface, and will soon be utterly denuded. The bailiff of the estate lives some four miles away; he appears to be a very respectable man, and much regarded by the tenants. I suppose chiefly because he acts up to the principle that a bailiff's visits should be somewhat like "angels' visits," for most unquestionably his visits must have been "few and far between," or of the most unobtrusive character; as he does not appear to me to know the holdings of any of the tenants, and, in fact, little or nothing about the estate. His salary is only £4 a year, which does not offer much inducement for a more active performance of his duties. The tenants appear thankful for the leniency with which they have been treated, and they pay their rents regularly. The shooting of the estate is let at £2 a year.

(e) CAVAN ROYAL SCHOOL ESTATE.

This property consists of four townlands, part of a fifth, and a detached portion of land on which the school stands, all situated close to the town of Cavan, as set forth in the following schedule:—

| No. of Townlands | Townlands | Area, Statute Measure | Yearly Rent | Poor Law Valuation of Land | Poor Law Valuation of Buildings |

| | | 917 2 38 | 562 7 1 | 545 3 0 | 70 12 0 |

From the above figures may be deduced that the average acreage of each tenancy is 14A. 0B. 24P. statute measure; the average rent of each tenant, £8 10s. 6d.; the average arable rent, 12s. 1d.; the rent is excluding the buildings 3 per cent. over the Poor Law Valuation; including the buildings it is 10 per cent. under the valuation.

2 P 2

The outgoings of the estate taken on the average expenditure annually for the five years previous to 1879, have been as follows:—

| | £ | s. | d. |
|----------------|-----|----|----|
| Rentcharges, | 15 | 17 | 1 |
| Income tax, | 5 | 17 | 8 |
| Poor rates, | 23 | 1 | 2 |

| Miscellaneous, | 1 | 18 | 7 |
| Agent's fees, | 27 | 15 | 2 |
| | £83 | 14 | 3 |

In the year 1879, the outgoings amounted to £152 9s. 7d., and a sum of £58 10s. was distributed in seeds to the tenantry. This latter sum is to be refunded.

The arrears due on rental of 1878 amounted to £1,676 8s. 7d., in Mr. Murland's report (1887), it is stated that the arrears amounted to £1,679 7s. 2d., and that they had accrued in the four years from 1845 to 1848. The receipts for rents were then given on account without any gale being specified, and the rents appear to have been received chiefly by the bailiff, and in fact the accounts were in a complete muddle.

The old arrears have been retained on the estate although many of the holdings have changed hands, and many have been subdivided, and in fact the arrears have been dealt with by both agent and tenant as if they scarcely existed. One example will elucidate this matter.—John Lamb of Carabe, subdivided his farm—on which there was an old arrear of about four years rent—between his two sons, one of them got into new arrears, when he sold his interest to M'Manus, a merchant in the town of Carran; M'Manus paid £300, and was instructed by the agent to retain one year of the old arrear from Lamb. The recent arrears were of course deducted also from the purchase-money. I cannot see the good of retaining on the books the balance of the old arrear; I do not see how it could be recovered after the arrangement referred to.

M'Manus has built a good substantial house which must have cost at least £250, the whole farm only contains 2½ acres statute measure, the yearly rent is £12 2s. 10d., so that including the purchase-money M'Manus has expended £550, on an exhausted farm, making his rent amount to £40 4s. 10d., allowing 5 per cent. on the expenditure, or about 35s. 10d. per statute acre, equal to 58s. 2d. per Irish acre.

The Board have dealt most generously in not deducting the full amount of the old arrear from Lamb, and by permitting this transaction they certainly have condoned all prospective interest in this portion of the estate.

Bernard Gafney of Strapah, held 7s. 3s. statute measure, at a yearly rent of £6 14s. 11d., he owed rent and arrears to May, 1879, £51 4s. 7d., an ejectment decree was obtained in June, 1879, and Gafney has been ejected under it, but restored into possession as caretaker for six months in accordance with the statuteable period for redemption, his land is very much exhausted, and he is in abject poverty, and yet as I understand it is proposed to reinstate him as tenant, making "some arrangement" as to the arrear. Most certainly that arrangement will not be discounted in cash, and I fail to see how the estate or this individual can improve in circumstances, by the proposed arrangement. No estate can improve, if a pauper tenantry be retained on it, by any such solemnising system. It was remarked to me that Gafney would get his "bat-full of money" for the land if he would sell it, but that "nothing would induce him to do so."

It would in my humble opinion be better for the tenantry, and most unquestionably better for the estate, if it were made to be understood that a tenant once evicted may not be restored by any "arrangement" except a full discharge of his liability, and proof that his prospect of better circumstances had some solid foundation.

Subdivision prevails on this estate, but not nearly to so great an extent as on the Fermanagh property. The houses are tolerably comfortable, and the greater number of the tenants appear to be industrious; they hold their land at a very low rent over the greater portion of this estate; the townland of Billis is superior land; the townland of Tanquin is excellent land; the rent paid respectively for these townlands is under 13s. and 14s. per statute acre; they would be cheap situated as they are at double this rent.

The Board have undertaken in conjunction with the adjoining proprietor to open up a capital arterial drain from the townland of Tanquin; which will reclaim over six acres in that townland, and afford facility for the drainage of a considerable tract of land in the townland of Drumcra. The total expenditure is estimated at over £300, the Board are to pay a share of this in proportion to the land unwatered, but when the improvement shall be complete, strict injunction should be given that the tenantry may not cut away again the moory surface of the reclaimed land for fishing, a course of proceeding in the past which has rendered the present outlay necessary.

A road is much required into the townland of Tanquin, at the east end through Mrs. Brady's land on to the public road. There is no turtary on the estate, the maps which were excellent when drawn (1810), are now nearly useless, and in no wise give a true representation of the holdings, many of which have got intermixed, and there appears to be no official record of these interchanges; in one notable instance the case of Gafney above referred to as being now under eviction a portion of his holding had been sold sixty years ago, and the schoolmaster of the estate the successor to a tenant who occupied this portion has now gone into forcible possession of it despite the agent.

This estate as well as the Keniskillen school estate has suffered, deeply suffered, for want of more active and intelligent supervision, but under the régime of the present agent if supported, I have no doubt things will very soon assume a brighter aspect.

(f) CLONMILL ENDOWED SCHOOL ESTATE

This estate consists of the townland of Lisnareira, in the county of Tipperary, situated about five miles to the east of Templemore.

The townland has a subdivision called Killina, a portion of the townland of Lisnareira, which belongs to the parish of Kilvanoge, the greater portion of the townland being in the parish of Templemshy.

| Lisnareira contains, | A. | R. | P. | statute measure. |

| Number of tenants, | 13 | | 17 | 12 |

Of the above acreage close on sixty acres are bog, the Poor Law valuation of which may be about £4.

From the above figures it may be deduced that the lands in the hands of the tenants give an average acreage to each of close on forty-nine acres; an average rent to each of close on £35, and that the average assessable rent is 14s 6d. The lands are let at 13s per cent over the Poor Law valuation, excluding the buildings, and slightly more than 9 per cent over that valuation if the buildings be included.

Of the thirteen tenancies on this townland, one contains 139 acres; one contains 146 acres; one contains 181 acres; one contains 56 acres; and nine average about 13 acres.

The land is chiefly a thin limestone soil, very much in need of drainage. The tenants, with the exception of those on the large holdings, are, I should say, very poor, their houses—some of them—wretched, and none, with two or three exceptions, comfortable. The lands are very unequally rented, as contrasted with the Poor Law valuation.

Thus, Tim Gwyder holds about eighteen statute acres; he pays £14 6s. 10d; the Poor Law valuation is £11 5s. He thus pays 21 per cent over the valuation.

Wm. Carroll, the bailiff of the estate, pays £10 rent, the Poor Law valuation is £12. He thus pays 20 per cent under the valuation.

Michael Kennedy holds fifty-six statute acres at £24 17s. 7d, the Poor Law value being £35.

Tim Gwyder, mentioned above, labours under the impression that he has over two acres of land under roads and a main drain, for which he is rented. He complains bitterly of being harshly treated. He was served with an ejection process, he states, for only a half-year's rent, the running gale being, however, included. He says his neighbours got abatement, and that he got none. He has twelve children, of whom seven were at school on the day of my visit. His house is a mere hovel, utterly unfit for human habitation. His land is well tilled, and he appears to be an industrious man.

The bog on this townland is greatly neglected. It requires drainage to make it available, and the road leading to it is in a bad way.

There is a National school close to the meadow of the estate, under the care of a female teacher. The Commissioners of Education do not contribute in any way towards the maintenance of this school, and it is devoid of the appliances necessary for the inculcation of habits of decency amongst the pupils.

When the Commissioners of Education got the management of these lands they were let under an old lease at £600 15s 11d, and were occupied by fifty-eight sub-tenants, two-thirds of the townland being in the hands of two. In 1847 to 1849 many wretchedly poor tenants surrendered their holdings, which in those depressed times were sold at much below their value, generally speaking.

Mrs. McGarry holds under lease a farm variously stated to contain from 146 acres to 271 acres! She does not reside on it, and a large portion is let for meadowing each year, and the hay carried off the property, and as I could not ascertain that any top-dressing is applied, I fear the land will have suffered much by the time this lease will expire, seven years hence.

I am informed that the agent has considerable difficulty in getting the rents from this townland, and that he frequently accepts bills, and returns rent as paid in the rental, when he only holds at best but questionable security for it. I do not think this is a judicious system. Sooner or later it will lead to confusion; and I think the Commissioners should have an opportunity, when they inspect their rental, of knowing the exact state of each tenancy.

The bailiff has a comfortable house which, I understand, was built by the Commissioners. He has recently purchased, with the agent's consent, some four acres of Mat Maher's farm for, I think, about £40.

Tenant-right, I am informed by the bailiff, exists on the estate, but is limited to the existing tenants—i.e., the outgoing tenant will not be allowed to sell to any but a tenant of the estate.

The outgoings of this estate for four years ending November, 1878, average £100 per annum, and consist of rentcharges, £38 8s; agent's fees, rates, and taxes, and some trifling sundries. For the year 1879 the Commissioners made sundry allowances to tenants of £30 7s 3d, but the accounts do not show how this amount has been expended.

The agent appears always to have a considerable balance in hand at closing of his yearly accounts. Thus in his account for year ending November 1st, 1877, and dated 19th January, 1878, the balance in his hands amounted to £188 16s. 8d, and this amount was not lodged to credit of the Board until 29th March, 1878.

So also the balance at foot of account for year ending November, 1878, amounting to £138 17s 9d., was not lodged in Bank until the 17th July, 1879.

The outgoings of this estate are constant, and payable at the same period of the year, and the agent could easily retain sufficient in his hands to meet these charges. At all events, I think the yearly account should be closed not by a balance in hands of the agent, but by a lodgment, which would close the account.

The agent does not debit himself with the arrears due on the estate, which, in my opinion, would be the most satisfactory way, even though the arrears on this estate may only consist of the running gale. In the account for 1879 I see the agent debits himself with the full year's rent as if paid him, claiming so arrears on the credit side. From what I learned of the estate, I am satisfied he had not received the rent in full when he closed his account for that year.

(g) DUNGANSON ROYAL SCHOOL ESTATE.

This Estate consists of six Townlands as set forth in Schedule below, and is situated about four to six miles from Dunganee, in the county of Tyrone.

| Townlands | Townlands | Acres | Bank | Poor Law Valuation | Houses |
|-------------------------|-----------|------------|-----------|--------------------|----------|

| | — | — | — | 260 14 0 | — |
| | — | — | — | 1,777 1 0 | — |

Of the above there are of arable land 1,840 acres, meadow and pasture, 1,880 acres, and of bog, 1,278 acres.

These figures give an average average of each tenant's farm of nine acres; the average rent of each tenant, £5 15s., the average acreable rent, 12s. 10d., the rent being thirteen per cent over the Poor Law valuation, exclusive of the houses, and slightly under the Poor Law valuation if the houses be included. The tithary is situated in the townlands of Derrytreck, Derrylaughan, and Aughamullan. There is no bog on the other three townlands.

Up to the year 1831 these lands were held by middlemen, and when the lease, under which they held, expired, the Commissioners got back the lands in an impoverished condition, densely populated, as is usual under the baneful sway of the middlemen. Mr. Blacker, the then agent of the Commissioners, appears to have gone to work most energetically; the farms were re-adjusted, the fences straightened, and considerable sums of money expended on improvements.

The townlands of Tumpher, Mosstown, and Lisnastane, are situated not far from the town of Coalisland, and consist of excellent arable land, quite equal in quality to lands on the adjoining property, let at much higher rents—in most instances at double the rent paid for land of equal quality by the Society's tenants. The houses on these townlands are comfortable, and the fields well fenced and nicely arranged, and, with a little more attention to the fences in having the thorns cut occasionally, these townlands would present quite a model aspect. In the rental for year ending November, 1877, now before me, there was not a shilling due on these three townlands for arrears, and indeed there could be no excuse for arrears being due, the tenants having such capital bargains of their farms. I am informed that all the tenants on this estate received on last year's rental an abatement varying from ten to fifteen per cent. This was a most generous act on the part of the Commissioners, as unquestionably the tenants should not have required any such indulgence.

The townlands of Derrytreck, Aughamullan, and Derrylaughan consist of large tracts of bog, with islands, as it were, of arable land dispersed through them, the arable land being of very fertile character, and, where cultivated, surpassing crops of potatoes and oats grow on the deep bog. The holdings on these bog townlands are very small. In Aughamullan, out of eighty-six tenancies twenty-seven are let at under £3 rent, and only eight over £10. In Derrylaughan, of eighty-three tenancies, thirty-seven are rented at under £5, and only four over £10. As a consequence, the competition for land is very keen, and the agent has no difficulty in letting the "cut-out" bog at 10s. an acre, its value being about 1s. per acre. It will take an outlay of close on £10 an acre in labour before the land will be worth the annual rent now charged for it, but the densely populated district has no employment for labour, and the tenants are only too anxious to seize upon any outlet where they may employ their time, and add to the size of their farms. In many parts of the estate, particularly in the townland of Derrytreck, the bog has been cut too low to permit of efficient drainage. The greatest care in future should be exercised in supervising the bog cutting, so as to leave the surface at least six feet over the outlet, and thus provide for sufficient drainage. I would also suggest that the cut-away bog, wherever possible, should be added to the adjoining farms, as annoyance is sure to arise where tenants' farms are permitted to overlap. There can be no doubt that the sum of 10s. per acre now being charged is too high a rent; but then it only serves to equalise the rest of the arable land, which is now held below its value, and it certainly is a very simple plan of raising the rent. There is an immense tract of bog on this estate lying in an unprofitable condition, in its present state perfectly useless, and from the large quantities of turbarry in the district, I do not see the slightest chance of this bog becoming profitable as fuel. It strikes me that with a small outlay a large portion of these bog lands might be made available for the production of crops. Judging from those I saw growing on deep bog on the estate, it is of a quality suitable for such purposes. To bring it into cultivation it should be drained by parallel drains, say thirty feet apart, made in the form of wedge or shoulder drains, each lot of, say ten acres, being bounded by open dike and bank fences, which would also form the mains or outlets for the minor drains. This work could be done for about £5 per acre, and there would be little difficulty in getting a rent of 10s. per acre, such lots would be a great boon to the tenants, whose farms are so very small at present. I would be slow to advocate the increase of the number of tenants on the estate; but I would by every means try to enlarge the holdings of those who are already on it. The present population are scarcely able to grow enough for their own support, owing to the smallness of their holdings, and now that hand-loom weaving has, I may say, died out, it is utterly impossible that the tenants on this estate can live with any degree of comfort on their present farms. The outgoings of the estate, taking the year 1878 as a guide, appear to be:—

|--|-----|-------|
| An arterial drainage rate of (now about to terminate), | 157 | 3 9 |
| Expenditure on bog, | 29 | 17 11 |
| County cess, | 9 | 2 1 |
| Tithe-charge, | 66 | 7 3 |
| Raffia, | 30 | 0 0 |
| County cess, | 14 | 15 0 |
| Poor rate, | 38 | 5 0 |
| | 29 | 18 1 |
| Income tax, | 7 | 10 0 |
| Drainage Maintenance, | 33 | 16 0 |
| Agent's fees, | 87 | 7 7 |

say £500, leaving a net income of £1,352 9s. 9d. The drainage charges will, I understand, have all been paid off in another season or so, when the outgoings will be proportionately decreased, but it will be absolutely necessary for the Commissioners to arrange some plan for the securing of the outfalls now in charge of the Drainage Board, else the very valuable tracts of meadow land, now bearing crops of hay of between three and four tons per acre, will very soon become swamps covered with semi-aquatic herbage. I allude particularly to the Blackwater River district, bounding the townlands of Derryteek and Aughamullan. An agriculturist was formerly kept on this estate, but his services have been dispensed with, and now the agent has only the assistance of the bailiff, who appears to be a steady, respectable man. His attention should, however, be carefully directed to the preservation of the estate by the prevention of the waste which has been carried to some extent, caused by the too-deep cutting of the bog, a waste that is quite inexcusable on an estate where there is a superabundance of turf, and where half an acre can be got for 8s. a year. An income of close on £200 a year is derived from the letting of turf bog to the tenants, who pay 8s. per half acre, and to outsiders, who pay 16s. per half-acre, and who cut the turf for sale. I directed the agent's attention to the enormous "crop" of turf on the banks at the time of my visit, a circumstance which raised in my mind the idea that the banks had been cut twice this season.

The accounts appear to be well vouched and carefully audited, but I would suggest that the agent should debit himself with the full year's rent each year, and not, as his custom now is, with only the amount received.

(b) ENNISKILLEN ROYAL SCHOOL ESTATE.

This estate consists of thirty-nine townlands and two tenements, as set forth in schedule below—situated in the county of Fermanagh, distant from four to nine miles from the town of Enniskillen, on the road leading to Swanlinbar, together with the school and lands of Portora.

From the above figures may be deduced that the average acreage of each tenancy is 15a. 3r., the average rent of each tenancy is £5 19s. 7d., the average assessable rent 8s. per statute acre, the rent is 8½ per cent. under the Poor Law Valuation, excluding the buildings, and 20½ per cent. under the Poor Law Valuation if the buildings be included.

The average annual outgoings of the estate taking the five years previous to 1879, may be taken at £264, made up of the following items:—

| | Average | £ | s | d |
|--------------------------------|---|-----|----|----|
| Income tax, | for five years ending 1st November, 1878, | 46 | 13 | 0 |

I have excluded the year 1879, from the above calculation as in that year owing to the depressed state of the agricultural interests of the country, special allowances were made by the Board referred to hereafter.

The soil of the estate varies considerably in quality, from deep moory alluvial soil, to thin, cold, wet, highland, varying in elevation from 150 to 1,000 feet over sea level. The estate was valued in 1816, by Messrs Sherrard and Co., at £3,714 4s. 2d. (exclusive of Portora), which would be 12½ per cent. over the present Poor Law Valuation. There has been practically no change in the rental since date of the last Royal Commission on Endowed Schools 1847. When Messrs. Sherrard and Co. made the valuation above quoted, large tracts of land now under crop were valued at a mere nominal figure as at that period they were used as tannery, and were held by the tenantry as appurtenant to their farms though detached, and in many instances, at considerable distance from the holding.

The portion of the estate nearest Enniskillen, viz.—the townlands of Clonatrail, Derryinch, Drumahavy, Broadoney, Drumboora, Derrylester, Mullinavough, and Sennagh may be classed as medium lands. The first four being of rather a superior character, and the tenantry on these townlands appear to be in comparatively comfortable circumstances, the houses chiefly thatched cottages are comfortable, some of them exceedingly neat, on the remainder of the estate stretching away along the mountain side towards Swandilur, the tenants are poor and indifferently housed, the soil thin, wet, and utterly unsuited to support the number of people who are leant on it, or to the system of management—chiefly dairy farming applied to it.

A glance at above schedule will at once show that the lands as compared with the Poor Law Valuation, are most unequally let, thus Clonatrail, No. 1 on the schedule, is let at 10½ per cent over the valuation, and yet the rent is only 13s. 6d. per statute acre for land of excellent quality.

Broadoney, No. 4 on schedule, is let at 11½ per cent under the Poor Law value, the acreable rent being 12s. much of this townland consists of deep rich moorland.

Some lands adjoining were let at 7½ per cent over the Poor Law Valuation, but the tenant has given them up, the landlord refusing a rent of 25 per cent over that valuation.

I have no hesitation in saying that if the farms on this estate were of a suitable size, and judiciously arranged the tenantry could better afford to pay a rent of 25 per cent over the Poor Law Valuation than they can now pay a rent of 8½ per cent under it.

Subdivision has prevailed to a most disastrous extent all over the estate.

Brick-clay is found in large quantities on various parts of the estate, and the tenantry, heretofore, without let or hindrance have been in the habit of making bricks, which they sell at 25s. per thousand, no regard being had as to how the clay was taken up, or to the levelling of the ground afterwards, as a consequence many unsightly pools are to be seen; and considerable damage has been done in this way. This waste will be prevented in future as the agent now insists that none of the tenantry shall make bricks without first having obtained a ticket for which only 1d. is charged, but the ticket will not be given until the pools previously made shall be filled up, and on condition that the land shall be left afterwards in a suitable state for cropping.

The estate is in most parts well supplied with roads, made in the year 1847, the greater number of these roads have been repaired at the expense of the Board during last winter, and thus much needful employment afforded. The arterial drains on the estate have also been scooped, and deepened, during last winter, a sum of £196 was spent in this way on the roads and drains; about 1,000 perches of each having been done. In addition to this the tenants were allowed £102 abatement of rent, and £25 worth of coals was distributed during the winter, some seed potatoes were also supplied, but it is much to be regretted that the Champion variety was not more largely distributed, as the other kinds have failed to a great extent, whilst the "Champions" have produced very heavy crops of sound potatoes. One man showed me seven stone weight of potatoes grown from fifteen tubers.

In the year 1855, the arrear on the estate amounted to £9,231 9s. 0½d., the arrear at foot of rental of 1875, amounts to £788.

Between the years 1863 and 1869, £5,643 17s. 1d. of arrears were remitted, all arrears being struck off on the condition that the tenants paid one year of the arrears in two "crops," and executed improvements on their own lands to the value of one-half year's rent, the arrear now remaining due consists in some part of the old arrear which a few of the tenants failed to relieve themselves of notwithstanding the very generous terms offered them.

Between the years 1840 and 1863, I find that £11,045, or thereabouts was remitted, in the shape of arrears and abatement of rent, and close on £1,000 allowed for drainage and roads.

There is a Blacklin on the estate on the townland of Gorman. The Board give their tenants on certain conditions lime at half price.

There is only a small quantity of turf on the estate, the bogs being cut out and in great measure reclaimed, the tenantry get their firing on an adjoining property, paying at the rate of £10 an acre for the ground, covered by the crop of turf cut, this high rate induces the tenantry to endeavour to obtain fuel on their own farms, and considerable supervision will be necessary to prevent the surface of the moorlands from being cut away to too low a level.

Tenant-right prevails to a considerable extent. The agent endeavours to limit the price paid within reasonable bounds, but his efforts appear to be disregarded. Thus, when a tenant in Broadoney, holding 5 acres Irish measure at £6 4s. rent, was about to dispose of his interest, the agent fixed the value at £80, and decided that John Mackell the adjoining tenant should have the farm, but the outgoing tenant sold the farm without reference to the agent at £110, to a tenant of another and distant townland.

There are many instances on the estate where the tenants are paupers, and who only live by setting their land, and who do not pay their rent, thus, Carson in Drumahavy is literally starving, his land is subject to Nixon of Derryinch, the Board have received no rent for over two years, it certainly is not for the interest of the estate, nor can I think it is for the interest of Carson that he should be allowed to cling to empty walls, until the arrears accumulate to such an extent that they must either be lost to the estate, or Carson's interest in his farm be swamped.

I need not waste time in multiplying instances, they are far too numerous, and Carson's case may be taken as typical.

Subdivision appears to have proceeded without let or hindrance, and notwithstanding the vigilance of the present agent still proceeds; thus, in Derryinch the Nixons, highly respectable and industrious men, have subdivided their farm into three parts and built three houses.

Bryan and Thomas Maguire, of Gortearn, have subdivided their holding which only contains 7½ Irish acres, Thomas holding 5 acres, and Bryan 2½ acres; the whole rent of the farm being only £3 10s. On the day of my visit Bryan was engaged in building a new house, and this kind of thing has been the rule, and not the exception on this unfortunate estate. Is it any wonder that the lands and their belongings have been characterized by a local writer as being in a state "of savage nature," the people being too numerous, too poor, and too indolent to make the slightest effort at improvement.

These remarks have special application to townlands No. 15 to No. 37 on schedule.

I must, however, make honourable mention of James McGee, and James McBrine of Mullin, who appear to be most industrious men, and who should be encouraged; they have improved their little farms much by fencing, drainage, and subsoiling, and if a little of their spirit could be infused into their neighbours the aspect of the estate would soon change.

There are five National schools on the estate, viz:—One at Drumbally, under a male teacher, one at Drumbrook, under a female teacher, one at Mullinaveigh, under a male teacher; one at Derrylester, under a female teacher; one at Knockhodarra, under a male teacher. None of these schools receive any assistance from the Board, nor are they under the Board's patronage; they consist of thatched cottages, generally much out of repair, and totally devoid of the appliances necessary to insulate decent habits; the house at Knockhodarra has a damp earthen floor. I am informed that the Board offered to improve the schools on the estate, but their assistance was declined, as it was coupled with a desire to have the patronage transferred to them.

It appears somewhat anomalous that a Board whose mission, if I may so speak, is the promotion of education, should draw away so large an income without expending one shilling on the education of the district from which it is derived.

As the turbary on the estate became exhausted, the tenants held on to the soil, and have reclaimed, or rather partially reclaimed, about 170 acres in this way, for which they are not rented. No effort was made to restrain this action on the part of the tenantry, and now they assert their right to retain free of rent these lands.

The agent has had these reclaimed bogs measured, and given notice to the tenants that they will be charged from 15s to 20s an acre. The tenants appear very dissatisfied, and are disposed to resist this impost, they say they held the bogs as part and parcel of their farms, and that they have as much right to reclaim the soil where the turf has been cut away, as they have to drain or improve any other portions of their farms. These reclaimed patches are detached from the farms, and whatever arrangement may be come to about the rent, it would be desirable to endeavour to rearrange them, so that where possible the tenant may have his reclaimed lot adjoining his farm. There has not been much labour expended in the partial reclamation bestowed on these moors; the soil is of an alluvial character, and very fertile, and the tenants do little more than ridge it up, and crop it. It is now bearing most luxuriant crops of potatoes, turnips and cabbage, and is well worth the rent the agent has asked for it, and which rent he is receiving for portions of a similar character which had not been encroached on by the tenants.

The moors I refer to are chiefly in Clonsing, Derrymach and Rosdonny. There is a considerable tract of bog in Mullinaveigh, which is all but cut out. The tenants have resisted the agent's wish to sever this bog from the farms, and a large and excited meeting, I am informed, was held in the townland of Sessingh, to denounce this action on the part of the agent, and altogether a most unsatisfactory spirit seems to exist, a sure consequence of the laxity of superintendence I should say of the want of rule—which has prevailed on this estate. It is painful to me to be constrained by a sense of duty to make these observations, but I do so with less compunction when I can add, that the present agent is fully alive to the condition of the estate, and to the causes which have conduced to that condition, and is active, intelligent, and thoroughly competent; his management of other estates gives every promise that if he be supported in his efforts the estate may yet be reclaimed, and the neglect of the past in a measure condoned.

(i.) RAPHOE ROYAL SCHOOL ESTATE.

This Estate, comprising twelve Townlands, is known as the Townawilly Estate, and is situated about five miles north-east of the town of Donegal.

It will thus be seen that the estate consists of 7,914 acres, of which 6,018 acres are mountain leaving 1,896 acres, as comprising the farms of 165 tenants, the mountain being held as a commonsage. The rent is £523 12s 9d, including £15 as a game rent, excluding which it will be found that the average rent paid by each tenant is £3 1s 7d, the average acreage over 11½ acres, and the average assessable value about 5s 4d. The lands are let under the Poor Law valuation. The tenantry are poor, the greater number having been recipients of relief during the past spring and early summer. There are good crops of the estate made by a Mr. Rutledge in the year 1846, at which period the lands were carefully valued, and estimated to be worth £543 15s 8d. It was valued by Messrs. Sherrard, Emmsington, and Green, in 1816, at £884 13s. The farms have been well laid out, and the greater number are well fenced. The crops this season are luxuriant. The tenantry of this property appear, from an early date, to have been difficult to manage, in 1820 the Commissioners reported to the Land Lieutenant that they were "unable to collect the rents by reason of the refractory disposition of the tenants." In 1821 the management of the estate was handed over to the Masters of Raphoe School, but subsequently taken out of their hands, the estate being in a state of "utter insubordination." In 1844 the late Mr. G. C. G. Wray was appointed agent and appears to have made vigorous efforts to reduce the estate into regularity and order. The farms were squared and "rundale" abolished; between the years 1844 to 1850 the improvements carried out, together with the permanent outgoings of the estate, exhausted the total sum received, a sum of only £18 0s 3d having been paid into the credit of the Commissioners in that period, and from March, 1844, till March, 1855, the whole amount lodged to credit of the Commissioners was £370 8s. Mr. Wray resigned in 1851, previous to which an attempt was made, by "some parties unknown," to blow up his house, a keg of powder having been exploded under his window, the estate was, however, in a fair way of becoming manageable under Mr. Wray. The career of the two succeeding agents may be briefly summed up by saying that they did nothing, and, when they appeared on the estate, were "hunted off it." With such a history it is only surprising that the present agent has been able to control the tenantry or to succeed in performing his duty with even the moderate success which has attended his efforts. In 1857, at date of the last Commission, the arrears due on the estate amounted to about three years' rent, say £1,500; at November, 1878, the arrears due amounted to £1,995 12s. 10d, so that, if no arrears have been struck off in the interval, the rents have been paid more regularly than heretofore, but since 1875 the tenants appear to be falling back. Thus is—

| | £ | s. | d. |
|-----------------------------|-------------|----|----|
| 1875, rent paid amounted to | 684 | 6 | 9 |
| 1876, " | 479 | 17 | 7 |
| 1877, " | 408 | 7 | 3 |
| 1878, " | 447 | 0 | 0 |
| | £1,814 15 7 | | |

The outgoings of the estate appear to be, taking the year 1878 as a guide, as follows—

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---|---------|----|----|
| Head rent, Rops. Mr. Connolly, | 0 | 7 | 1 |
| Tithe-rentcharge, - | 20 | 11 | 6 |
| Poor rate, - | 34 | 2 | 3 |
| County cess, - | 5 | 1 | 11 |
| Income tax, - | 10 | 14 | 7 |
| Ratiff and watcher, - | 17 | 0 | 0 |
| Agency fees, 10 per cent, which calculated on the gross rental of £523 12s. 9d., would be | 52 | 7 | 3 |
| | 149 4 9 | | |
| Leaving a net annual income of, | 374 8 0 | | |

But, as a matter of fact, the sums lodged to the credit of the Commissioners only amounted to—

| | £ | s. | d. |
|----------|-------------|----|----|
| 1875, to | 266 | 18 | 6 |
| 1876, " | 262 | 9 | 7 |
| 1877, " | 253 | 16 | 0 |
| 1878, " | 273 | 9 | 3 |
| | £1,055 14 1 | | |

The cash received three years being, as above, £1,814 15s. 7d., the difference £759, shows the annual expenditure to be £189 15s. on the permanent outgoings of the estate, improvements, salary to schoolmaster, law costs, &c. The allowances for improvements are now discontinued. There is a large tract of turlough on the estate, but a road to this bog is much required. The estate, as may be gathered from what has been written above, is a most difficult one to manage, the arrears, many of them carried over since 1847, are an incubus that can never be removed by the tenants, but until removed all attempts, either on the part of the tenantry or on the part of the agent, to introduce a more regular system will be futile, and yet there can be nothing more injudicious, in my opinion, than an indiscriminate remission of arrears. The agent is of opinion that a sum of £1,420 18s. 1d. should be now wiped off the books, retaining the balance of £374 14s. 9d., the latter sum having accumulated in late years. I have no doubt at all that the agent's view is correct in this matter, as to the amount to be struck off, and most probably he has carefully considered the proportions to be remitted to each tenant. I will only add that I should carefully scrutinise each tenant's account, say for the past twelve years, and I would take the greatest care that, if there be any tenants who have paid more regularly than others, they should in some way participate in the general "amnesty," and this might be arranged by giving them an allowance for improvements to be paid for out of the arrears yet to be collected, or in any other way that would combat the idea that they had acted foolishly in paying their rents. The arrears remitted, a strict hand should be kept on the estate. There is no reason why the tenants on this estate should not pay their rents as punctually as those on the adjoining properties; their rents are very moderate, their houses are moderately comfortable, and they have plenty of fuel. Intrinsically the lands are worth close on double the rent paid for them by the tenants, but occupied as they are in such small holdings, the rent can bear but little proportion to the value of the land. I should add that there is a Capital National School on the estate, with over 100 children in attendance, under the care of most competent male and female teachers. The agent appears to me to be thoroughly acquainted with the estate and to be anxious to do his duty. The accounts appear to be accurately kept and carefully audited, but I would suggest that the agent should debit himself with the whole rent and arrears due each year, his custom being now only to debit himself with the rent received. The maps and valuation books should also be revised, so that the records of the property may accurately represent the holdings of the tenants.

Having now reported on all the Estates in charge of "The Commissioners of Education," I append, in tabulated form, the deductions which may be arrived at from the figures which I have gathered together in reference to the various Estates.

* Including £127 14 in considerable drainage charge.

The following instructions have been issued by the secretary to the various agents, and if carefully carried out no better code could be devised—

Rules for Guidance of Agents.

1. All accounts shall be furnished according to the enclosed printed forms.
2. The agent's annual account and rental shall be furnished on or before the 31st April in each year.
3. The agent shall furnish, in addition to the annual accounts, monthly cash accounts, with vouchers.
4. The agent shall not keep on hand a larger sum than is actually necessary to meet the requirements of the estate.

Arrears shall not be allowed to accumulate, and receipts for broken gales shall not be given.

5. Subdivision and subletting without consent shall be prohibited, and in order to enforce this rule, any tenant who infringes it shall be served with a preliminary notice, and afterwards, if he persists in breaking the rule, with a notice to quit.

6. Before serving a tenant with an ejectment the agent shall notify his intention of doing so to the Secretary to the Commission.

7. The agent shall endeavour to consolidate small farms until the holdings are large enough to support a family in tolerable comfort. Before re-letting farms the rents shall be revised by the agent.

8. The agent, or some other duly qualified person on his behalf, shall, once in every five years, walk the estate boundary with the estate map, and shall report the result to the Commissioners.

9. Bogs and waste lands shall be periodically surveyed, with a view to prevent encroachment by tenants.

10. The agent shall, along with his annual rental and account, furnish the Commissioners with a report on the condition of the estate over which he is agent. Such report shall contain any suggestions for the improvement of the estate which the agent may deem to be required, either in drainage, fencing, road making, school accommodation, the re-adjustment and consolidation of farms, straightening of boundaries, management of bog, revision of rent, remission of arrears."

If in addition to the above the Commissioners will have their maps and valuations revised, so that they may have an exact record of the holdings on their estates, and have all changes of tenements and tenancies duly recorded as they occur, they will be in a position to deal with questions as they arise on a correct basis.

And further, some regular system of personal supervision and visiting of the estate on the part of the Board, is, I should say, absolutely necessary.

From the above schedules it will be seen that the estates situated in the counties of Tipperary contain 3,020A. 1R. 8P. statute measure, are rented at £2,043 19s 7d½, and that the Poor Law valuation is £1,708 5s, and are held by 107 tenants. These figures give an average acreage to each tenant of 28½ acres, an average yearly rent of £19 3s., and an average arable rent of 18s. 6d., the rental being 11½ per cent over the Poor Law valuation. The county Limerick estates, as will be seen, contain 4,195s. 2s. 18½p., statute measure, are rented at £4,470 1s. 7d., the Poor Law valuation is £3,165 3s., and are held by 156 tenants. These figures give an average acreage to each tenant of 26s. 3s. 23½p., an average yearly rent of £28 18s., and an average arable rent of £1 1s. 4d., per statute acre, this rent being 2½ per cent over the Poor Law valuation.

The Limerick estate is situated close to the village of Pallas Green, the Pallas Station of the Waterford and Limerick Railway being on the estate. The lands vary in quality from cut out past to some of the very richest pasture and arable land.

There are maps of the estate hung up in the Dublin office, of some of which the agent has rough copies, but there are no recent valuations that I could bear of; at least if such be in existence the agent did not appear to know of them. The Limerick estate was valued by Sherrard, Brassington, and Green, in 1848, at £5,330 10s. 8d. The present rent, as stated in above schedule, is £4,470 1s. 7d., an increase of £145 since 1848. A Mr. Byrne appears to have valued the estate in 1840, putting the value at £3,731. It was exceedingly difficult for me to arrive at reliable conclusions in the short time allowed me for inspection, and with the meagre information which the agent could afford me, acting, no doubt on instructions, the spirit of which may be gathered from the following quotation from Mr. Brennan's letter to your secretary, dated March 10, 1880—"The Governors decline to furnish their agents' accounts." The documentary evidence furnished me shows that the records of the estate are not very accurately kept, for instance, in the only survey book of the Limerick estate submitted to me I find the townland of Moymore stated to contain 23s. 3s. 21p., Irish measure, equal to 48s. 1s. 2p., statute measure, and to be let to three tenants. The townland actually contains by Ordnance measurement 133s. 1s. 33p. The agent could offer no explanation of this discrepancy. The whole townland he believed, indeed was sure, belonged to the trustees, but he could not say how the remainder of the townland was disposed of, or by whom held. I find that the adjoining townland of Kilduff is stated, in the survey book, to contain 238s. 1s. 24p., Irish measure, equal to 418s. 1s. 10p., statute measure, in the Ordnance survey. This townland is only put at 319s. 2s. 39p., statute measure, which would more than account for the deficiency in Moymore. The rental of 1878 (of which I obtained a copy) does not, in my opinion, give a correct record of the tenancies as they now exist. The changes of tenancies do not appear to have been recorded as they occurred, and names of occupiers who have long ceased to exist appear to be retained in the rental.

Up to the year 1840 almost the whole of the Limerick estates appear to have been let to middlemen, and the evil effects of this system are recorded by Messrs Sherrard and Byrne, in their surveys of the estate. I am not aware that any portion of the southern estates are now let to what may be termed middlemen, except a portion of the townland of Solchessbeg, in the county of Tipperary, which I shall refer to again. The townland of Ballytarens, in 1818, was held under lease by a Mr. Smithwick, who sub-let it to sundry tenants, who were described as being very poor. This townland is now held directly from the trustees by the occupying tenants; it is a remarkable fact that the rent paid by the tenants of this townland is 43½ per cent over the Poor Law valuation! This no doubt arises from the trustees, at the termination of Mr. Smithwick's lease, having simply taken over Mr. Smithwick's tenants at the rent they were then paying. I could not see or learn that they were in any worse condition than the tenants on the other portions of the estate, whose rents, as compared with the Poor Law valuation, are very much lower.

At page 33 Appendix to Report presented by the Royal Commission on Endowed Schools, 1854-8, I find Mr. Murland refers to one holding "containing 34s. 0s. 26p., plantation measure, which was occupied then (1837) by the incumbent of the parish of Green, at £12 12s. per annum, or about 7s. 6d. per acre, though valued by Mr. Byrne at £38s. per acre." That farm is now held by Rev. Mr. O'Connor, at a rent of £68 6s. 6d., or about 40s. per Irish acre; the Poor Law valuation is £36 0s. The average rent of Pallas Green, in which the farm is situated, is 54s. per Irish acre, and certainly this farm is worth more than the average value. It is, therefore, still much underlet. My attention was also directed to a farm in the townland of Gairane, held by the Medical Officer of the district, the farm contains 10s. 1s. 2p.; and according to the rental of 1878 is held at the annual rent of £14 5s. 4d., or 27s. 6d. per Irish acre, a rent which appears to me to be very much below its value. I refer especially to this farm, as it affords an example of the method pursued in re-arranging the rents of the estate. When the farm in question fell out of lease, a valuator was brought in, who fixed the value at a figure which the tenant refused to pay. A second valuator was brought in, to whose figure the tenant also demurred, and finally the matter was referred to the agent of a neighbouring estate, who fixed the value at the present rent. In another case, that of Lysan's farm, the agent of the estate was directed to fix the rent, and on the tenant demurring the agent before referred to was brought in, who reduced the rent considerably. I do not know anything more calculated to destroy the influence of the agent of the estate than the course pursued in this case, nor one more likely to generate a degree of listlessness and want of anxiety for the interests of the estates. In the townland of Gortavilla, the Rev. Alexander McLoughlin holds 42s. 1s. 12p. of land, at the yearly rent of £21 2s. This land has a somewhat remarkable history. The late Bishop Daly obtained a lease of these lands, which consisted of cut-away bog, and on this erected four rows of double cottages, in which he offered a home and employment to those who, having deserted the fold in which they were reared, came over to the Church of which the Bishop was an ornament; also when tenants on the other portion of the trustees' estate got into arrears and were about to lose their holdings, the Rector of the parish became the tenant, reinstated the former occupant on his becoming a member of his communion.

I could not find on the land any trace of these "verts," as they are termed in the district. My informant, with a knowing twinkle in his eye, said—"Musha, when they got a boath of the land it's 'Fada they minded his Riverence.' The Bishop's farm, as it is still called, is now in the hands of the Rev. Mr. McLoughlin, and the houses built for his 'verts' are now occupied by his sub-tenants.

John Quinlan, of Ballycoshewan, complained that his farm was high rented. He holds 15a. 3a. 2p, Irish measure, at a rent of £25 4s. 5d., being 32s. per Irish acre; the Poor Law valuation is £92. The average rent of the townland is 37s. per Irish acre, and relatively to his neighbours, I think Quinlan is highly rented. There is a considerable tract of his farm of a poor gravelly character, which had formerly been swept over by the adjoining river, but an embankment has been erected which now protects these lands. Quinlan, however, holds another farm in this townland, containing 12a. 0a. 8c., formerly occupied by a tenant named Howard, to whom Quinlan paid £170, something over £14 per acre. Quinlan holds this farm at the rent formerly paid by Howard, viz. £—25s. per acre, and he was bound by his agreement, with the outgoing tenant, to permit the Widow Howard to occupy a house and garden, and to give her the grass of a cow, all free for her life. The land is of no better quality than his other farms, if the interest of the sum paid as tenant-right (£28 10s. per annum at 5 per cent.) be added it brings his rent up to 38s. an acre. I think that Quinlan's chief cause of complaint is, that his neighbours are rented more favourably than he is.

This is the only well established case of tenant-right custom that came under my notice, which appeared to be fully sanctioned by the trustees. Quinlan is also tenant of 4a. 3a. 14p in same townland, which originally formed part of the lands held under lease by the late Rev. Mr. Atkinson. This lease did not contain the usual non-alienation clauses, and his executors sold the interest to several parties. Quinlan paid £200 for the lot he holds, equal to about £40 per acre, the rent being 21s. 5d. per Irish acre. So soon as the lease expired Quinlan was informed that he should pay 40s. per acre, a proposition to which he strongly demurs. This is a striking example of the evil effects of granting a lease without non-alienation clauses, and the estate will be involved in trouble with the sub-tenants, particularly as the trustees did not take up the lands at the expiry of the lease.

A new form of lease has now been adopted which contains all the requisite stipulations, and further, that "tenants whose holdings shall be valued by the Poor Law valuation to over £50" are precluded from making any claim to which they would otherwise be entitled under the Land Act of 1870. I do not think this is a judicious clause; I think the tenantry and the estate would prosper more if each tenant felt that, whether he held by lease or otherwise, the value he had added to his holding by his industry, and the expenditure of his capital, was secured to him; the trustees have borrowed from the Board of Works a sum of, I believe, £1,600, under the favourable terms granted last season. Part of this money is being expended in arterial and thorough drainage, on the townland of Drumaham, close to Pallas Green. The work has been most judiciously laid out, and is being executed in first rate style. A large tract of land, now held at about 30s. per Irish acre, will be much improved, and situated as it is, should be well worth 50s. per Irish acre when the drainage works shall be completed. I am not aware of what arrangements, if any have been made with the occupiers in reference to this improved value.

(a.) THE TIPPERARY ESTATES.

These estates are considerably scattered, Abbeylands and Rathscarragh being close to the town of Tipperary and Soleahadbeg, 2½ miles from the Limerick Junction, while Drumaham and Gortacoolrush are not far from the town of Thurles. The Abbeylands contain 106a. 3a. 9p, statute measure; of these 15a. 3a. 19p, statute measure, are held as a perpetuity by the Master of the College, which is situated on the lands. The Board of Ordnance have 21a. 0a. 1p, statute measure, and the remaining 69a. 3a. 20p are held by ordinary tenants at rents varying from 52s. 6d. per Irish acre to 80s. In one case Patrick Halcan, who holds 6a. 3a. 16p, Irish measure, at £21 11s. 6d., paid £200 to the former occupant for the good will of the place, and now complains of the high rent of his farm, for which he pays 63s. per Irish acre. His neighbour (Thomas Harey) has 3a. 3a. 20p, Irish measure, for which he pays 77s. 6d. per Irish acre, it is not such good land as Halcan's. The Guardians of the Union hold 6a. 0a. 11c., Irish measure, at 52s. 6d. per Irish acre, a rent ridiculously below the value. The Board of Ordnance pay 100s. 2d. per acre for the lands held by that Department. The lands of Rathscarragh are also close to the town of Tipperary, held by eight tenants, one farm containing 16a. 0a. 24c., Irish measure, two farms of between 4 and 5 acres each, and five farms or holdings varying from 1½ acres to 2½, and rented at from 55s. 4d. to 84s. per acre, this last rent only paid for about half an acre, representing somewhere like the fair rent of the land. These little holdings are principally occupied as market gardens, and should never have been treated as farms, they and the Abbeylands should have been treated as townparks, and would have been readily sought after at very high rents for this purpose; but now that they have been treated as farms and the "good will" allowed to be bought and sold these considerations are out of the question. I cannot say when these lettings were made or if they existed when the property came into the trustees' hands. The townland of Soleahadbeg is 2½ miles north of Tipperary, and the Great Southern and Western Railway passes through it. This townland was held by middlemen up to the year 1835 at rents stated to be 33 per cent. over the rents charged by the trustees after the lands came into their hands, acting on a valuation made in the above-mentioned year by Mr. Armstrong; they also expended a large sum of money, borrowed from the Board of Works, on drainage and other land improvements, and rent the lands about the year 1856, at an increased rent of £70 4s. 8d., which only just covered the interest of the Board of Works' loan, so that practically the tenants are now paying 33 per cent. under the rent paid the middlemen in 1835. When making my inspection, I frequently heard complaints that the interest of the Board of Works' loan was still kept up on the rents, though the trustees had ceased to be liable, the loan having been paid off. A more unreasonable complaint I ever heard, considering the very moderate rents at which the lands are let. The agent has a map of this townland, and the farms appear to be well laid out and well fenced, the rents vary from 44s. to 22s. per land, and the farms appear to be well assessed. The rent received from the townland is 17 Irish acres, and appears to me to be unequally assessed. Patrick English holds close on 79 Irish acres, for which he pays £132 1s. 1d., the Poor Law valuation is £103, so that his rent is about 23½ per cent. over that valuation. I walked over his farm, which, in my opinion, is certainly not over-rented. Mary Tracy holds 14 acres at £21 8s 2d, which is just the Poor Law valuation. Thomas McKeogh holds 26 acres, Irish measure, at £32 12s 3d, the Poor Law valuation being £49, or about 7 per cent. under the rent. Timothy Hanly holds at a rent slightly under the Poor Law valuation, and so does Edward Carey. The Rev. Mr. Smith holds 20 Irish acres at £34, the Poor Law valuation being £20 10s. In this case the rent is 22 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation. It is a remarkable fact that the Rev. Mr. Smith has sublet these lands to four tenants, one of whom at least (the son of Mary Tracy, quoted above) is tenant of other portions of the townland held directly under the trustees. Mr. Smith charges 46s per acre for this land, and I did not hear a complaint about the rent, though Tracy was very decided in his language as to the rent he pays the trustees, which is (as stated above) exactly the same as the Poor Law valuation, and 12s 6d per acre less than he pays Mr. Smith for certainly not superior land. All these facts point to the conclusion that the lands are unusually rented, and that it is high time that a new valuation should be made, in which a careful note of all improvements made by the tenant should be recorded. There is a very fine limestone quarry on this townland, but it does not appear to be much utilized for the advantage of the estate. I may mention that an adjoining townland, sold by Lord Derby, is now rented at 46s per Irish acre, which appears to me to be about the letting value of the lands in this immediate locality. There is no tithy on this townland. The houses are fairly comfortable and the tenants appear to be prosperous.

Drumbane and Gortecolnash are situated in the county of Tipperary, and contain respectively 1812a 0n 11r and 188a 3n 27r statute measure. They are occupied by sixty-five tenants who pay £906 3s 8d, the Poor Law valuation being £776, including the buildings; this gives an average acreage to each tenement of 30a 3n 5p, an average rent of each tenement £15 17s, and an average acreable rent of 9s per statute acre.

The lands are let at 17 per cent. above the Poor Law valuation, including the buildings, and at 25 per cent. over that valuation if the buildings be excluded.

The lands vary in quality from good, deep arable to thin, poor grazing land, the latter class predominating.

Of the 65 tenancies, 29 are let under £10 a year, 22 under £20 a year, 14 over £20 a year, and of these 14 only two are over £40 rent.

The lands appear to be rather unevenly let as compared with the Poor Law valuation, thus Wm. O'Brien pays £47 18s 7d., his Poor Law valuation is £34. Thomas Hayes, John Hayes, Daniel Ryan, John Ryan, Boyle, Jerry Ryan, James Quirk, Thomas Corcoran, and some others hold at or slightly under the Poor Law valuation. Margaret Carey pays £31 1s 1d., her Poor Law valuation is £21 10s. I walked very carefully over the greater part of the townland of Drumbane, on which mainly these discrepancies exist, and I have arrived at the conclusion that the unevenness is more the fault of the Poor Law valuation than of the rents charged. This opinion was concurred in by some of the old tenants, who stated that the valuation put on the arable land was much higher than that put on land of equal quality which happened to be in grass when the valuation was made.

William O'Brien, above referred to, is very dissatisfied about his rent, which is just £1 per Irish acre. He has a considerable extent of land that is not worth so much, but the remainder is good value for 25s per Irish acre, and the drainage now being executed on a portion of his land will bring up the value very considerably. O'Brien's rent is close on 27 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation, whilst Mr. Hayes' rent, who pays 21s per Irish acre, is exactly equal to the Poor Law valuation and for similar land. These inequalities in the valuation have disturbed the minds of tenants who do not see the matter in its true light, and are rather adverse to doing so. Tim Dwyer complains much of his rent. He holds 53½ acres, for which he pays 13s 4d per Irish acre. His rent being £35 12s 10d, his Poor Law valuation is £27, but this includes the value of six acres, which he holds as a sub-letting under James Dwyer, for which he pays £2 8s. The Poor Law valuation for his own farms may be taken at £24 12s. Much of his land is of a wet and cold character, greatly in want of drainage. He has drained this season about two acres by aid of a loan which the Governors have obtained from the Board of Works. It is the disparity between the Poor Law valuation and the rent, as compared with some of his neighbours, which has affected "Tim" so grievously, as assertedly his rent, which is only about 8s 3d per statute acre, is not too much for the land, and it is a striking circumstance that he paid £130 for the tenant-right of the six acres of land which he holds as a sub-tenant to James Dwyer, and for which he only pays 8s per Irish acre, equal to 5s per statute acre, to the Governors. This transaction with James Dwyer, however, was sub-rosa, as the agent knew nothing of it, and it was against the rules of the estate. The halliff, however, appeared to know all about it.

The Rev. Mr. Fy holds sixty-five statute acres, for which he pays £25 rent, or about 7s 8d per acre. I understand the agent valued this land at 25s per Irish acre, which would be 15s 5d per statute acre. In my opinion, the value placed on the land by the agent was exceedingly moderate. The land is some of the best in the townland; part of it is sub-let, I could not ascertain at what rate, but I feel satisfied the agent's valuation is fully borne out in this sub-letting.

The Governors have arranged to expend £1,500 of the loan borrowed from the Board of Works, above referred to, on these townlands, charging the tenants the same low rate of interest at which they have obtained the loan. Many of the tenants have availed themselves of this boon, as the drainage has been exceedingly well executed, and will be amply remunerative.

I should say two-thirds of the land in these two townlands require drainage, and, in fact, until it be so treated, the tenants will not be able to meet their engagements, for, trifling as the rent is, there is too great a preponderance of the wet grazing land over the arable. In wet seasons this wet land is absolutely unproductive. It would, by drainage, be rendered good, sound land, and the tenantry could more easily pay double the present rent.

The quarry, on which a very large sum was expended, yields but a very small return. It is let to a stonecutter, who pays a nominal sum per cubic yard. The late agent, Mr. Hore, appears to have bestowed considerable attention on this townland. The tenantry are, I fear, rather difficult to deal with. One of them, Michael Doonan, can neither pay his rent nor will he part with his interest, although he could get a large sum for it. He flatly refuses to do either, but declares he will "hold a grip" of his land. James Dwyer, a carpenter, holds six acres of good land, rented at 15s. per Irish acre, equal to 9s. 3d. per statute acre. He has two cottiers who pay him £1 each per annum for small thatched cottages. He cannot pay his rent, and has sub-let his land. There are many other instances of the same kind. On the other hand, William Ardill, who holds the old schoolhouse and about nineteen perches of land, has expended over £150 on buildings. He pays £10 a year, and is driving a prosperous, general trade. He complains that the two acres behind his house, now held by Margaret Ryan, were promised to him. This field is let at 30s. per Irish acre, equal to 18s. 6d. per statute acre, and I commend this fact to attention, as compared with the rent charged to the Rev. Mr. Fry. Ardill appears to be most industrious, and he should have encouragement when opportunity serves.

The bailiff, Gleeson, resides on the townland of Drumbora. He appears to be an intelligent, well-conditioned man. He mentions that a former agent raised the rent about 15 per cent, and that before that "rise" the tenants had the land at the Government valuation, and that since the rise they have never paid pleasantly. I can only repeat my opinion that the best way to cheapen the land is to improve it by drainage, and that if in its present condition the tenants had it free of rent they would not be materially benefited.

The above figures give an average assessable rent of 17s. per statute acre. The rent is $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. over the Poor Law valuation, excluding the buildings, and 7 per cent. under the valuation if the houses be included.

The holdings are so jumbled up in the rental that I cannot accurately make out the rental of each townland, as some of the tenants have holdings in more than one, and there are no records to show the area or rent belonging to each townland. I have, however, classified the holdings into townlands and town lots in the above schedule. The townlands are held by middlemen who have sub-let a large portion of the lands to tenants.

The late agent had no map or records of any kind, and he and his assistant, who accompanied me, were utterly unable to identify the premises in the town lots.

The agent heretofore resided at Pallas Green, in county Limerick; and the person who is called the bailiff is in reality a solicitor's clerk residing in Galway. He was unable to accompany me to inspect the townlands, but supplied me with a Mr. O'Connell as guide. This gentleman, who turned out to be the process-server of the district, appeared to have a pretty intimate knowledge of the lands, although his vision had been impaired by the summary application, by a lady to whom he had paid a professional visit, of an "eye wash" of hot lime and boiling water. It will readily be understood that my guide was anything but popular, and that I dispensed with his attendance without much ceremony.

Under the provisions of 21 & 22 Geo. III., cap. 27, and 25 Geo. III., cap. 55, a portion of the property in the town of Galway was leased for forty-one years, renewable, the leases to contain covenants on the part of the tenant to lay out a sum of money in buildings on the demised premises, and said premises were to be situated in counties of cities and counties of towns, and not to exceed forty acres. The second Act made it compulsory on the Governors to renew the above leases if applied for within seven years after the commencement of said lease, one year's rent to be paid as a fine, together with the costs of the two parts of the new lease; and the Act prescribed that no tenant should have any benefit by the lease who should let seven years expire without performing the several covenants prescribed by the Act. This lease was found to be unsatisfactory, for whilst it might be looked upon as a lease for ever against the Governors, it was an uncertain expensive tenure for the lessee; and, moreover, it was doubtful if the provisions of the Renewable Leasehold Conversion Act applied to such leases.

An Act was passed, 31 & 32 Vic. cap. 62, 1868, whereby it became compulsory on the Governors to grant in fee-farm the premises demised in the above-mentioned forty-one years' leases on being required to do so, and giving them an optional power to grant in fee-farm premises heretofore demised on twenty-one years' leases. The rent in the first instance, at the option of the Governors, to be that heretofore paid, or to be fixed by arbitration in manner provided by the Act, and to be subject to future variation each twenty-one years, such variation to be based on the price of certain articles of farm produce, to be ascertained as prescribed by the Act.

In accordance with this Act, the Governors have been called upon, and have made eighteen fee-farm grants; and there appears on the rental only one forty-one years' lease which has not been so converted, but there are a great number of twenty-one years' leases still existing.

Some of the fee-farm grants are for very large areas; thus Major Lynch has in fee-farm 247A 38 12r, statute measure. Mr. Joyce has in fee-farm 145A 1s 52r. It is not quite clear to me how power was conferred on the Governors to make leases in fee-farm of more than twenty acres.

In Mr. Joyce's case the rent formerly paid was £253 10s. 3d. This was reduced by the arbitrator who fixed the rent of the fee-farm grant to £187 13s. 6d. The Poor Law valuation is £323 for the land, and £62 10s. for the houses.

I have no means of ascertaining within reach how the Governors fared in the other grants.

Mr. Joyce, Major Lynch, and Mr. Ryan had built most comfortable and substantial mansions on the lands before they obtained the grants, and it was only a measure of common justice to secure to them the fruits of their outlay, but it is somewhat difficult to see how the present rent was arrived at.

Major Lynch holds, under a twenty-one years' lease, to expire in 1891, 950 acres in the townlands of Benmore, Ballyhanamore, Parkmore, and Ballybrit. A considerable portion of these lands is let to tenants who are very fairly treated by their landlord. Some of them in Parkmore have their land for 2s. an acre less than Major Lynch pays himself. He has improved the lands in his own hands very much indeed, having removed an enormous quantity of stones, and built them into first-class fences. The land is in marked contrast to that of some of his neighbours.

Mr. Blake, who purchased Mr. Ryan's interest, holds the whole townland of Murrough; he holds a portion by fee-farm, on which his mansion stands, and the rest under a twenty-one years' lease, granted in 1870. I have no means of ascertaining what portion of the Poor Law valuation is due to the portion in fee-farm, but his rent is £168 3s. 3d., the Poor Law valuation of the lands being £179, and of the houses £39 18s. He has five or six tenants, holding from fifteen to twenty acres each. Their farms are poorly cultivated, thin rocky land, and their houses in bad repair.

Mr. Davenport and Mr. Martin Cummins hold the whole townland of Roscam, with the exception of the Glebe, and the portion taken by the Railway. There is close on a mile and a quarter of shore, bounding this townland, on which seaweed grows, and is washed in; the sea weed is let at from £3 to £5 per acre each second year. The lessees have leases of twenty-one years from May 73. They pay £440, and hold 382 acres. The Poor Law valuation is £525 for the land, and £80 for the houses. There are, according to the Poor Law valuation books, thirty-five sub-tenants under these gentlemen, to whom the land is let, so far as I could make out, at £2 an acre; but, I fancy, the rents are not very punctually paid. The houses of these sub-tenants are poor enough, and roofless houses and old walls are the prevailing features of the landscape.

Mr. Davenport complains that his rent is too high, and it does appear "sharp" enough when consideration is given to the tenants' outlay, which has been considerable. The greater number of the sub-tenants are on Mr. Martin Cummins' lands.

The leases granted by the Governors contain all the necessary clauses, but in addition bind the tenant to make no claim at the expiration of the lease for improvements or disturbance. I do not think such a clause should be enforced. I think it would be for the interest of the estate, as it certainly would be for the lessee, to let him feel that his judiciously invested capital was safe, and thus make it his interest to preserve his improvements up to the last day of his tenancy. It would, however, be desirable to guard against the land being incumbered by extravagant buildings, or, indeed, against claims being made for any buildings that might be erected without the consent, in writing, of the Governors. Mr. Davenport complains that his sea weed is invaded by fleets of boats from Galway, and he thinks the Governors should protect him legally, i.e., pay the expense of prosecutions. There are close on twenty acres of shore on which the weed grows, which, at £2 10s. per acre each year, is worth £50; and a large quantity of floating weed comes in also, worth quite half as much more. This valuable shore helps to lessen the rent of the lessees.

Mr. Somerville holds 173 acres; he pays £68 5s.; he holds at will. The Poor Law valuation of the land, £74 12s., and of the houses, £4 18s. His land is within half a mile of the town of Galway. He also holds a large farm in the adjoining townland. He sets a considerable portion of his land at from £4 to £5 per acre in con-acre. There is a splendid limestone quarry on his land, which supplies the building requirements of the district, but the Governors derive no benefit from this source, and not only that, but the very nice wall they built to fence in this quarry from the public road, is being rapidly dismantled and carried away.

Captain Blake Foster holds some land in Bohernmore—suburbs of the town of Galway. There is a row of wretched cabins on it, let at from 1s. 6d. to 10d. per week—in fact, in the general decadence which meets the eye in the town of Galway, the property of the Governors stands out in unhappy prominence. Many of the buildings are a disgrace to the age we live in, and, in a pretty long experience, I must say I have never seen the utter aspect of property culminate before.

The Governors have no maps worth the paper they are drawn on, and no one connected with them, so far as I can see, knows anything about the property, and I am strongly of opinion that valuable property has passed out of their hands. There is a row of cottages built on a plot of ground adjoining the new cemetery, which, I should say, at one time belonged to the Governors, but it has passed away.

On Wood Quay two tenants pay respectively 8s. 6d. and 13s. 3d. a year. They build and occupy some wretched cabins.

Michael Claharty, in close proximity to the above, has a lease for forty-one years, to expire in 1895, before which he can, of course, claim a fee farm grant. Part of his lot is covered by twelve most wretched cabins; and I can scarcely conceive that the covenants, which the lease for forty-one years, at least, ought to contain, can have been complied with by the erection of such buildings.

The old schoolhouse, which is a substantial building, and which was rented by the former rector of the parish, is now occupied by the present rector free of rent. It is rapidly getting out of repair, and I should have thought that it could have been let to considerable advantage. There are five good houses in Shop-street let to yearly tenants, at the aggregate rent of £125. They were built by a former lessee, whose representatives relinquished their right to seek for a renewal of the lease.

There is a capital school, or college, as it is called, situate in Bohernmore or Townpark. It is surrounded by thirteen acres, statute, of excellent land, which the master enjoys as a perquisite free of rent. The Poor Law valuation of this land is £32, and of the buildings £100.

The Governors, subject to compulsory sale, made over to the parish 13a. 0n. 16r. of land, formerly occupied by Mr. Davis, who still retains 9a. 0n. 16r. statute, for which he is to pay £15 18s. 3d. per annum. The Poor Law valuation is £16. This land "marches" the college land, and is a townpark. The Governors were awarded £354 15s. 9d. for the thirteen acres taken for the cemetery, which would be close on twenty-four years' purchase at £4 an acre. They have dealt very liberally in letting Mr. Davis have his land considerably under £2 an acre. And as compensation for the thirteen acres taken from him he was awarded £300. So that practically he holds his nine acres now free of rent; he is a yearly tenant. I must bring this report to a close; it has, no doubt, extended to too great a length already, but having formed the opinion that this valuable estate has suffered from the most sheer neglect, I felt bound to give the data on which that opinion was arrived at.

I must, however, before closing my remarks on the Galway estate, refer to the fact that a "ranging gale," or half year's back rent is allowed on this estate to what are termed weekly tenants—who pay half yearly—and to the holders of fee-farm grants! This arrears or lying gale, in the rental of 1878, amounted to over £1,200!

The items on the schedule, termed weekly tenancies, are practically yearly tenancies. The rent is only collected half yearly, and the tenants are allowed the "lying gale"!

The items on schedule, termed con-acre, are plots of land which have been held continuously by the same parties.

On Schedule No. 2, I have set forth the remaining denominations of what is classed in the Rental of the Estate for 1878, as the Western Estates.

Of the above lands Ballywilliam, in the King's County, pays a fee-farm rent to the Governors of £25 1s. 6d.

The lands in county Sligo were held up to November, 1879, by five tenants.

| | £ s. d. |
|---|---------|
| The Hon. Mr. Wynne holds Clooserry and Farranacady, containing 173 acres, at a rent of | 78 9 4 |
| W. Clarke held of this same portion, for which he pays a yearly rent of | 31 16 4 |
| Harper Campbell held part of above at annual rent of | 85 0 0 |
| Edward Walsh holds the townland of Townfubble, containing 111 acres, at a yearly rent of | 118 0 0 |
| And Sir R. G. Booth held the remaining townlands under a lease, which expired November, 1879, at a yearly rent of | 147 0 0 |
| | 420 5 8 |
| | 2 R. 2 |

Sir R. G. Booth has surrendered his lease, and this portion of the property remains on the Governors' hands, incumbered by nine sub-tenants, who paid Sir Robert £114 10s. a year, but who appear disposed to dispute the payment to the Governors. The late agent valued this portion of the property at £171 2s. 6d., viz. —

| | | | |
|--------------------------------------|-----|----|----|
| 164 acres arable land at 10s. | £ | s. | d. |
| And the mountain at 1s. 6d. per acre | 72 | 0 | 0 |
| | 99 | 2 | 6 |
| | 171 | 2 | 6 |

The Poor Law valuation of all, I believe, is £31 6s. 6d., including the tenants' holdings, which are valued at £72.

The shooting of the mountains has been let for one year to Hon. Mr. Wynne, at £40 per annum.

The lands are all cheaply rented, particularly those close to Sligo, which are let at about $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. over the Poor Law valuation.

The townland of Kilpatrick is situate in Westmeath, about three miles west of Mullingar. The Royal Canal and Midland Railway pass through it; it contains 751 acres statute measure. This townland is held by two tenants. Cleary, who holds as a tenant from year to year, his lease having expired in 1869. He holds 633a. 0s. 31p. statute measure, at the yearly rent of £306 7s. 4d., the Poor Law valuation being £199. There are about 150 acres of bog and swamp on this farm, the remaining 483 acres consist of a portion rough pasture, the rest prime grass land. The bog is being cut too low, so that the flood water from Lake Belvedere spreads over it. This process should be discontinued at once. The bog is of a very reclaimable character, as is proved by the luxuriance of the grass now growing on a plot of it occupied by one of Cleary's labourers. Until the waters of Lake Belvedere be lowered by drainage this bog cannot be sufficiently drained for tillage purposes, but it could at small expense be converted into very valuable water meadow. Cleary, as I am informed, was in the habit of setting this bog to outsiders, charging a considerable sum per cart-load of turf taken away. The remainder of the townland is held by John Rielly, who holds 116a. 3s. 32p., at a rent of £135; the Poor Law valuation is £101: his rent was raised from 31s. 6d. to 40s. per Irish acre, when his lease expired, and a new one for twenty-one years, from November, 1874, was granted. He thinks he has been charged for his improvements, but he got an alternative offer, he says, of £4,500 to give up the farm. I have thus passed in review the lands and premises forming the Erasmus Smith trust. The income may be summarized to be derived thus:—

| | | | |
|--|---------|----|----|
| From the Tipperary Estate, | £ | s. | d. |
| Limerick Estate. Rental of 1876, | 2,948 | 19 | 7 |
| Sligo, Westmeath, and King's County, | 4,470 | 1 | 7 |
| Galway, | 804 | 1 | 0 |
| | 2,800 | 4 | 1 |
| In addition there are annual receipts, from the bogs, Limerick Estate, | 10,245 | 8 | 3 |
| Falias Fair Green, annually, | 133 | 0 | 0 |
| Game rent, Sligo, | 60 | 0 | 0 |
| And some drainage district rents, which are shortly to terminate, of | 40 | 0 | 0 |
| £331 14s. 6d. | | | |
| | 10,478 | 14 | 3 |
| There is an increase of rent on the Limerick Estate since 1876, | 59 | 3 | 10 |
| Gross income, | £10,537 | 18 | 1 |
| The outgoings of the estate calculated on the five years ending, November, 1879, | | | |
| amount on the average on the Southern Estates to, | 1,069 | 2 | 2 |
| Western Estates, | 638 | 10 | 5 |
| | 1,707 | 12 | 7 |
| Leaving a net income of, | 8,830 | 5 | 6 |

The above outgoings, however, do not include some instalments, yet due of the Mulcair River drainage, which last year amounted to £400.

I am glad to be able to say that the Governors, since I wrote the report on the Limerick estate, expressed their willingness to let me inspect the agent's accounts, which I have accordingly examined for the year 1879, time not permitting me to do more. These accounts appear to be most accurately kept and audited, and I much regret that I had not an opportunity of inspecting them before I visited the lands, they would have thrown much light on matters which puzzled me a good deal. I can only say that the way in which the accounts are kept is about the most creditable matter that came under my notice in connexion with the management of the Erasmus Smith's estates.

III.—INCORPORATED SOCIETY'S ESTATES.

The property of this Society is scattered over a wide area, as will be seen by an inspection of the schedules below. Schedule No. 1 includes such property as can be compared with the Poor Law valuation, and from which a prospective increase may be expected. No. 2 schedule contains such properties as cannot usefully be compared with the Poor Law valuation, consisting as they do of head rents, tithe rents, fee-farm grants, and leases for long terms, &c. The division may not be strictly accurate, but for the purposes of this report, it will be found sufficiently so.

The result of figures on schedule No. 1 would show that the estates there included contain 4,896A. 0R. 19P. statute measure, and are let at £3,518 9s. 10d. to 144 tenants, and the Poor Law valuation is £3,170 2s. From these figures may be deduced that the average acreage of each holding is 33A. 2a, the average rent of each tenant £24 16s, the average acreable rent 14s. 6d., and the lands are let at close on 10 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation.

THE RANSLAGH ESTATE.

The townlands of Boonagh and Gortousane—No 1 and 2 on first schedule—are situated within a few miles of Athlone, and are closely looked after by the agent who resides in that town. Up to the year 1850 these townlands were held under lease by middlemen, and when they came into the Society's hands on termination of the leases they were found to be densely populated by a wretchedly poor tenantry, and the lands permanently injured by the repeated burning of the surface. On the townland of Roskeagh alone there were fifty-seven tenants who have been reduced to thirty-three, the present number, the tenants removed having been kindly and generously dealt with by the Society, and the lands re-arranged amongst the remaining tenantry. There was great difficulty in having these arrangements carried out. The reluctance of the tenants to take land from which the former occupants had been dispossessed had to be overcome, and no doubt the lands were let at that time much below their value, and have remained so ever since. There are some very remarkable coincidences between the rent paid and the Poor Law valuation, for instance, Michael Hannon holds 96a. 1b. 6p., paying £30 1s. 4d., the Poor Law valuation being £54 5s. His land, so far as I saw it, is of fair average quality, and, I should say, could easily pay a very much increased rent. This was, however, a case in which the tenant incurred risk in taking the evicted lands, and the Society, I assume, felt that it would scarcely be fair to raise the rent after the risk had disappeared. There are many other cases in this townland where the rent is considerably under, and some few in which the rent is slightly in excess of the Poor Law valuation. The whole townland, if we deduct a new bog lot let to George Selvy, which was not included in the Poor Law valuation is rented at £37 5s. below that valuation. There is in this townland a valuable tract of bog of 480 acres, much of which is very reclamationable. There is a good fall for drainage and limestone and marl abound on the lands. The Society have constructed some useful roads, and for some years maintained a nursery at considerable expense with the hope of encouraging the tenants to plant and preserve trees on the estate. This effort has only been moderately successful, and the nursery is now discontinued, and the land let to a tenant. The houses of the tenants appear to be comfortable, and the two or three that I inspected were models of cleanliness: the dairy utensils were admirably clean, and there was an air of respectability amongst the tenants, which was quite pleasing, remembrance being had to the state in which the property appears to have been under the dire influence of the middleman.

The townland at Gorteanne is close to Roskeagh and contains 42a. 2r. 33p., and let to four tenants at £49 6s., the Poor Law valuation being £51 17s. This townland was also held by a middleman, who sublet the place to seventeen families, and he and they were in object perfection, he eventually surrendered the lease. The farms are now well arranged, and the tenants moderately comfortable; their rents are below the letting value of the lands, the same causes operating, no doubt, as referred to in my observations on Roskeagh.

The townland of Clonake is situated in the parish of Drum, and barony of Athlone. The townland contains 370a. 3r. 8p. The Society, as representative of Lord Rosaleigh, is possessed of a head rent issuing out of this townland—and two other denominations—of £25 5s. 6d., and when Clonake was offered for sale in the Landlord Estates Court, the Society became the purchasers, it being arranged that the portion so bought should be freed of all head rent, the £25 5s. 6d. being chargeable on the residue of the property. The portion thus bought contains 370a. 3r. 8p. of which 663a. 3r. 24p. are let to twenty-six tenants, who pay £276 8s. 2d. One farm of 46a. 0r. 17p. is retained in the hands of the Society, and let for pasturage at £27 16s. 4d.

There are also 134a. of bog. The Society thus enjoy a rental of £304 4s. 6d. out of these purchased lands, a sum which fluctuates by the variation in amount received for the grazing of the farm in hands. The price paid for these lands was £5,250, being seventeen and one quarter years' purchase—an excellent bargain. The lands being let to the tenants on very easy terms, about ten per cent. over the Poor Law valuation, the Society has made no attempt to revise the rents but has spent some £800 in drainage and other works of improvement. The tenants are pretty evenly rented, and all or nearly all, I should say, considerably under the letting value of adjoining lands.

THE FARRA ESTATE, COUNTY WESTMEATH.—No 4 on First Schedule.

This estate is situated within three miles of the Mullingarham Station of the Midland Railway. It consists of two townlands, Rathanielka and Rathbenneth, containing 465a. 2r. 28p., occupied by twenty-two tenants, who pay £335 5s. 8d., as stated on the schedule, but of this sum, J. A. Carroll, and Rev. Mr. Jessop pay £47 1s. 6d., being their proportion of a head rent of £24 3s. 1d., payable to a Mr. Goff, and which the Society only receive as trustees and pay over to him, they paying also an equal sum of £47 1s. 6d. of the head rent. The Farra Estates, therefore, strictly speaking, is held by twenty tenants. I should mention, however, that 90a. 2r. 14p. are unlet, and are let annually for grazing, producing a rental of £135 13s. 4d. The twenty tenants therefore hold 364a. 3r. 14p., for which they pay £352 10s. The Poor Law valuation of the tenanted portion is £333 5s. Eight of the tenants hold by lease, seven of which will expire on 1st November, 1887, and the other on November 1st, 1884, when, no doubt, the rental will be revised. At present, the average rent paid by the tenants is 19s. 4d. per statute acre, which is below its value, in my opinion. Some of the lands adjoining the village of Bunbrowna are exceedingly rich in quality, and occupied for accommodation lands by persons in trade. Patrick McCormick holds 47½a., for which he pays £45 11s. 8d. The Poor Law valuation is £64. He is a yearly tenant. The whole townland is let at about 5½ per cent. over the Poor Law valuation. The Farra School stands on the townland of Rathbenneth. It consists of a straggling set of buildings, now very much out of repair, formerly occupied as an agricultural school, which failed to command itself to the public, and the buildings are now being used as an ordinary school. Some repairs were being carried out when I made my inspection; but the whole place has the appearance of decay and dilapidation, and, in my opinion, quite unsuited as a place for training the youth who attend the school. It is quite impossible with such surroundings to teach, with any chance of success, habits of regularity, cleanliness, and order—the very qualities in which the class of pupils attending such schools most require training. It is possible the Society is only trying an experiment as to the requirements of the district; but, unquestionably, so soon as it may be determined to continue the Farra School, a structure more worthy, in its internal arrangements, of the objects in view, and of the society, should be provided.

The "Lady Maud's Trust,"—No. 5 on Schedule.

"Lady Maud's Trust," known as "Moran's field," in the suburbs of Athlone, was purchased by the Society with funds left them by Lady Maud. It contains 7A. 2n. 31P. let on lease to expire in 1896, at £19 per annum, the Poor Law valuation being £11 5s. This land has been acquired by the Society since the last Royal Commission on Endowed Schools."

THE PODOCKE ESTATE.

This estate consists of nine denominations, or parcels of land, No. 6 to 13, both inclusive, on No. 1 Schedule.

Loughnacush—No. 6 on Schedule No. 1.

Is a parcel of land in the immediate vicinity of the town of Kilkenny. It contains 56 statute acres and 28 perches, was let on 29th September, 1864, at £110 a year, for thirty-one years. It had previously been let as a twenty-one years' lease, at £71 5s. 9d. It is bounded by roads on two sides, and has a capital wall fence next the public road. Although the rent has been considerably increased at the last letting, it is still very far below what it would, I understand, let for, were it again in the market. It is deep rich land, and from its proximity to the town should command a very high rent.

Costishallbeg.

This is a parcel of land, some six or seven miles from the town of Kilkenny. It contains some 47A. 1n. 24r. statute measure; was let on lease, on the 25th of March, 1871, for thirty-one years, at a rent of £75 8s. 2d. to the former tenant, who had held it on a twenty-one years' lease, at a rent of £45 6s. 9d., the Poor Law valuation is £42 15s.; the rent paid for this land is now close on 50s. the Irish acre, which in my opinion, is a very full rent. The lands on the estate immediately adjoining and of similar quality, are let at 44s. the Irish acre. The Society, however, expended £80 in drainage before reletting the land.

Clone and Balligroft, or Bishop's Land,—No. 8, on Schedule 1.

This is a parcel of land of 190A. 0n. 22r. statute measure, situated at the village of Instige, on the Nore, near New Ross. It is let to the Hon. Mr. Tighe, at £40 3s. 2d., the Poor Law valuation being £31 15s. When Colonel Tighe became tenant, there were five tenants on it, who also held land on Colonel Tighe's own property.

Kilronanconway, or Bishop Knock—No. 9, on Schedule 1.

Is a parcel of land of 27A. 0n. 0r., situated within fifteen miles of Waterford, near New Ross, at a village called The Rower, let to one tenant at an annual rent of £9 18s. 6d., the Poor Law valuation being £8 5s. There is no house on this lot.

Kilkenny—No. 10, 1st Schedule.

This is an old house and garden in the town of Kilkenny. It is let at £5 a year, the Poor Law valuation being £2 10s. It was let on a forty year lease, which will expire in 1881. It will then, no doubt, bring a much higher figure than it is now let at.

Kilronan—Nos. 11 and 11a, Schedule 1.

This townland is situated four miles south of the city of Waterford. It contains 525A. 2n. 10r. statute measure, is let to eight tenants, who pay the annual rent of £446 4s. These figures give an average rent to each tenant, of £55 15s., and an average acreage of 65½a. to each tenant. The Poor Law valuation, is £372 5s. The rent is, therefore, 16 per cent over the Poor Law valuation, including the houses, which were chiefly built by the Society. The rent paid by the tenants is about 17s. 6d. per statute acre, equal to 28s. 4d. per Irish acre. The land varies considerably in quality, from thin high land to deep flat alluvial soil, and the rents vary accordingly. The lands are all held under leases for twenty-nine years, from 29th September, 1865. They will, therefore, expire in 1894. There is a good map of this townland. The fields are all well laid out and square, and the fences in excellent condition. The Society has been most liberal in the treatment of the tenantry here as elsewhere. In the twelve years preceding 1857, the Society expended £369 3s. in buildings, and £288 in drainage, and for the past five years they have expended £106. The tenants have valuable interests in their farms. They pay a very moderate rent, and have been treated with very great consideration by the Society. Abatements of rent have been allowed during the past season in the shape of allowances for improvements, and I saw some drainage going on. Some of the tenants, however, appear to me to have more land than they are able to manage. The agent explained to me that he had such trouble in getting rid of some objectionable tenants at one period that he was most anxious to have the farms as large as possible. A farm, however, may be much too large for the tenant's capital, when both he and the estate will suffer. In some instances the Society has advanced money to the tenants for improvements, and charged 5 per cent. added to the rent, a good system, care being taken that the money shall be judiciously expended. There is a capital National school on the borders of this townland. There is a small plantation of 3A. 0n. 25r. statute measure, which the Society retain in their own hands.

Grove—No. 13, Schedule 1.

These lands were left to the Pocke Institution, by a Miss Gorman. They are situate in the county Kilkenny, about six miles from the town of Kilkenny, and contain 267A. 2n. 37r. statute measure, and let to two tenants who pay £132 3s. 6d., the Poor Law valuation being £257 10s.

William Waring, holds 46 acres of this land in fee-farm, at a rent of £32 3s. 6d. The representatives of Michael Cahill, hold 231A. 2s. 37p. at a rent of £100 a year, under lease for three lives, or 31 years, from 25th March, 1858. It appears that Miss Gorman, had a lease for ever, under Mr. Cahill, and had several tenants who left the lands, and Mr. Cahill became himself the tenant. The rent his representatives now pay is the difference between the head rent payable to them by the Society as Miss Gorman's representatives, and the letting value of the land.

DUNDALK ESTATE (from 14 to 17 inclusive, on Schedule 1.)

This Estate comprises various denominations or parcels of land, viz.—Killinchy, in the county of Down—a townland containing 363a. 3s. 36p. statute measure, let to thirteen tenants who pay £452 10s. 8d., the Poor Law valuation being £448 11s. Eight of these tenants hold by leases for twenty-one years from November, 1865. The most recent is that held by the Constabulary, dated 1868. The tenants, excluding the Constabulary, pay close on 32s. the statute measure, equal to about 35s. 8d. per Irish acre, which appears to be a fair rent. The tenants are industrious and comfortable.

"Town Parks," No. 15, on first schedule, consists of 22a. 1s. 6p. in Dundalk, let to two tenants at £93 15s. 4d., the Poor Law valuation being £92. These lands are rented from Lord Roden at some-where about the same rent as is received from the tenants. They are for the accommodation of the Society's school. There are also three tenements in Dundalk, No. 17 on first schedule, let on long leases, producing a rental of £40 1s.

Ballycastle—No. 16, on 1st Schedule

This is a farm of land of 38a. 1r. 37p. in the county of Antrim, near Ballycastle. It is held by a yearly tenant, who pays £40 a year, the Poor Law valuation being £52. There is a house on the land. The lease by which the present tenant held these lands has expired, and the rent is about to be increased.

DEAN STEWART'S ESTATE—Nos. 18 and 19, Schedule 1.

Consists of the townlands of Rathedy and Ardpatrick in the county of Louth, containing 960a. 3s. 16p., let to twenty-one tenants at the yearly rent of £494 2s. 6d., the Poor Law valuation being £263. There are only two leases. The lands appear to be fairly let at about £1 7s. 3d. per statute acre. It strikes me that there should be a revision of the valuation of this townland, as there appears to be considerable unevenness in the rents of the different tenants.

RAY ESTATE—No. 20, 1st Schedule

This is a parcel of land in the townland of Labbodish, on the main road leading from Strabane to Letterkenny, in the county Donegal. It contains 29a. 2s. statute measure. There is a good school on the lands, which were at one time let to the master of the school. This arrangement was not found to suit, and now about seven acres are let at a nominal rent to the master, and the remainder as a grazing farm at £33 a year, which, through a low rent, I believe the tenant, Mrs. Molloy, declines to pay in future.

STRADBALLY ESTATE—No. 21, 1st Schedule.

Is situated in Queen's county, and comprises the townland Aughemadock. It contains 48a. 1r. 3p., let to five tenants at an annual rent of £39 3s. 4d. There are also some houses in Stradbally let at £25 a year. The Poor Law valuation of the lands amounts to £18. The tenants thus pay about 24s. 6d. per statute acre, equal to close on 40s. per Irish acre; the rent is close on 34 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation. This house was formerly a charter school, and the lands were attached to it. The school was given up, and the lands let to the present tenants. I observe that in the year 1857 the lands were let at £45 3s. 7d.

TRIM ESTATE—No. 22, on 1st Schedule.

This consists of a house formerly used as a school, and 15a. 0s. 3p. of land, 12a. 2s. 5p. of which are let to a yearly tenant at £33 15s., the Poor Law valuation being £18. The house and 2a. 2s. of land are in the Society's hands. The land is let at £9 a year for grazing. The agent informs me that the Society contemplates the disposal of the house, and this plot of ground.

NEWPORT ESTATE—No. 23, on 1st Schedule.

House and parcel of land in county Tipperary containing 52a. 2s. 1p., let to a tenant on a thirty-one year's lease from 25th March, 1875, at a yearly rent of £65, the Poor Law valuation being £52 10s.

ROSCOMMON SCHOOL LANDS—No. 24, on 1st Schedule.

Consists of 71a. 2s. 18a. of land and a school-house situated within three miles of the town of Roscommon. The lands are let to Miss Crawford, the principal of the school, who pays £50 10s., certainly a most moderate rent. The land, in my opinion, ranges in value from 25s. to 40s. per acre.

SECOND SCHEDULE

It will not be necessary for me to dwell at great length on these lands and premises consisting as they do chiefly of recharges, head-rents, fee-farm grants, &c., &c.

No. 1 on this schedule consists of "cundry tenements in the town of Athlone," which I have detailed on schedule A, and I shall take up that schedule now, and make the few observations that appear to me to be necessary in reference to it. No. 5 is a yearly tenement let at a moderate rent. No. 7 is stated on the rental to be let on lease from 1st of May, 1858, for twenty-one years, if this be correct that lease has expired and the property should be re-valued.

It will be observed that the "War Department" have a considerable area of ground "to be retained so long as the Department may wish to keep it." And as the barracks are built on these lands, there is little likelihood of these premises becoming untenanted. As the leases fall out on the lots as shown on this schedule a very considerable increased rent may be expected.

There are, as will be observed, 9A. 12. 15r. of grounds attached to the school, all kept in grass for play ground and for the master's cows.

The school appears to be in vigorous action, and the Society in my opinion are most fortunate in the teacher they have placed over it.

The arrears shown on 1st schedule include those due on the tenements now under consideration; a sum of £79 11s. 4d. being the arrears due on these tenements.

Resuming now my observations on the items on the Second Schedule—Nos. 2 and 3 are head-rents and rentcharges on which it is not necessary for me to occupy your attention, the schedule shows, so far as I could obtain the information, the area of lands out of which these charges arise, the Poor Law valuation is of no value as a standard of comparison, except to show how well these charges are secured, the rentcharge termed on the schedule "Cabel" issues out of lands in the county Tipperary, it was termed Price's annuity in Mr. Murland's Report of 1857. There appears to be great difficulty in collecting this charge, there are five or six owners all liable, and some of whom live abroad. In the rental for 1878 this charge is shown to be in arrears to the amount of £166 3s., and it is stated that proceedings to appoint a receiver are being taken. It certainly would be desirable to dispose of this charge if possible to the parties interested in the estate, which is I understand value for £5,000 a year.

PRIMROSE GRANGE LANDS—No. 4, on 2nd Schedule

Consist of a parcel of land near Ballymore, in the county Sligo, containing 79A. 3n. 16r statute measure let on lease for thirty-one years from 29th September, 1848, at the yearly rent of £85 2s. 4d. the Poor Law valuation being £61.

The rest of the lands belonging to this trust are surrounding the very excellent school which is erected on them, distant about four miles from Sligo. This was originally a poor struggling school, attended by only about half a dozen pupils. It was vested in trustees of whom the Bishop of the diocese was one, and the trustees vested their interests in the Incorporated Society, who expended a considerable sum in building the present house. The master holds a portion of the lands as a grazing farm, for which he pays a rent of £13 16s. 8d. The area is given in the rental supplied me as 46A. 1r. 30r., which, I think, must be an error, as I am satisfied, from walking over the lands, that there is not more than half this area. There is a plantation of 18n. 2s. 33r. on the high grounds, which requires a little attention in the way of replanting some parts and thinning out others.

CULBRIDGE ESTATE—Nos 2 and 5 on 2nd Schedule.

This consists of a rent-charge on the late Mr. Connolly's estate of £280 1s. 5d., and of 80A. 3n. 37r. of land surrounding the Society's school which is established there.

The lands are let in three lots. One lot of 27A. 1n. 6r., at the nominal rent of 3s., is let to the schoolmistress. The second lot of 42A. 3n. 36r. is let to her husband at the yearly rent of £56 14s. 4d., and the third lot of 10A. 2n. 37r. is let on a lease for thirty-one years from March, 1853, at the rent of £19 15s.

ARKLOW ESTATE—No. 6 on 2nd Schedule.

Consists of houses in the town of Arklow, county Wicklow, let to three tenants on leases for terms, one for thirty-one years from March, 1877; one sixty years from May, 1863, and one for thirty-one years or three lives, from May, 1845.

This property is termed Boland's Bequest in Mr. Murland's report of 1857, at which time the property was let at 263 2s. per annum.

SANTRY ESTATE—No. 7 on 2nd Schedule.

Contains 54A. 2n. 29r., and is situated within four miles of Dublin. The "Sentry School" is erected on these grounds. The master rents 4A. 0n. 21r., at £10 10s. yearly, and has 6A. 3n. 31r. as a parquette, and a recreation ground for the pupils. 43A. 2n. 17r. are leased to a tenant for thirty-one years from March, 1877, at the annual rent of £141 6s. 8d., the Poor Law valuation being £61. This estate might, perhaps, more properly have been placed on the first schedule.

CLOONMEL ESTATE—No. 8 on 2nd Schedule.

This consists of a house, formerly a charter school, and 39A. 3n. 31r., statute measure, of land, the Poor Law valuation is £94 10s. This property is let to representatives of the late Mr. Bianconi, who held, under a lease granted to him on 4th June, 1864, for three lives or sixty-one years, at a yearly rent of £128 12s. 6d. In 1857 these premises were let at £122 10s., and there was a head rent of £11 1s. 8d. payable out of them. I cannot find any such head rent now charged in the agent's accounts.

LACKEN ESTATE.—No. 9 on 2nd Schedule.

This estate has only recently (1879), come into possession of the society. It is situated in the county Westmeath. It had been left to the Society many years ago by Sir R. Levinge, but only by accident was it discovered that such was the case. The Commissioners of Begonia recovered it some years ago, and even then the Society were not informed of their rights; for several years no rents were collected, and a large arrears thus accumulated, part of which will not be recovered. The lands are let on perpetuity leases, I understood, to six tenants, at the gross annual rent of £92 3s.

This estate has not been brought into the agent's account for 1878, which I have used for the purpose of this report, and I have no means before me of calculating the outgoings. The sum I have put in the schedule (£10), is, therefore, only an estimate.

ROGERSON'S ESTATE, CORK.—No. 10 on 2nd Schedule.

Consists of fifty-three tenements in the City and Liberties of Cork. All these premises are let on leases varying in terms for 91 and 999 years. Some of the 91 years' leases were granted in 1861, one holding was let to Messrs. O'Sullivan and McAuliffe in 1861 on a 90 years' lease at £17 18s. 6d per annum. The former rent was £14 8s. The rule adopted by the Society in re-arranging the rents is to employ a valuator whose instructions are that he is only to estimate the improved value due to circumstances external to the place under consideration, so that no improved rent shall be charged on any outlay made by the former occupier. These terms, which I need scarcely say, are unusually liberal in building leases, induce the tenants to keep up the premises during the whole term of their leases, and even to expend large sums close to their expiring. On one tenement held by Mr. John Prendergast, a new range of houses is being built; his lease will expire in 1912; a great deal of the property is situated in the worst part of the suburbs of Cork.

The rents appear, however, to be punctually paid, and the outgoings for year 1878, amounting to, in round numbers, £142, is made up of agent's fees, water and poor's rate, and income tax. There is a sub-agent employed, residing in Cork, but who only receives £10 a year, which appears to be but a small salary for his somewhat onerous duties.

ROGERSON'S DUBLIN ESTATE.—No. 11 to 16 inclusive on the 2nd Schedule.

Consists of some lands and premises in and about the village of Glasnevin, close to Dublin, and sundry houses in the city of Dublin.

|---|----------|
| In Glasnevin the rent received is £226 9s, issuing out of 82A 2r. 13r., let in fee-farm at, £162 17 2 | |
| One premises, for which no area is given, let in fee-farm, at per annum, | 11 11 10 |
| One premises let for thirty-one years, from May 1st, 1870, | 43 0 0 |
| And one premises let on lease for thirty-one years, from 1st of May, 1865, | 10 0 0 |
| | £226 9 0 |

The remainder of the premises comprised in this tract consists of houses in various parts of Dublin, let for various terms. Some of the leases in Essex-street, Dublin, will expire soon—two in 1891, two in 1892, one in 1888, when, no doubt, this Society's rental will be considerably increased. I observe in the agent's account for this estate an abatement of rent was allowed to Robert Thornton for the year 1878. I cannot find this name on the rental for that year, nor is any explanation given as to why such an abatement should be given.

MITCHELL'S BEQUEST.—No. 17 on 2nd Schedule.

Consists of a head rent charged on lands in the county Tipperary and a premises in Church-street, Dublin, let on lease for ninety-nine years from 1st November, 1874, for which a rent of £46 is paid to the Society.

No. 18 on Schedule consists of tenements in the city of Dublin, viz:—

1. The Dublin Hospital, let on lease for fifty-six years from 29th September, 1832, at the annual rent of £160. This lease will expire in 1888.
2. A tenement in Baginbun-street, let on lease for fifty-five and a half years from 25th March, 1835, at the yearly rent of £5 3s.
3. A tenement in Kevin-street, let by the year at £5; it was an old school; it is valued by the Poor Law valuation at £11.
4. A tenement in Long-lane, let on lease for twenty years from 29th of September, 1860, at the yearly rent of £5. This lease appears to have expired, but in the rental it is bracketed with the next tenement, viz,
5. A tenement in Kevin-street, let on lease for ninety-nine years, and fifty-nine years from 1st of June, 1841. I do not quite understand this last term.
6. Four tenements in York-row, two of which are let on leases for twenty-one years from November, 1868 and 1869, at £20 each; two let at yearly rents of £20 and £10.
7. No. 55, Augier-street, Dublin, let on lease for ninety-one years from May 1st, 1878, at the yearly rent of £80.

The outgoings on these tenements, as taken from the agent's account for the year 1878, amount to £333 13s. 3d and the income to £427 15s, not a very large margin for all the trouble and risk of loss on this class of property.

SUNDRY ESTATES.—No. 19 on Second Schedule.

Comprise a number of small detached properties, as set forth in schedule B, viz.:

Clontarf Property, letter A on above schedule, consists of 14A. 3R. 37P statute measure, let on lease of thirty-one years from November 1st, 1866, at £111 13s. 4d. per annum. In Mr. Murland's report of 1857, the area is put at 10A. 3R. statute measure, and the rent same as at present. The lease under which the lands were held when Mr. Murland made his report, since expired, and a new lease has been given; there was no increase of rent, which I would have expected, considering the position of the premises. I assume that this difference of area is a mere clerical error.

Clough, letter B on schedule B, is let on a lease for lives renewable for ever.

Curraghmore, letter C on schedule B, is let in fee-farm, the area stated in Mr. Murland's report is 711A. 0R. 17P. statute measure, the area given to me is 873A. statute measure.

Dunamasey, letter D on schedule B; this consists of 20A. 1R. of land, and a house, in the county Cork. The house was formerly used as a school, but which was discontinued. The premises were let in 1845 for three lives, or thirty-one years, at a rent of £26 7s. 8d. The Society have since expended £360 on the premises and added 5 per cent to the former rent by agreement with the tenant, who now pays £41 7s. 8d. The money was expended in putting on a new roof. The area as stated in Mr. Murland's report is 32A. 1R. 23P. statute, the area as given to me is 20A. 1R. statute measure. I think, however, that this should be stated as plantation measure, which would very nearly reconcile the discrepancy.

Garryliffon, letter E on schedule B. This is a rent issuing out of lands in county Limerick, let for ever.

Jurishawson, letter F on schedule B. Mr. Murland in his report mentions this property as consisting of an old schoolhouse, and 64A. 3R. 6P. statute measure; in the rental furnished to me the property is stated to contain 2A. 1R. 30P., rented on lease for three lives or thirty-one years, from March, 1834.

The agent mentioned to me that proceedings had been instituted against the Society to evict them from these premises. These proceedings were successful to the extent that close on 62½ acres were recovered from the Society.

Killiterna, letter G on schedule B. This property was described by Mr. Murland "as an old schoolhouse, and 42A. 2R. 14P. statute measure, of land, in the county of Waterford, let on a short lease to one tenant, at £52 a year."

In the rental furnished to me the area and the rent remain the same, but the lease is stated to be for ninety-one years, from 1838, the Poor Law valuation is £110. The agent explained to me that the tenant did the repairs, which were very considerable, and that as this property is in the Liberties of Waterford, the Society were able to grant a long lease.

Mountswart, letter H on schedule B. Lands let for ever in county Dublin.

Shannongrove, letter I on schedule B. This is a plot of land containing 3A. 2R. 50P. and an old schoolhouse, in county Limerick, let to a yearly tenant at £12 a year.

From the year 1857 to 1879 the arrears remitted and otherwise lost to the estates of the governors amounted to £908 12s. 8d. Of this a considerable portion accrued on the Dublin property. £107 was lost by the former master of the Ferra School, who rented the lands adjoining and became insolvent. £191 forms portion of arrears already remitted to the tenants of the Lachen estate above referred to. The total arrears due on this estate when it came into the Society's hands in 1879 was £712 12s. 8d., the greater portion of which, I fear, will be lost.

From 1875 to 1879 inclusive, the Society expended in improvements £1,272 18s. 8d. Of this sum £429 produces a direct return in the shape of increased rent.

In 1857 the total income of all the property in the hands of the Incorporated Society amounted to £7,825 10s. 5d., as will be seen from Schedules 1 and 2. The gross income now is £9,324 2s. 3d. The outgoings in 1857 were put at £1,768 19s. 1d. They are now, as taken from the agent's account for the year 1878, £1,963 4s. 6d.

The agent has excellent maps of the principal portions of the Society's estates. He appears to me to devote great attention to the property entrusted to his care, and from his intimate knowledge of all the affairs of the estate, and the regard in which he is held by the tenants, it is quite evident that he discharges his duties faithfully, and the management of these estates approaches more nearly to the regime of a well ordered private estate than that of any of the others which it was my duty to inspect.

The accounts are most clearly and accurately kept, and might well form a model for those on the other estates.

IV. MISCELLANEOUS SCHOOL ESTATES.

(a) MORGAN'S SCHOOL ESTATES.

The estates of Morgan's School are set forth in following schedule. The first portion comprises the lands let on lease or from year to year. The second portion comprises the property let in perpetuity—

The Newcastle property (see schedule) is situate within a couple of miles of the Hasehutch Station of the Great Southern Railway. It consists chiefly of prime grazing land, and is held by twelve tenants.

| | | |
|-----------------|----------|-----------------|
| 1 farm contains | A. R. P. | statute measure |
| 1 " | 964 2 18 | " |
| 1 " | 49 2 38 | " |

| | | |
|-----------------|----------|------------------|
| 1 farm contains | A. R. P. | statute measure. |
| 1 " | 30 3 31 | " |

The average rent per acre of the whole townland is £1 12s. per statute acre, equal to 52s. per Irish acre. Mr. Graydon has recently taken a lease for twenty-one years of his farm of 182a. 2n. 23r. statute measure, at an annual rent of £390, equal to £3 2s. 6d. per statute acre, or £3 8s. per Irish acre. There is a good house on this lot. The Poor-law valuation of the land only is £331. I do not know the valuation of the house, but I should say it is not more than £20. The land is therefore let at 45 per cent. over the Poor-law valuation, and the house and land at 38 per cent. over the valuation. The land is of prime quality, but in my opinion it is very fully rented.

James Connor holds 204a. 2n. 18r. statute measure. He pays £274 11s. yearly rent. The Poor-law valuation of his farm is £197 15s. The valuation of his buildings would be about £12. His rent is 27s. per statute acre, or 44s. per Irish acre, and his rent is 27½ per cent. over the Poor-law valuation for the land, or 23½ per cent. over the valuation, if the buildings be included.

Patrick Kelly holds 31 acres statute measure. He pays £50 rent. The Poor-law valuation is £31 17s. There is no house on the farm. His rent has recently been increased. His former rent was £31; his present rent is 32s. 3d. per statute acre, equal to 52s. 6d. per Irish acre. His present rent is 36 per cent. over the Poor-law valuation. This farm was valued recently by Messrs. Bursington and Gale at £55.

Mrs. Woodborne holds close on 70 acres. Her rent is £190. The Poor-law valuation of the land £71 15s. Her acreable rent is therefore close on £1 8s. 6d. per statute acre, or 46s. per Irish acre, and is 28 per cent. over the Poor-law valuation. There is, in my opinion, more reasonableness in the rent of this townland than is justified by the variation in the quality of the land. In valuable land, such as that under review, the opinion of a skilled valuer is most desirable when new lettings are contemplated. The agent has been in the habit of making the valuations himself, and only resorts to professional advice when the tenant demurs, and although without doubt he is a very competent judge, I think it would be more satisfactory to himself and to the tenantry if a professional opinion from a disinterested source were obtained.

Ballyboggan is held under the Church Temporalities Commissioners, but the lease expires on 1st November prox., and the property will then pass out of the Governors' hands—it having been purchased at auction by two parties who had no previous connexion with the estate. The Governors did not feel themselves in a position to buy the property. The lands of Lower Ballywilliam are situate near Rathkeale, in the County Limerick. They contain 259a. 3n. 21r. statute measure, and are held by Mr. Ferguson as a yearly tenant at £900. Up to 1867 this land was rented at £233 5s. 6d. per annum; in 1867 it was reduced to £150; in 1881 it was further reduced to £100; it appears now to be let at its full value.

It is unnecessary for me to occupy your attention with any remarks on the remainder of these estates, as they are let either in perpetuity or on very long leases.

The outgoings of the estate are as follows:—

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---|--------|----|----|
| Poor rate, Management, and Incidental, | 167 | 44 | 34 |
| Head rents, | 410 | 5 | 5 |
| Rentcharges, | 325 | 10 | 6 |
| Interest of Purchase-money of Newtowncannon, transferable in twenty-seven and a half years, | 83 | 19 | 0 |
| Interest on Mortgage on "MILL HILL," | 86 | 5 | 0 |
| | £1,010 | 19 | 25 |

The net income, therefore, may be put at £1,874 4s. 6d., less £1,010 19s. 2½d. = £863 5s. 4d.

The accounts are accurately and neatly kept, and carefully audited. The Governors have no bank account. The agent acts as banker and cashier, and at certain periods has considerable sums in his hands. The Governors are relieved of some trouble, no doubt, but I do not think this system a good one as a general rule.

The interests of the Governors appear to me to be most carefully looked after by the agent.

(b) BISHOP FOT'S ESTATE, CO. WATERFORD.

This estate consists of six townlands in the county of Waterford, as set forth in the following schedule, viz:—

| No. of Towns. | Townland. | 1. Area. | 2. Rank. | 3. Poor Law Valuation. | Value of Houses and land on Columns 1. |
|---------------|--------------------------|------------|------------|------------------------|--|
| | | s. R. P. | £ s. d. | £ s. d. | £ s. d. |
| 7 | Ballyquin, | 471 0 30 | 453 5 8 | 315 10 0 | 28 5 0 |
| 14 | Bishop's Town, | 594 1 2 | 511 7 10 | 408 5 0 | 25 15 0 |
| | Moethal, | 257 3 30 | 262 12 8 | 240 0 0 | 39 5 0 |
| | Ballyva, | 420 0 37 | | 192 0 0 | 8 0 0 |
| 9 | Hacketstown, | 304 3 38 | 369 11 4 | 184 0 0 | 13 0 0 |
| | Knockhouse, | 143 2 12 | | 67 0 0 | 1 15 0 |
| 30 | | 2,189 0 10 | 1,576 17 4 | 1,399 15 0 | 116 0 0 |

In addition to the above the trustees receive a rent of £25 16s. 10d. from certain premises in the city of Waterford, let on lease to a Mr. Walton and the representatives of Fleunung.

They also receive an annual sum payable by the Corporation of Waterford under the bequest of the Rev Dr. Gibbon of £9 4s. 7½d.

They rent about twenty-six acres of the lands of Granstown, situated one and a half miles east of Waterford, for which they pay £80 14s. 7d. per annum, and on which land Granstown College is built.

|--|-----------|
| The rentcharges and head rents payable out of the above lands amount to, | £ s. d. |
| And the rent payable for Granstown school grounds as above, | 100 0 4 |
| | 89 14 7 |
| | 189 14 11 |

It will thus appear that their gross income is as follows, viz:—

|--|--------------|
| Rent as per schedule, | £ s. d. |
| For premises in the Town of Waterford, | 1,576 17 4 |
| Dr Gibbon's bequest, | 25 16 10 |
| | 9 4 7½ |
| | 1,611 18 11½ |

And the net income of this estate after deducting the above sum of £189 14s. 11½d. amounts to £1,422 4s., from which of course poor rates, county cess on lands in their own hands, and receiver's fees must be deducted. In 1877 these amounted to the sum of £243 14s. 5½d.

The lands included in above schedule are held, as will be seen, by thirty tenants, which would give an average acreage of close on seventy-three acres; an average rent of £52 10s.; and a rate per acre of 14s. 5d.

The farms, however, vary in size from eleven acres which is the smallest, up to 119 acres which is the largest.

The gross rental as scheduled above is about 11 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation of the lands including the houses, or 18 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation of the lands without the buildings.

These averages do not, however, convey an accurate idea of the actual position of the estate.

Thus the townland of Ballyquin is rented at £435 4s. 8d., which is equal to 34 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation of the land, excluding the houses.

The rental of the townland of Bishopstown is 28 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation.

The townland of Moethal is 23 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation. While the townlands of Ballyva, Hacketstown, and Knockhouse are 13 per cent. under the Poor Law valuation. These results are rather startling, obtained as they are on lands within a few miles of each other.

I made a most careful examination of the greater part of the above mentioned townlands. My attention having been particularly directed to this estate from reading the evidence given before the present Commission in reference thereto.

The lands are chiefly held as dairy farms, and with one or two exceptions little or no improvement appears to have been made since they came into the hands of the present occupiers. There are no far as I can make out but three leases on the estate, one made to the Rev. E. Ridgeway, townland of Mothel, for thirty-one years from November 1st, 1877, at a rent of £33 12s 11d, for about 25a. On 37r, statute acres, the Poor Law valuation being £21 15s. This lease formed the subject of inquiry (see question 18346), and as the Commissioners appeared to think that due care had not been taken to ascertain the full value of the land in question, in accordance with the provisions of the trust, which runs thus:—"It shall be lawful for the trustees by indenture to demise the trust lands at the best improved rents which can be obtained for the same without fine."

I particularly inquired into this matter; the lands in question adjoin the glebe lands of Mothel, which have been recently purchased by the Rev. Mr. Ridgeway. The land is not of good quality, and rent reserved in the lease is, in my opinion, its full value. I therefore think in this instance the terms of the trust have been complied with.

In the townland of Ballyquin the Marquis of Waterford holds 34a. 1r. 6r, statute measure, at a rent of £23 1s 6d, the poor law valuation being £13 10s. The boundary of the estate has been obliterated and a good stone and mortar wall now encloses this portion of the trustee's estate, and embraces it into the demesne of Carraghmore; the land is poor, and is moderately well let at about 30s an Irish acre. This tenement formed the subject of inquiry by your Commission (see question 13283). The lands are held in Lord Waterford's own hands.

There are no leases in this townland (Ballyquin). It was under lease at one time, but when three leases expired, about 1853, there appears to have been no attempt made to re-let the lands by lease, nor has any valuation since been made, and there are no reliable estate maps. Mr. Peter Wall, who holds 162a. 2r. 28r, statute measure, at a rent of £150 16s. 8d., complains bitterly that he is over-rented. The place was originally held under lease taken in what he termed the dear times, after the battle of Waterloo, and said lease expired after the Crimean war when prices were high, and in this way Mr. Wall accounts for not having sought for a reduction of his rent on the expiring of his lease.

I went carefully over his farm, which is in good condition, and well stocked with a herd of thirty-two dairy cows; the fields are fenced off with capital stone and bank fences into thirteen divisions, whereas the Ordnance map shows that when it was made there were thirty-three fields, the total number of statute parcels of new fence made being 936. The lands have been also improved by drainage, and altogether Mr. Wall appears to have done more to improve his farm than all the rest of the tenants on this townland put together. Mr. Wall's rent is about 50s the Irish acre, which is exactly the average rent of the townland; and having reference to the adjoining estates I cannot think Mr. Wall's rent is too high, but relatively to the other holdings it is high, having regard to the improvement he has effected, and to the little energy that appears to have been bestowed on their farms by his neighbours. On another estate immediately adjoining the farm under consideration, and of the same quality, a farm has been let recently at 40s per Irish acre.

In my opinion, however, the increased value of Mr. Wall's land is due to his own industry.

There are fourteen cottier tenants on this townland living in wretched cabins for which, with a small portion of garden to each, they pay from £3 5s to £3 a year to the farmer. On James Power's farm there are six of these cottier houses, the occupants of which are day labourers on the Marquis of Waterford's demesne, receiving 2s. per week wages. Power's rent is £39 11s. 1d. per annum; his poor law valuation for land and house is £32 15s. His land is much out of condition, and a considerable portion of it is sub-let, the bailiff of the estate holding portion of it, and paying 10s. per acre profitrent to Power. The house and premises belonging to this farm are in a very bad state of repair, and the estate is suffering from his negligence. Some of the farms on this townland appear not to be evenly rented, for instance, the farm of Thomas Hayes, containing about seventy-six statute acres, rented at £71 3s. 6d., poor law valuation £51 15s., is unquestionably higher rented in proportion to its quality than the other farms on the townland.

The tenants on this townland draw manure for top dressing from Carrick-on-Suir, some six miles distant, from whence they have also to draw lime.

The townland of Mothel is rented at an average rent of 33s. per Irish acre, is held by four tenants, there are eleven cottiers all paying rent to the tenants of the townland. My attention was here directed to Thomas Sheehan's farm, stated to be let above the average of this townland. He holds 52a. On 20r, Irish measure, and pays £109 8s. 4d. rent, very close on 22 per acre.

I could not see that his land was at all better than that of his neighbour, Daniel Power, who holds forty-four Irish acres, and pays 244 1s. 5d., or about 29s. per Irish acre. Thomas Sheehan, however, has five cottier houses, one of which is a public-house, for which he gets £8 a year. He was also allowed by the trustees £50 towards building a byre.

In my opinion it is the unreasonableness of his rent, as compared to his neighbours, that he has most to complain of.

The townland of Bishopstown or Killensbeg is held by ten tenants, who are exceedingly unequally rented. Considerable portions of this townland became untenanted after the famine years of 1847 and 1848, and were apparently re-let at any figure which could be obtained.

Thus Anne Carroll holds 114 Irish acres at £190 18s. 4d., being about 33s. per Irish acre, the Poor Law valuation being £139 5s., whilst Edward Cantwell holds sixteen and a half Irish acres at £50 10s., a little over 25s. per acre, the Poor Law valuation being £18 15s.

Michael Callinan holds forty-three Irish acres at a rent of £63 7s. 6d., very close on 30s. per acre, the Poor Law valuation being £48 10s., whilst Thomas Sheehan holds twenty-three acres, Irish measure, at a rent of £25 9s. 6d., being a little over 22s. per Irish acre; the Poor Law valuation is £22.

As in the cases referred to in the other townlands it is the unevenness of the rent which causes the discontent which certainly prevails. I think, however, that Michael Cullinan's rent is somewhat high, although the adjoining farm, from which a tenant was recently evicted, has been let at close on 32s. per Irish acre. There would, of course, be no force in these comparisons if the land varied much in quality, but it does not. With the exception of Edward Cantwell's farm I saw no signs of much improvement effected by the tenants. The lands are lying as they were left in 1847 by the previous occupants. The borthage in many cases scored by stagnant water accumulated in the dykes of the old fences which a few days' labour would remove.

The lands of Ballyvad, Hacketstown, and Knockhouse, containing 868a. 2n 37r, statute measure, are rented at £369 11s. 4d., or slightly over 8s. per statute acre, the Poor Law valuation is £445, or close on 10s. 6d. per statute acre.

In every instance the tenants are paying considerably under the Poor Law valuation.

The bailiff, Thomas Drothane, holds 217 statute acres, Poor Law valuation £167, rent £54. It is stated by memorandum on rental that "under the circumstances stated in his petitions the trustees allowed him to hold at his present rent."

On inquiring into these circumstances I find them to be as follows, and the narrative gives some clue to the extraordinary disproportion between the rents paid and the value of the lands.

It appears these lands of Hacketstown were leased to a middleman named Kennedy. By an arrangement entered into between Kennedy and his sub-tenants the latter paid their proportion of his rent to the trustees of Bishop Foy's estate direct to the agent of the trustees, and then paid the profit rent at which the lands were let to them by Kennedy to him.

In the year 1847 Kennedy forced his sub-tenants to pay the rent to the trustees, demanding it all for himself, as he manifestly had a right to do. About 1848 Kennedy died, leaving an arrear of £126 due to the trustees, and his executors declined to pay or to hold the lease any longer. The agent of the said trustees then applied to the sub-tenants, who were unable to pay, and who left their lands. Thomas Drothane, the bailiff, then paid the arrears, and became sole occupier of his present farm, which had been previously held by a number of tenants, to whom he states he paid some money for their good-will, but he himself calls it a "trifle." The agent of the estate appears to have induced these facts, and Drothane has ever since held his 217 acres for £64. Very probably the same or similar circumstances induced the trustees to accept any rent they could get for the rest of the lands at the time, and thus matters have remained. The lands are unquestionably very much under let, and in accordance with my experience in other similar instances the tenants do not appear to have thriven one bit better than on other portions of the estate where the rents are more like the actual value.

The school is situated on the lands of Granistown, about one and a half miles from the city of Waterford. The grounds contain 25a. 2r. 16½p., and are valued for about 23s. per acre, or in round numbers, £77.

The master (Mr. Smith) of the school displays considerable energy in the management of this land, a large portion of which has only recently come into his hands, it having been rented at £41 a year by a former tenant, whose executors declined to hold it at the rent. Mr. Smith states that when the lands were let the pupils were much too restricted as to ground for recreation. He hopes now to save his milk bill of £80 a year, and the manure bill, £13, formerly paid annually for the garden; and also to return as much rent as was obtained heretofore.

It will be observed that it is only from fields Nos. 1 and 5 above, containing about twenty acres that he can hope for these results. I am satisfied that what energy and ability can accomplish will be attained to in this case, but the establishment accounts since farming operations commenced do not show that Mr. Smith's expectations have yet been realized.

The system which the agent adopts in keeping his accounts, though scrupulously accurate in its general feature, does not convey a correct idea of the transactions in reference to this farm. Under the head of Granistown Farm the total expenditure for the year 1878 is stated at £107 9s. 6½d. But this includes, as pointed out to me by Mr. Smyth, an amount of £48 17s. 10d., always heretofore chargeable to the garden. Correct amount chargeable to farm, £58 11s. 8½d. Then to this should be added the rent that could be obtained for the additional lands recently acquired, say £41 6s., the rates, taxes, and price of cattle bought, with interest thereon.

The account should then be crossed with the value of milk, butter, and potatoes consumed; and the cattle sold, and closed by a valuation of the stock on hand; when I inspected the lands there were—

| 4 cows, value for, | £60 | 0 | 0 |
| 1 one and a half year old heifer, | 9 | 0 | 0 |
| 1 yearling heifer, | £6 | 0 | 0 |
| 4 small beasts recently bought, | 16 | 0 | 0 |

The crop consisted of—

| Potatoes, | 0 | 3 | 0 | Grass for hay, | 1 | 0 | 0 | Oats, | 1 | 2 | 0 |
| In all value for about £30. | | | | | | | | | | | |

With these elements it would be quite easy to frame a farm account which would keep the trustees informed as to the prudence of farming these lands themselves.

I have gone, perhaps, too fully and too much into detail in my report on the estates of this trust, but I felt called upon to do so, having myself arrived at the conclusion that this estate has suffered lamentably from want of more active supervision, and being anxious to state the premises on which I arrived at that conclusion.

There can be nothing more fatal to the welfare of an estate than an unwise system of renting. Those who hold much below the value are unwilling to develop the full resources of their land, fearing to attract attention, and, moreover, having every inducement to degenerate into slothful habits, whilst their neighbours are thoroughly dissatisfied, and consider themselves unfairly treated, and are ready to lend a willing ear to the enemy of their race, the land agitator. I regret much to feel constrained to make these observations, but glad to be able to add that the accounts of the agents are admirably kept and carefully audited. I received from him every attention, and he exhibited an anxious desire to let me have all the information I required, but it is impossible to expect from a gentleman, however upright he may be, who has been trained and devoted himself to another profession, that he could give the time or have the special knowledge which is required to conduct the business of a land agent successfully. There are no maps worthy of the name on these estates, nor is there any valuation that I could see. I think that, in fairness to the tenant, there should be a survey and valuation made, not so much with the view of changing the rents, as that the trustees may have before them some intelligible basis to guide them in the management of their estates. The surveyor should be directed to carefully note all improvements made by the tenants, and be asked to put a money value on them, so that there may be no possibility of renting a man for his own exertions.

The houses of the tenantry are fairly comfortable, and some few of them have had sums given them by the trustees, at a rate of 3 per cent, added to their rent, to enable them to build and improve their houses and offices.

(c) WILSON'S HOSPITAL ESTATES.

The lands which comprise this estate are set forth in the following schedule, and are situate, as will be seen, in the counties of Westmeath, Kildare, Longford, and Dublin:—

The estates contain 5,584A. 3a. 7r. statute measure, of lands, let by the year.

The townland of Tony is situated in the county of Longford. The governors only receive a head rent for it of £36 a year.

The average rent per acre of the 5,584A. 3a. 7r. is 13s. 10d., and the rent is $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent over the Poor Law valuation, exclusive of the buildings. I have not obtained the valuation of the houses, but I should say, if it were added to the land valuation, the rent would be found to be at least six per cent under the valuation.

The lands comprise a great variety of soil, varying from rich loam to thin upland, and peaty moors. The townland of Deans is situate in the County Kildare, two miles from Straffan station of the Great Southern and Western Railway. There are only two tenants; one occupies 654A. 1R. 14P., the other 13 acres. The rent of the larger farm, up to May, 1878, was £589. It has since been raised to £692, and a lease granted for 21 years. The Poor Law valuation is £552 15s.

Pierfield is situate about six miles west of Mullingar, and is considered to be the best portion of the Westmeath estate. It certainly is excellent land, and the tenants appear to be very comfortable. This townland contains 994A. 0a. 8p., statute measure. It is held by eighteen tenants, who pay £84 11s. 6d., the Poor Law valuation of the lands being £717 12s. The rent per acre is 17s. and is 14 per cent over the Poor Law valuation. The lands were valued by Messrs. Brassington and Gale previous to the re-letting, and even yet I consider are held at very moderate rent. A considerable tract of flat land, in a great measure relieved of the flood water of Lough Doon by the drainage works completed some years ago, has been reclaimed by the governors and added to the adjoining farms. The holdings on this townland average 44 acres, but there is one farm of 22½ acres, one of 17½ acres, and two of 100 acres each. The houses are comfortable, many of them exceedingly good, and the management of the land by the tenants is very satisfactory. The townland of Monksdown is also superior land, and is occupied by a most industrious and prosperous class of tenant. The average rent is only 13s. per statute acre, slightly more than two per cent. over the Poor Law valuation. This townland is decidedly the most improved and the cheapest rented land on the estate.

The governors allocate £800 a year to the improvement of the estates, and the capital houses which many of the tenants have been assisted to build are monuments of the liberal treatment they have received.

Mrs. Doyle has built quite a commodious farmstead and a handsome and comfortable dwelling-house. She estimates her expenditure on buildings and other improvements at £2,000. The governors paid for the slates and timber to the amount of £500. The farm contains 91 acres; the rent is £61, the Poor Law valuation of the land being £62. The farm is in three divisions, the farms of other tenants intervening. It would be a great improvement if the lands could be "squared." There is a considerable tract of cut-out bog, for which no rent is being paid. Some years ago the portion of cut-away bog land then available was divided amongst the tenants whose houses marched the bog, and 10s. an acre charged for it. There are now about 60 acres that might be allocated.

Cumminstown is ten miles N.E. of Mullingar. It is a large townland, containing 1,432a. 2s. 13r., statute measure. It is held by thirty-eight tenants, who pay a gross rent of £865 5s.; the Poor Law valuation is £778 14s.; the rent per acre is about 12s., and is 10 per cent. over the Poor Law valuation. Some of the tenants appear very poor.

William Partland and Anne Partland hold respectively 30 acres and 10 acres of poor land, the rent being £7 and 2s, the valuation 2s and £4 10s. Houses have been built by the governors for these tenants. These structures are substantially built, but, in my opinion, very much too large for the class of farms on which they stand. The Poor Law valuation has been raised on account of the houses, for William Partland's holding it is now £12 10s. The chimneys are badly constructed, and "draw" very badly.

Over twenty tenants were kept in employment during last winter by the governors, making improvements on their own lands, and I certainly never visited a more grateful tenantry. It was most pleasing to hear their expressions of regard towards their agent, and for the memory of his father, who for many years was agent of these estates, and who evidently looked closely after the interests of the tenantry, and won their esteem by his kind and generous treatment. There are a few cabins on this townland that detract from the general appearance. Bridget McGovern, holding only two acres, statute measure, lives in a hovel, and there are some others as well.

I do not think it necessary to go in detail over each townland. Those I have selected offer examples of the best and probably the worst of the property.

Hostland, on which the Wilson Hospital stands, contains 351a. 2s. 23r., of these 92a. 2s. 38r. are let for grazing to a tenant at £85 15s.; the Poor Law valuation is £63 10s.; the rest of the land is retained in the hands of the Governors as a dairy farm, and stocked by their own cows for the supply of milk and butter for the School. I have not been able to ascertain that the arrangements in connexion with this matter are on a very satisfactory basis. The Principal of the School has a Steward, who buys the cows and manages them apparently rather independently of the agent. There are 152 acres in the hands of the Governors, and used as the dairy farm. If 20 acres be taken off, as curtilage for garden, yards, and buildings, there are still 132 acres available for management—much more than enough, I should say, for the purpose to which this land is now devoted. I think this whole matter requires careful consideration.

| | £ | s. | d. | | £ | s. | d. |
|--|-----|----|----|---------------------------------------|-----|----|-------------|
| Quit Rents, | 31 | 1 | 9 | Poor Rates, | 138 | 13 | 1½ |

| Deduct Outgoings, | | | | | | | 784 19 7 |
| Net Income, | | | | | | | £3,494 10 3 |

The accounts are very neatly and accurately kept. The agent acts as banker, and retains all moneys in his own hands, disbursing them as occasion may require. He pays all the demands made on him by the Principal of the School, who in his turn accounts to the Governors. For the year ending November, 1878, the charges so paid amounted to £3,666 6s. 2½d., which would show the expenditure of that year to be in excess of the income. The agent claims in his yearly account £200 for improvement account. There is frequently also an unexpended balance on this account. The balance in the agent's hands at foot of his general account for year ending November, 1878, was £520 8s. 8d. No doubt he saves the Governors a considerable amount of trouble in thus acting as banker and cashier, and they are perfectly safe in his hands, but I do not consider the system pursued a good one, though apparently in this instance it appears to work well.

APPENDIX E.

REPORT ON THE ROYAL SCHOOLS OF ARMAH, DUNGANNON, ENNISKILLEN, RAPHAH, and CAVAN, furnished by REV. T. T. GRAY, F.T.C.D., to the COMMISSIONERS OF EDUCATION IN IRELAND, on the occasion of his inspection in 1876, vide REPORT, supra p. 22.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—Having been deputed by your honorable Board to visit the Royal Schools of Armagh, Dungannon, Enniskillen, Raphoe, and Cavan, and to inquire into the state and condition of these schools, I have the honour to lay before you the following report:—

I gave the head master of each school a fortnight's notice of the day on which I proposed commencing my visitation.

I made it my principal object to ascertain, as accurately as I could, the actual state of education in the several schools, directing my attention more particularly, however, to mathematics and English.

Accordingly, except at Armagh where, owing to the large number of pupils, I was unable to carry out my plan to the full extent, I examined all the boys I found present in each school in writing from dictation and in arithmetic.

I also examined in algebra, Euclid, and trigonometry all who had advanced beyond the mere elements of these subjects.

I gave the same kind of examination at each school, and in many instances the same questions. Therefore to convey a more accurate idea of the progress actually made by the pupils, as well as to facilitate a comparison between the different schools, I annex the passage selected for dictation, and also some of the questions given in arithmetic and algebra:—

Passage for Dictation.

* His capacity was considerable, but faster to discourse on general maxims than to conduct any intricate business. Awkward in his person and ungaily in his manners, he was ill qualified to command respect; partial and misbecoming in his affections, he was little fitted to acquire general love. Never had a sovereign a higher sense of the kingly dignity, never was any less qualified by nature to sustain it. He spent much of his time in hunting and in the coarse and vulgar sports of cock-fighting, and betting bulls and bears, and the manners of his court were disgraced by buffoonery and drunkenness."

ARMAGH.

I first visited Armagh and commenced the business of the visitation at the time appointed, Saturday, March 25th, at ten o'clock, A.M.

The Rev. W. M. Morgan, Head Master, and the following assistant masters were in attendance:—T. B. Gordon, esq., B.A., Senior Assistant Classical Master; E. V. Forshall, esq., M.A., Classical Master of Sixth Form; A. R. Ryder, esq., B.A., Assistant Classical Master; W. F. Adamson, and E. R. Johnson, esqrs., Classical and English Masters of Lower School; W. H. Unger, esq., B.A., German Drawing, and Writing Master; Maria S. Deschamps, B.A., French Master. W. P. Strangways, esq., Jun., Mathematical Master, was prevented, by illness, from attending on March 25th, but returned to the school on Monday, March 27th.

There were also in attendance on March 25th, 83 boarders and 43 day pupils; total, 126. Five boarders were reported absent from illness; three day pupils were also absent. Total number on school roll, 134, viz.—88 boarders, and 46 day pupils.

The boarders are all members of the Church of Ireland. Twenty-six of them belong to the province of Ulster, 44 to Leinster, 10 to Munster, and 8 to Connaught. Ten of the day boys are Dissenters.

There is no Roman Catholic at the school; 11 of the day boys are free pupils.

The regular number of free pupils is 10, but one additional has been admitted on special grounds. No distinction whatever is made at this or any of the Royal Schools between the free pupils and the paying pupils. None of the boys, nor even the assistant masters, know who are free pupils, and who are not.

If, in future, there should be a greater number of applicants for free places than there are places vacant, an examination will be held by the head master with a view to select the most deserving, but in order to prevent it being known who the free pupils are, the examination will be held during vacation only.

The whole school is divided into two parts, the upper school and the lower school. The upper school consists of 84 boys divided into five classes; the lower school contains 50 boys, divided into three classes.

During the three days (March 25th, 27th, and 28th,) over which my visitation extended, I examined each class in the school (upper and lower) in at least two subjects of their ordinary work. Some classes I examined in six subjects.

Writing from Dictation.—I examined 77 boys in this subject, comprising all the boys belonging to the fifth, third, upper second, lower second, and first forms. Sixteen had no mistakes in spelling, 17 had one, 10 had 2, and 34 had 3 or more. I may remark that 14 of these 34 belonged to the 6th form, or most junior class in the school.

Arithmetic.—I examined 107 boys in arithmetic, i.e., all the boys present except the sixth form or head class. Forty-three answered 50 per cent, and upwards, of the questions given; 11 answered 40 per cent, and 14 answered 30 per cent. The remainder, 39 in number, answered less than 30 per cent, and may be said to have failed in this subject.

I observed that the answering of the three junior classes was much better than that of the senior classes. On calling Mr. Morgan's attention to this, he accounted for it by the fact that the junior boys devote more of their time to the practice of arithmetic than the senior boys, who are engaged rather at algebra, Euclid, &c. I suggested in reply, that the senior boys should be obliged to devote a certain portion of time each week to arithmetic, and so keep up their knowledge of it.

Algebra.—I examined the sixth, fifth (or lower fifth), and fourth forms, consisting of 62 boys, in algebra. Twenty-four answered 60 per cent, and upwards of the questions given, 18 answered from 40 to 50 per cent, and 11 answered 30 per cent. The remainder, 9 in number, failed.

Both in arithmetic and algebra the boys seem to have been carefully taught. However, though able to apply the rules given for the various operations with quickness and accuracy, they were unable, in most cases, to explain the principles upon which these rules are founded. For instance, only a few could explain why in the multiplication of decimal fractions, the number of decimal places in the product is the sum of the number of decimal places in the multiplicand and multiplier; or why, in algebra, the exponent of the product of two powers of the same quantity, is equal to the sum of the exponents of the multiplicand and multiplier. or, again, why in an equation you must change the sign of a term, when you transpose it from one side of the equation to the other.

Euclid.—I examined the sixth and fifth forms, consisting of 31 boys, in Euclid. About one-third only of this number answered well. I could see, however, that great pains had been taken in teaching them, but it is exceedingly difficult to make boys remember Euclid, so as to stand an examination in any considerable amount of book work. Constant weekly repetitions alone can effect this.

Trigonometry.—I examined the 13 boys of the sixth form in trigonometry. Three answered remarkably well, 4 fairly and the remaining 6 badly.

Classics.—I did not examine to any great extent in classics. I did, however, examine all the boys of the sixth form in Homer, Xenophon, and Horace, and all the boys of the fifth form in Xenophon and Livy. The sixth form translated very well, and the fifth form fairly, but they all passed exceedingly well both in Greek and Latin.

Modern Geography.—I examined all the boys, 24 in number, of the sixth and third forms, in modern geography, and the majority answered fairly.

Writing.—I examined all the copy books and found the writing very good. Particular attention is given to this subject, and I highly approve of the writing models, as he called them, used and published by Mr. Unger, the writing master. By means of them the pupil is instructed at one and the same time in writing, spelling, punctuation, &c. I directed the attention of the head masters of the other schools to this method of teaching writing, and recommended them to adopt it.

French.—I sat by while the French master instructed two classes, selected at random by me, in their ordinary work. A fair proportion of the boys answered well.

Special Classes.—There are no special classes formed for the purpose of preparing boys for any of the various competitive examinations, but a few boys, preparing for Cooper's Hill, receive private tuition from some of the assistant masters out of school hours.

The Head Master.—The head master is engaged in no other employment than the management of his school. He teaches the senior classes in certain portions of their regular work, and devotes the two half holidays which are given each week, on Wednesdays and Saturdays, to hearing repetitions of the junior classes, no notice being given beforehand as to what classes he will take up. He also teaches the classes of any of the assistant masters, who from illness or any other cause may be unable to attend.

The Assistant Masters.—The assistant masters are all gentlemenlike men, and well qualified in every way to secure the respect and regard of the boys. Three of them are Englishmen; four are Irishmen; one a German; and one a Frenchman. Mr. Morgan calculates the cost of his assistant masters at £1,500 a year, inclusive of the £150 allowed by the Commissioners. Their salaries are as follows:—Mr. Gordon is paid £210 a year, non-resident; Mr. Forshall, £250 do; Mr. A. Johnstone, £200 do; Mr. Unger, £180 do; Mons. Deschamps, £135 do; Mr. Ryder, £150 a year with board and residence; Mr. W. F. Johnson, £120 do; Mr. E. R. Johnston, £100 do; Mr. Stenagways, £90 do.

School Premises.—I carefully inspected the school premises, including schoolrooms, dormitories, gymnasium, and all other portions of the buildings, as well as the play-ground, privies, ball court, &c., and found all, particularly the dormitories, every thing that could be desired in the way of cleanliness, neatness, and order. The school furniture is in good order, but there is no clock in any of the schoolrooms.

1 Suggestions.—The ceiling of one of the oldest of the dormitories, containing no less than thirty beds, is exceedingly low, a defect which, I think, might be easily remedied, and at a small expense, by having the ceiling raised to the height of the collar-ties of the rafters. I would, therefore, suggest that the architect of the Board be desired to examine and report whether this or any improvement is possible.

2 The play-ground requires to be drained. This would be an easy matter from the nature of the ground which slopes away gradually from the school buildings.

3 I would also suggest that the portion of the play-ground, principally, and indeed of necessity always in use with the boys, that namely which adjoins the school premises, and lies between the gymnasium on one side, and the ball court on the other side, should be gravelled. At present it is all in grass, and consequently in wet weather is soon trampled into mud. A foundation, about a foot in depth of rough stones under the gravel, would keep this portion of the playground perfectly dry at all seasons.

DUNGANNON.

I next visited Dungannon, and commenced the business of the visitation at the time appointed, Wednesday, March 29th, at 10 o'clock, A.M.

The Rev. Frederick H. Ringwood, Head Master, and the following assistant masters were in attendance:—W. H. Gunning, esq., B.A., Ex. Soc., T.C.D., Assistant Classical Master; William Wright, esq., Sc., Soc., T.C.D., Mathematical and English Master; Mona. T. C. Gambier, French and Writing Master.

There were also in attendance 16 boarders and 19 day pupils (including two sons of the head master). Total present 35. Three day pupils were reported absent. Total on school roll, 38.

One of the boarders is a Dissenter. The remainder are members of the Church of Ireland. Eight of the boarders belong to the province of Ulster, 5 to Leinster, 2 to Munster, 1 comes from England. Of the day boys 6 are Dissenters, 5 being Presbyterians, and 1 a Wesleyan.

There is no Roman Catholic at this school. Five of the day boys are free pupils, two of them being Presbyterians.

The regular charge for day boys is £10 a year, but several pay less. In fact the payments actually received from day boys vary from £4 to £10.

My visitation extended over two days, March 29th and 30th.

Writing from Dictation.—I examined all present, except four very young boys who had just come to the school, in writing from dictation. Eight had no mistake in spelling, 5 had one, 8 had two, 10 had three or more.

Arithmetic.—I examined the same 31 boys in arithmetic, 17 answered 50 per cent. and upwards of questions given; 2 answered 40 per cent., and 3 answered 30 per cent. The remainder, 9 in number, answered less than 30 per cent., and may be considered to have failed in this subject. The majority of those who failed were junior boys.

Algebra.—I examined the three senior classes, consisting of 19 boys, in algebra. Six answered 60 per cent. and upwards of the questions given, 7 answered from 40 to 50 per cent., 3 answered 30 per cent., and the remaining three failed. Thus both in arithmetic and algebra the boys seem to have been carefully taught. But, just as at Armagh, with one or two exceptions, I could find no boy able to explain the reasons of the various rules.

Euclid.—I examined the two senior classes, consisting of 14 boys, in Euclid. Seven answered very well, the remainder failed.

Trigonometry.—I examined the 10 boys of the two senior classes in trigonometry; one answered very well, one middling, and the rest failed. As a general rule I never find more than two or three boys in any school able to answer well in trigonometry, and the five Royal Schools form no exception.

Classics.—I examined the two senior classes, containing 15 boys, in several Greek and Latin authors; Euripides, Demosthenes, Xenophon, Horace's Odes, Satires, and Epistles, and the answering was exceedingly good, both in Greek and Latin, and equally good in translation and parsing.

Modern Geography.—I examined some classes in modern geography, and they answered creditably.

Writing.—I examined all the copy books, and found the writing good.

French.—All the boys learn French. I sat by while the French master examined two classes selected at random by me, and the boys answered well. As far as he can, the French master insists on the boys addressing him in French. All school lessons are conducted in that language.

The Head Master.—The head master is engaged in no other employment than the management of his school. His attainments as a classical scholar are well known, and he devotes a great part of his time to the personal tuition of his pupils, especially those of the senior classes, in Greek and Latin. On the other hand, from his tastes and studies being exclusively classical, he takes no part whatever in the teaching of mathematics, which department is therefore left entirely to his assistant master. Accordingly, he values very highly any opportunity that may present itself of having his boys examined in the various branches of mathematics by some independent and competent person, who will point out any deficiencies, and offer any useful suggestions.

The Assistant Masters.—The assistant masters seem properly qualified and competent men. Their salaries are as follows.—Mr. Gunning is paid £100 a year, with board and residence; Mr. Wright is paid £150 a year, non-resident; Mons. Gambler is paid £120 a year, non-resident.

School Premises.—I carefully inspected the school premises, including school-rooms, dormitories, gymnasium, and all other portions of the buildings, as well as the play-ground, privies, ball-court, &c. and found all, particularly the dormitories, everything that could be desired in the way of cleanliness, neatness, and order. The school furniture is in good order, and each school-room is provided with a clock.

RAPHOE.

I next visited Raphoe, and commenced the business of my visitation at the time appointed, Friday, March 31st, at ten o'clock, A.M.

The Rev. James A. Weir, Head Master, and the following assistant masters were in attendance:—G. C. Alfred, esq., B.A., Ex-Sch., Assistant Classical Master; T. Sutcliffe, esq., B.Sc., T.C.D., Assistant Mathematical Master.

There were also in attendance 14 boarders and 10 day pupils (including the head master's son). Total present, 24. Two day pupils were reported absent. Total on school roll, 26.

Twelve of the boarders are members of the Church of Ireland. The remaining two are Presbyterians, but attend Divine Service with the rest, and are taught the Presbyterian Catechism by the head master. Twelve of the boarders belong to the province of Ulster, and two to Leinster. Two of the day boys are members of the Church of Ireland. Nine are Presbyterians. One is a Roman Catholic. One of the day boys is a free pupil.

The charge for day boys is nominally £10 a year, and £5 each for brothers. But, as a matter of fact, the head master accepts any sum less than this, that the parents can conveniently pay. For instance, one day boy at present pays only £4 a year. The head master has, on many occasions, even supplied books gratis to free pupils, and one whom he treated in this way is now receiving £1,500 a year in the Civil Service of India.

My visitation extended over two days, March 31st, and April 1st.

Writing from Dictation.—Two had no mistake in spelling. Four had two mistakes in spelling. Eighteen had three or more mistakes in spelling. From this it appears that there is great room for improvement in this elementary but very important branch of education. The head master was much surprised at the result, as he himself devoted a good deal of time to exercising his pupils in spelling and writing from dictation.

Arithmetic.—I examined all present in arithmetic also. Nineteen answered 50 per cent, and upwards, of the questions; 2 answered 40 per cent. The remaining 3 answered less than 30 per cent., and failed. I consider the answering in arithmetic was very good.

Algebra.—I examined 13 in algebra. Two answered 80 per cent of the questions given; 2 answered 40 per cent. The remainder, 9 in number, failed. Just as at the other schools, I could find only one or two boys able to explain the principles involved in the ordinary rules of arithmetic and algebra.

Euclid.—I examined 9 boys in Euclid. Four answered very well. The remainders were weak. Trigonometry.—One boy answered remarkably well in trigonometry, and another fairly. These were the only boys who had made any progress in this subject.

Classics.—The 8 senior boys have made good progress in classics, and have been well and carefully taught. I examined them in Homer, Demosthenes, de Falsis Legationibus, a play of Euripides, Virgil, Sallust, and Cicero, de Senectute, and all but one answered very well.

Writing.—I examined all copy books. The writing is fair.

French.—Great pains are taken by the head master and Mr. Alfred in teaching French; but the small number of pupils at the school does not admit of the expense of a regular French Master. However, the boys read fairly, and translated, and parsed well. They are also exercised in writing out French.

The Head Master.—The head master has no other employment than his school. He takes a large, perhaps the principal, share of the teaching. Indeed his great diligence in this respect cannot be too highly commended.

The Assistant Masters.—The assistant masters are competent and hard-working men. Their salaries are as follows.—Mr. Alfred is paid £120 a year, inclusive of the £80 allowed by the Commissioners. Mr. Sutcliffe is paid £90 a year. Both reside and board in the school.

School Premises.—I carefully inspected the school premises, including the school-rooms, dormitories, and all other portions of the buildings, as well as the play-ground, privies, ball-court, &c. As these premises are far inferior in extent to those of Arrangh, Dungannon, and Enniskillen, so they are not comparable to them in neatness and order. The dormitories, however, are clean and well-ventilated. The schoolrooms and school furniture are in tolerable order. The play-ground, though small, is untidy. Brushwood has been allowed to grow in it, which should be at once removed. The wall round it requires to be pointed and dashed. Some of the dashing has fallen off the infirmary, as if it had been put on in frosty weather, and should be removed. The privies are not at all in a satisfactory state. Something should be done to put them into a proper condition. The head master says no fall can be had, and so he is obliged to have the flooring removed every vacation while the boys are away, have the place cleaned out, and a quantity of turf mould and lime thrown in. The boys have a small library and a reading-room, which are kept up by a subscription of 6s. a year from each boy.

ENNISKILLEN.

I next visited Enniskillen and commenced the business of the visitation at the time appointed, Monday the 3rd, at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

The Rev. William Steele, D.D., Head Master, and the following assistant masters were in attendance—William J. Valentine, esq., M.A., First Moderator in Classics, F.C.D., Assistant Classical Master; S. Goodwin, esq., B.A., Assistant Mathematical Master; William Anderson, esq., English Master; Cesar Bigler, esq., French and German Master; William Wakeman, esq., Drawing Master.

There were also in attendance 32 boarders and 11 day pupils. Total present, 53. Two boarders were reported absent. Total number on school roll, 55.

All the boarders are members of the Church of Ireland. Twelve of them belong to the province of Ulster, 11 to Leinster, 4 to Munster and 4 to Connaught. The parents of 3 do not live in Ireland. The remaining 4 are Roman Catholics. Eight of the day boys (and among them 2 Roman Catholics), are free pupils.

My visitation extended over two days, April the 3rd and 4th.

Writing from Dictation.—I examined all present in writing from dictation. Six had no mistake in spelling, 7 had one, 7 had two, and 23 had three or more.

Arithmetic.—I examined all in arithmetic also; 35 answered 50 per cent. and upwards of the questions given; 8 answered 40 per cent., and 2 answered 30 per cent. The remaining 8 failed.

I consider this very good answering indeed, as many as 9 having answered every question correctly.

Algebra.—I examined 29 boys in algebra. Fifteen answered 60 per cent. and upwards of the questions; 11 answered from 40 to 50 per cent.; and 2 answered 30 per cent. It thus appears that the actual answering in arithmetic and algebra was very good, and indicated careful training; but just as at all the other schools, I found only one or two boys able to explain the principles of the rules they employed. In addition to the mistakes, already given, I observed here that all the boys who solved a quadratic equation which I gave did so by the well-known formula. But not a single boy could prove the formula. Dr. Steele, however much he deplored the fact, expressed great satisfaction at having this defect pointed out to him.

Euclid.—I examined 12 in Euclid, 5 answered well, and 6 badly.

Trigonometry.—I examined 13 in Trigonometry; 7 answered very fairly, and the remaining 6 badly. I may remark that Dr. Steele has had great difficulty lately in getting a mathematical master, and the gentleman whom he has at present, though an excellent scholar, has been with him only a short time.

Classics.—I examined some of the senior boys in Homer, Thucydides, and Sallust; they answered well both in translation and parsing.

Modern Geography.—I examined 21 boys in modern geography, and the majority of them answered intelligently and well.

Writing.—I examined all the copy-books, and the writing was fair.

French.—I sat by while the French master examined two classes, selected at random by me, in French. The majority of them answered creditably. The examination was conducted in French, and so are all ordinary school lessons.

The Head Master.—In addition to being the Principal of this school, the head master is also Incumbent of the Parish of Devenish, about five miles distant from Enniskillen, the acceptance of which was pressed upon him by the Primate. He has, however, handed over the entire management of it, together with the income and glebe, to his son, who, as his curate, does all the duty. And except delivering an occasional lecture, Dr. Steele takes no part in parochial work, such as visiting, &c., during the time the school is assembled. It is only during vacations that he gives any substantial assistance to his son. He devotes a considerable portion of his time to teaching in the school, directing his attention more particularly to the younger boys, with a view to having them well grounded in first principles.

The Assistant Masters.—The assistant masters are well qualified and competent men, and seem to take a deep interest in the welfare of the school. Their salaries are as follows.—Mr. Valentine is paid £200 a year, non-resident; Mr. Goodwin is paid £100 a year, with board, residence, &c.; Mr. Mr. Bigler is paid £100 a year with board, residence, &c.; Mr. Anderson is paid £100 a year, non-resident; Mr. Wakeman is paid £96 a year, non-resident.

School Premises.—I carefully inspected the school premises, including the school-rooms, dormitories, and all other portions of the building, as well as the play-ground, paviors, ball-court, &c., and found all just as at Armagh and Dungannon, everything that could be desired in the way of cleanliness, neatness, and order. The school furniture is in good order.

CAVAN.

I next visited Cavan and commenced the business of my visitation at the time appointed Wednesday the 5th of April, at ten o'clock, a.m.

The Rev. William P. Moore, Head Master, and the following assistant masters were in attendance—Horace G. Kelly, Esq., Assistant Classical Master; J. H. Cooke, Esq., Assistant Mathematical Master.

There were also in attendance 12 boarders and 12 day pupils; total present, 24. One day boy was reported absent. Total on school roll, 25.

All the boys, boarders and day boys, are members of the Church of Ireland.

The head master accounted for the small number of day boys by the fact that there is a large Roman Catholic college a short distance from the town, a school conducted by the Christian Brothers, and a school conducted by a Presbyterian clergyman, both in the town. Four of the boarders belong to the Province of Ulster, six to Leinster; two to Connaught. There are no free pupils at this school. The head master says he "cannot get" them.

Writing from Dictation.—I examined all present in writing from dictation. No paper was altogether free from mistakes in spelling. Three had one mistake in spelling, four had 2; seventeen had 3 or more.

Arithmetic.—I examined all present in arithmetic also. Ten answered 60 per cent. and upwards of the questions given; 2 answered 40 per cent; 3 answered 30 per cent. The remainder, 9 in number, failed.

Algebra.—Nine boys are learning algebra, and I examined them all. The 4 best answered only 40 per cent. of the questions; 2 answered 30 per cent. of the questions; 2 failed.

Euclid.—Two boys answered fairly in the first three books of Euclid, but not much has been done in this subject.

Trigonometry.—Five boys are commencing trigonometry, but as yet cannot be said to know anything about it. The boys at this school are, in general, much younger than those at the other schools, and in my opinion quite unfit as yet to attempt trigonometry.

Classics.—Only 6 boys have attempted anything beyond grammar and delectus in Greek and Latin, and of these only three, who answered well in the First Book of Xenophon, can be said to have made any progress in Greek. The best of the three, an intelligent boy, tried the Fifth Book of Homer, but broke down. I got no good answering in Latin, except from the most junior of the six, who brought up the first 300 lines of the First Book of Virgil, and answered well.

Modern Geography.—I examined 7 in modern geography, and they answered well.

Writing.—I examined all the copy-books, and found the writing good.

French.—The head master himself teaches French. He examined his best class for me. The boys all read, translated and parsed well, and showed a fair knowledge of the connexion between French and Latin.

The Head Master.—The head master is engaged in no other employment than the management of his school. He devotes several hours each day to the teaching of his pupils in classics, French and modern geography.

The Assistant Masters.—The assistant masters are quite competent to teach the young boys, of whom this school is nearly altogether composed. I beg to express my entire disapproval of the way in which the assistant masters at this school are paid their salaries. The Commissioners allow Mr. Kelly £100 a year, but out of this he pays the head master £7 a quarter for his board, &c. Thus his real salary is £72 a year, with board, &c. Mr. Cooke is paid in cash £40 a year, and he also receives in addition the entire profits of the drawing class, and his board, &c.

School Premises.—I inspected the school-room, dormitories, infirmary, privies, &c. The dormitories are clean and well ventilated. The school-room also is in good order, but the school furniture seems very old, and exhibits all the usual marks of long service. The privies are in a dirty state. The woodwork, both flooring and seats, requires to be renewed, and the level of the new floor should be raised at least six inches above the level of the ground outside.

GENERAL REMARKS

Of the five Royal schools, Armagh alone can be said to be in a really flourishing condition. The state of education in it is very satisfactory, and the number attending, both of boarders and day boys, is very large. Mr. Morgan has introduced the system of giving three vacations in the year, viz.:-Seven weeks in summer, a month at Christmas, and three weeks at Easter. He says he finds this system a great improvement on the old system of giving only two vacations in the year, for that the boys are all, with hardly an exception, back on the day the school re-opens, and that both boys and masters work better.

Notwithstanding his experience in its favour, I cannot bring myself to approve of a system which entails so much expense and inconvenience on parents, and which leaves boys in idleness for so large a portion of the year. Moreover, I feel assured that an additional fortnight at least may be considered as lost at each vacation, owing partly to the unsettling of boys' minds immediately before going home, and partly to the length of time which must elapse before they can get thoroughly into work after returning to school. On these grounds I am of opinion that the Easter vacation should be limited to three or four days. I may add that the head masters of the other Royal schools agree with me.

At Dungannon also, the state of education is very satisfactory, but the number attending, only thirty-eight in all, is exceedingly small. The head master gives three reasons for this—(1) the large number of Irish boys who are now sent to England for their education; (2) the fact that his own political views are not in harmony with those of the great majority of the Irish gentry; (3) the flourishing state of Armagh. The first reason is, I regret to say, only too true, and applies equally to all schools in Ireland. The second, also, I have grounds for believing, holds good to a great extent. But I cannot attach much importance to the third reason assigned, which seems to rest entirely upon the assumption that the great majority of the boys attending the Royal schools belong to the particular Province in which these schools are situated, but from the table annexed it would appear that it is the Province of Leinster, not the Province of Ulster, which supplies the largest number of boys to the Royal schools. Armagh attracts forty-four—in other words, half of its entire number of boarders come from Leinster, while Dungannon attracts only five. Indeed, the four other Royal schools together, with all the advantages they offer, can attract only twenty-four boarders in all from Leinster.

At Enniskillen too, the state of education is very satisfactory, but the number attending, fifty-five in all, though larger than in the case of Dungannon, falls far short of what might naturally be expected. I believe that one great cause operating against the full success of this school is to be found in the accidents which have occurred there, by which some boys lost their lives.

When such splendid institutions as Dungannon and Enniskillen are, comparatively speaking, empty, it is not to be expected that Raphoe should be in a very flourishing condition in point of numbers. The head master works hard, but it is no easy matter to get up a large school in this part of the country. If the funds at the disposal of the Commissioners would allow of it, I would suggest that some encouragement in the shape of prizes and exhibitions tenable at the school should be given to Raphoe. If even half the sum proposed to be given in this way to Armagh, Dungannon, or Enniskillen were given to Raphoe it would, in my opinion, tend to increase largely the number of pupils.

Of all the Royal schools I consider Cavan to be in the least satisfactory condition as regards the state of education, while it is also the lowest in point of numbers. It may be said that Dungannon, with all its superior advantages, has only sixteen boarders, and that Cavan, with twelve, may fairly be compared with it; but Cavan has never been successful, which Dungannon has, and, I trust, will soon be so again; but as far as my observations went, I could not see any grounds for thinking that Cavan, under its present management, will ever prove successful. Mr. Moore feels greatly dissatisfied with the course which the Commissioners considered it necessary to take with regard to this school, in deducting first £100 a year, and afterwards a second £100 a year from the salary of the head master. He considers that under his patent of appointment he was entitled to the full salary, and he even expressed a doubt as to whether it would not be his duty to ascertain by legal proceedings whether the Commissioners had not overstepped their powers in making such deductions. Now, if the sums thus deducted from Mr. Moore's salary have been allowed to accumulate, or if from any other source, the Commissioners have the means at their disposal, I would beg to suggest for the serious consideration of the Board that a retiring pension should be offered to Mr. Moore. From some expressions used in conversation I am inclined to think that he would accept such pension. At my rate I am decidedly of opinion that the Commissioners must either see Cavan Royal School continuing to drag on a bare existence in its present languishing state, or else undertake what appears to me to be the only possible remedy, and induce the present head master to retire. A school, with premises so commodious and so advantageously situated, and enjoying such facilities of communication by railway with every part of Ireland could not fail to secure the services of a highly qualified head master, a man who, by his energy and diligence would soon infuse new life and new vigour into the institution.

Irish Boys and English Schools.—The head masters, one and all, alleged as the principal, if not the only, cause of the small number of boys attending their schools the practice which now prevails, almost universally, among the Irish nobility and leading gentry, of sending their sons to English schools. They declare that as far as in them lies, they spare no pains or expense in providing sound tuition and an extended course of instruction for their pupils, and, at the same time, leave nothing undone to promote their health and comforts, yet they complain they do not receive from the public that support and encouragement which their efforts deserve, that such is the force of fashion and example they are not supported even by those whose patronage they had a fair right to expect.

As regards the health and personal comforts of the boys, I believe that the arrangements at present existing in the leading Irish schools are all that any reasonable parent could desire.

As to the education given, perhaps the most valuable test is the progress made by boys of moderate or inferior abilities, who compose eighty, or even ninety, per cent. of every school, and my experience as a college tutor leads me to the conclusion that, judged by this test the leading Irish schools will bear a very favourable comparison with the English schools of highest reputation.

But I feel convinced that the really weak point at present in our Irish schools is the position of the assistant masters. Rewards for learning given to the pupils, whether in college or at the school, may induce parents to select the Royal schools for their sons in preference to those where no such rewards are offered; but I very much question whether they have ever induced a parent to select one of the Royal schools in preference to an English school. The only argument of any practical value for this purpose is to be able to prove to him that the advantages which he seeks abroad at a large outlay may be had at home, and at a considerably less cost. Now, of these advantages the most important undoubtedly is that the character and position in the social, intellectual, and moral point of view, of the men to whom the actual teaching of the pupils is entrusted, should be such as to command the respect and regard of those committed to their care. There is no lack of such men, but they cannot be had unless they are encouraged to devote themselves to the profession of teaching by the offer of such liberal remuneration as their talents and qualifications fairly entitle them to expect. The salaries at present paid to the assistant masters in your schools, as mentioned in former parts of this report are, in most cases, in my opinion, quite inadequate. I therefore venture to suggest as a subject deserving of the serious consideration of the Commissioners, that they should endeavour to raise the tone and character of their schools by improving the position of the assistant masters.

Insurance against Fire.—I am not informed whether the Commissioners have the buildings of the different schools insured, but if such is not their practice, I would beg to call their attention to the necessity of such a prudent precaution. Observing marks of fire in one of the rooms of the infirmary at Rathoo, I asked the head master the cause, and he informed me that lately some matting which was being dried took fire, and that had he not discovered it in time, the consequences might have been serious. He could not say whether the premises were insured or not.

Royal Scholarships.—Before concluding this Report I wish to make a few remarks on the course at present appointed for the examination for Royal Scholarships. Some of the books recommended are quite unsuited for school boys. As an instance I will mention "Greene's History of the English People." This book is too long; it assumes a previous knowledge of the leading events of English History on the part of its readers, and those who are acquainted with it cannot fail to consider it objectionable on other and more important grounds. Again, the course appointed for English Language and Literature is far too long, and, consequently, whatever knowledge of it a boy may have acquired has been imparted to him in a hasty and by a system of cramming. As a matter of fact this course is never taken up at school till the last year, and then only by the few who intend to compete for the Royal Scholarships. I would, therefore, suggest that some of the books now recommended should be omitted, and that of others certain portions only, carefully selected, should remain in the course. It is the custom at the present day to expect too much from boys, and, consequently, the subjects placed before them for study are so numerous and so extensive as to preclude the possibility in most cases of their becoming sound and accurate scholars, the knowledge acquired by the great majority being necessarily superficial.

I would also suggest that the Commissioners should confer with the authorities of Trinity College with a view to arranging that there should be one and the same course and examination for both the Royal Scholarships and the Junior Exhibitions given by Trinity College.

At present, in consequence of the course being entirely different, if a boy prepares himself to compete for a Royal Scholarship, he is practically debarred, in case of failure, from competing for a Junior Exhibition. The Royal Scholarships, therefore, must necessarily be disposed of at the school a year or even two years before the boys enter college, and hence the number of candidates presenting themselves for those valuable prizes will naturally not exceed the number of scholarships vacant; and so all competition, and the advantages of competition, will disappear. Whereas, if there were one course and one examination for all, and if, after the examination, a list of marks were made out with the names of the candidates arranged in order of merit, together with the names of the schools at which they had received their education, the best answers from the Royal Schools might, in the first instance, be selected for the Royal Scholarships, and then the Junior Exhibitions awarded to the twelve best answers remaining. If such a system as this were adopted, I feel convinced that the result, by promoting an extensive and active competition, would prove beneficial not only to the Royal Schools, but to the interests of education throughout Ireland.

For convenience of reference and comparison I have tabulated the results of my examinations in writing from dictation, in arithmetic, and in algebra.

I also annex a table showing the number of boarders at each school, coming from the Provinces of Ulster, Leinster, Munster, and Connaught.

I have the honour, &c.,

THOMAS T. GRAY.

Trinity College, Dublin.
May 16, 1876.

P.S.—I beg to express my deep appreciation of the kind and courteous manner in which I was everywhere received by the head masters.

APPENDIX G.

REGULATIONS OF THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY IN DUBLIN FOR PROMOTING ENGLISH PROTESTANT SCHOOLS IN IRELAND.

1.—FREE SCHOLARSHIPS FOR BOYS.

The Board of the Incorporated Society having determined to extend to all the Dioceses of Ireland the privilege of sending forward Male Candidates for Competitive Examinations for Free Places at the Society's Boarding Institutions, the following Statement has been drawn up for the information of the Parochial Clergy, Parents, Schoolmasters, and other persons interested in the matter.

Free Places.—In each of the Society's Boarding Institutions a certain number of Free Pupils are maintained, clothed and educated at the cost of the Society.

Competitive Examinations.—Vacancies occur every year about Michaelmas, and to fill the places vacated, Boys are elected by Competitive Examinations usually held in the months of June and July, after due notice given, through the Parochial Clergy, to all concerned.

Subjects.—Candidates are examined in the Book of Genesis, the first twenty Chapters of Exodus, 1st and 2nd Books of Samuel, 1st Book of Kings, the Four Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, the Church Catechism and the Scriptural References showing its doctrine to be in conformity with the Word of God, Reading, Writing, the Rudiments of English Grammar, the Geography of Europe, Palestine, and Asia Minor; and in Arithmetic, as far as the Rule of Three inclusive, and Vulgar and Decimal Fractions.

The Examination is conducted with the strictest impartiality and the best Answers elected.

Regulations.—The following are the Regulations under which Candidates are admissible to Examination:—

1. Candidates must not be under twelve years of age on the 31st July, or above sixteen on the 1st June, in the year of examination.
2. Candidates must have been resident within the prescribed Districts respectively for at least one year previous to the day of examination.
3. A Certificate of age, good conduct, residence, and suitability as to pecuniary means, signed by the Clergyman of the Parish in which the Candidate resides; and also a certificate of good health, signed by a Medical Practitioner, must be lodged one clear week previous to the day of examination, with the Master of the Institution to which the Candidate seeks admission.
4. Certificates will be received only on the Society's printed forms, which can be obtained on application to the Masters, at the Institutions.
5. The number of Candidates must be at least three times that of the vacancies to be filled; should this not occur, the Scholarships will be given only to that proportion, and the remaining Scholarships may be conferred on deserving but unsuccessful Candidates at other examinations.
6. When two brothers are candidates at the same Examination, only one of them shall be elected, if the next boy on the examination list be found duly qualified.

Needed Provisions are required to have, on their admission, each—coat jacket, one waistcoat, one pair of trousers, one pair of shoes, one cap, two shirts, and two pairs of stockings.

Duration of Scholarship.—Each boy elected on the Foundation is permitted to remain for three years in the Institution to which elected, unless removed for misconduct; during that period to be clothed, maintained, and carefully educated, solely at the cost of the Society. At the termination of each period of residence he vacates his Scholarship, in order to make room for a newly elected Candidate, and ceases to have any claim on the Society except for a Testimonial of Character, in case he shall have proved himself entitled to it.

Sentry School.—re-election to.—The only exception to this rule is in the case of re-election to the Sentry Training and Commercial Institution near Dublin, into which a proportion of the Scholars who have completed their term of three years in the other Institutions of the Society, are annually re-elected for an additional period, if after examination and inquiry as to character they shall appear deserving of that distinction. Such pupils are thus afforded an opportunity of continuing and extending those studies in which, as a necessary qualification for re-election, they must have already made considerable progress.

Education Afforded.—The Society's Institutions provide a sound Scriptural and superior English and Scientific Education, embracing the Holy Scriptures, History, Geography, Grammar, &c., and those branches of practical Mathematics necessary to qualify young men for the offices of Schoolmasters, Accountants, Surveyors, Assistants to Civil Engineers, Clerks in the Civil Service, &c.

Pay Boarders.—In addition to the pupils elected to Free Places on the Foundation of the Institutions, Boarders are received on payment of about £30 each per annum.

Thackeray Exhibitions.—The Thackeray Exhibition in Trinity College, Dublin, of the annual value of £30, and tenable for two years, is open to the pupils of the Incorporated Society's Schools, under certain conditions determined by the Board.

The following are the Institutions to which boys will be elected under the foregoing Regulations, together with the Names and Addresses of the Masters, the Districts whence Candidates may present themselves, and the corresponding Place of Examination in each case; also the number of Free Scholarships offered yearly for competition:—

(Four Free Scholarships.)

Candidates from these United Dioceses will be examined in Dublin. Four Boys to be elected annually to Free Places in one or more of the Society's Institutions.

N.B.—With respect to Candidates from the United Dioceses of Dublin, Glindalough, and Kildare, it may be thought necessary to hold preliminary Test Examinations, of which due notice will be given. Forms of Certificates, the Special Statement referring to these Dioceses, and any further information required, can be obtained on application at the Office of the Incorporated Society.

The Board of the Incorporated Society has before it abundant proofs of the marked success of the system of Open Competition underrunning carried out by the Society for many years past. Former pupils of its Institutions are to be found occupying positions of trust and respectability at home and in the colonies—many engaged in the various departments of the Civil Service, others in commercial pursuits, and not a few have earned creditable distinctions as Students of Trinity College, of whom several are now Ministers of the Church.

In extending the operations of the Society more generally throughout Ireland, the Board is encouraged to anticipate still further beneficial results from the increased stimulus likely to be thereby given to Primary and Middle Class Education. To effect this desirable end the Board of the Incorporated Society will confidently hope for the cordial co-operation of the Clergy and Laity of the Church of Ireland.

It is the earnest desire of the Incorporated Society that its Institutions and Schools should be visited, and that the several Public Examinations of the Pupils and of Candidates for Free Scholarships should be witnessed—by Patrons of Schools, the Clergy of the various districts, Parents and School-teachers, and all persons who take an interest in the improvement and welfare of the rising generation.

By Order,

JOHN W. HACKETT, A.M., Clk., Secretary.

2. CELBRIDGE (FEMALE) INSTITUTION.

Notice is hereby given to the Clergy, School-Teachers, and others interested in the matter, that a Deputation from the Incorporated Society will visit the Society's Female Boarding Institution at Celbridge, on the day of 187, at o'clock, to hold the Annual Examination of the Pupils in the Institution in the various branches of their Education, and to ascertain the exact state of the Establishment, its order, capability, and management.

N.B.—Candidates from those Parishes in the County of Wicklow which adjoin the County Kildare, have the option of attending for Examination at either Celbridge or Rathdrum.

Eight girls (the best answers amongst all the Candidates), are annually elected on the Foundation of the Institution at Celbridge.

The Candidates will be examined in Spelling, Reading, and Writing, and in St. Matthew's Gospel, together with the Church Catechism, and the Scriptural References showing its doctrine to be in conformity with the Word of God. The Examinations will be conducted with the utmost impartiality, and the best answers elected.

With reference to these Examinations, the following Regulations must be strictly observed:—

1. Candidates shall not be under ten, nor above fourteen years of age.

2. Candidates must have been resident within the prescribed district for at least one year previous to the day of Examination.

A Certificate of age, good conduct, residence, and suitability as to pecuniary means, signed by the Clergyman of the Parish in which the Candidate resides; and also a Certificate of good health, signed by a Medical Practitioner, must be obtained; and no girl can be admitted for Examination as a Candidate unless such Certificate, in the printed form provided by the Society, be sent to the Mistress of the Institution, Celbridge, at least one week previous to the day of examination.

4. The number of Candidates who shall present themselves for admission must be at least twice that of the vacancies which are to be filled. When this shall not occur, the places to be filled will be given only in that proportion; and in the event of a failure in the number of Candidates, the Society will supply the deficiency from deserving but unsuccessful Candidates from other districts.

5. In cases where two sisters are Candidates at the same Examination, one of them only can be elected, if the next Girl in the Examination-list be found duly qualified.

Each Girl elected on the Foundation is permitted to remain in the Establishment for four years, to be educated, dieted, lodged, and clothed free of any expense.

to her relatives or friends, unless she forfeit these advantages by misconduct. At the termination of this period she is to vacate her place in the Institution, in order to make room for a newly-elected Candidate, and will cease to have any further claim on the Society, except for a testimonial of character and conduct, in case she shall have proved herself duly entitled to it.

The only exception to this rule is in the case of election to the "Teachers' Training Class," into which a limited number of the most deserving of the girls are admitted for an additional period, with the view to qualify them to become themselves Teachers.

The Cullinane Institution affords a sound Scriptural and useful English Education. The children are also instructed in needlework and in domestic employments, including the care of the house, management of the dairy, laundry, &c.

It is the earnest desire of the Incorporated Society that these examinations should be witnessed by Patrons of Schools, by the Clergy of the respective districts, by Parents and School Teachers, and by all persons who take an interest in the improvement and welfare of the rising generation.

APPENDIX H.

LETTER FROM COMMISSIONERS OF CHARITABLE DONATIONS AND REQUESTS FOR IRELAND, dated 30th May, 1879, giving particulars of ENDOWMENT OF CASTLENOCK PAROCHIAL SCHOOL.

Commissioners of Charitable

Donations and Requests for Ireland,
3, Kildare-place, Dublin
30th day of May, 1879

WILLIAM TIBBALL'S (CASTLENOCK) CHARITY.

SIR.—In reply to the inquiry in your letter of the 27th instant, as to whether I can give you any information as to the tenure by which Mr. Duffy holds a portion of the lands of Pellinstown, I beg to say that, without being able to directly answer your question, it may perhaps be well for me to state shortly some facts about the title to these lands.

There are in this office several deeds, and a considerable mass of papers, relating to the lands of Pellinstown, and to the proceedings instituted by the former Board in 1837, for the administration of the assets of William Tibball, and the establishment of his Charitable Bequests.

I enclose you a copy of an extract of his will. It appears that William Tibball purchased in fee these lands, by deed of October 30th, 1850, but subject to a mortgage of October 11th, 1792, for £1,800 Irish, which by his will he directed should be paid out of the proceeds of other lands, which he desired to be sold.

In the Chancery proceedings, entitled The Comrs. Moore v. Moore, the master made a Report which was confirmed by decree of April 26th, 1851. By that it directed that a sum of £548 8s. 1d. should be paid to the Rev. Ralph Sadler to recoup him for having paid the interest on said mortgage for several years.

The rents at that time were stated to be —

| | £ | s. | d. |
|--|-----|----|----|
| Mr. Clarke, | 104 | 12 | 4 |
| Representatives of Rathbone, | 57 | 12 | 6 |
| | 242 | 5 | 0 |
| Interest on mortgage, | 99 | 16 | 10 |
| Total, | 342 | 5 | 2 |

The mortgage was paid off and a deed was executed on 30th June, 1855, by Mr. Charles LeGrange, reconveying the fee of the lands of Pollestown to the Rev. Ralph Sadler and his successors at Cusackbrook.

It is possible that amongst these papers, should occasion arise for employing a solicitor to make search, some clue might be found to explain the possession of part of these lands by Mr. Duffy, but after a considerable, though not an exhaustive search, I have failed to find such.

While on the subject of the endowments of Cusackbrook School it may be well to state if you are not already aware of it, that under the will of A. Tisdall (1836) a sum of £90 was left for this school, and that having been recovered by this Board, a transfer of £80 8s. 1d. three per cent stock was made to the Rev. Ralph Sadler, on the 12th of April, 1855.

Also under the will of William Crosthwaite (1750) £10 a year (less) was left, charged on Jollystown, Co. Meath.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
HERCULES MACDONNELL, Secretary.

To J. C. Meredith, Esq., Secretary,
Endowed Schools Commission, Four Courts.

ENCLOSURE referred to in the foregoing LETTER.

"I give and bequeath the said Lands of Pollestown, in the county of Dublin (purchased since the date of my marriage settlement), to my Wife, Caroline Tisdall, for her natural life, and from and after her decease I give the said Lands to the Protestant Rector of the parish of Cusackbrook and his Successors, in Trust for the Protestant Parish School of said parish; and if there shall be no School-house built in said parish, I direct the rents and profits of said Lands to be returned and allowed to accumulate for the space of four years after the decease of my said wife, for the purpose of building such School-house, and I direct the same to be so applied accordingly.

I give all the residue and remainder of my Estate and Effects to the said Rector of Cusackbrook and his Successors, in Trust, for the said Charity School, subject to the following bequest, that is to say, &c. —

"I, William Tisdall, hereby make this further Codicil to my above Will. I declare the Lands of Pollestown above named, from and after the decease of my said Wife, to my Aunt, Sydney Tisdall, for her natural life, and from and after her decease, I devise the same to the Rector of the parish of Cusackbrook aforesaid, and his Successors, for the trusts, uses, and purposes in my said Will specified as to the School of said parish. I declare that the Plate in my house at Cusackbrook and Marlborough-street is the property of my said Wife, and that I have not devised or intended with her right thereto in the above Will; and I nominate my friend Robert Warren, of Jervis-street, Recorder of this Court and of my said Will, to be as altered by this Codicil."

WILLIAM TIDALL'S (CUSACKBROOK) CHARITY.

Sir—In reply to your inquiry, I have found a paragraph in the Case prepared for Mr. Sergeant Blackburne, which refers to the Lease made to Mr. Patrick Clarke in 1815; and I now send you a copy extract of all that can be material.

If you wish to send any person to examine the papers further, I shall be happy to show them.

ENCLOSURE referred to in the foregoing LETTER.
WILLIAM TIDALL'S CHARITY.

EXTRACT FROM CASE prepared for Mr. Sergeant BLACKBURNE.

That the said Edward Bullocky, by Indenture of Lease by way of Release, of date in margin [1815, 19th and 26th June] demised the said Lands to Christopher Halpin, for lives renewable for ever.

That the said Christopher Halpin being also unable to pay the rent reserved by and Lease, the said William Hamilton consented to a reduction thereof. Yet, notwithstanding such reduction, the said Christopher Halpin was unable to pay said rent, and an ejectment for non-payment was brought against him; but before same was executed, Julia Halpin, the daughter of the said Christopher Halpin, who was then deceased, and in whom said Lands were then vested, assigned her interest therein to Patrick Clarke, who is now the tenant in possession thereof.

SCHEME for the ESTABLISHMENT and MANAGEMENT of the CHARITABLE INSTITUTION mentioned in the

WILL of PETER BREITLAND, pursuant to the DECREE in this CAUSE, bearing date the 8th day of December, 1869.

1. That the said school shall be called "THE BREITLAND FEMALE ORPHAN SCHOOL," and shall at present be established at No. 11, FORTH STREET, in the City of Dublin.

2. That inasmuch as no suitable premises can be procured in the Parish of St. Nicholas Without, and the said school cannot, therefore, be now conveniently established in the said parish, the rectors of the Parish of St. Nicholas Without be not now appointed an ex-officio governor of the said school, and that the Venerable William Lee, D.D., Archbishop of Dub-in, as rector of the Parish of St. Peter, and the Rev. Charles Fernal McCarthy, as the rector of the Parish of St. Werburgh's, both in the city of Dublin, are the ex-officio governors of the said school, without prejudice to the right of the rector for the time being of the Parish of St. Nicholas Without in said city applying hereafter to be appointed an ex-officio governor in case the school shall be removed to the said parish.

3. That there shall be five other governors, who shall be appointed by the order of this Court.

4. That the following persons shall be the first governors of the said school—viz., the Rev. William Esley Knibbs, the Rev. David McKee, Edward Pennocker, Esq., Q.C., George Woods Mansell, Esq., and William Gilson, Esq.

5. That when any vacancy in the office of ex-officio governors shall occur, by reason of the death, resignation, incapacity, or removal of any of the rectors for the time being of the parishes heretofore mentioned, the person (if any) who shall succeed to the curacy or discharge of duties similar or analogous to those now discharged by said rector, shall be entitled to succeed in his room and to act as such governor, and if there be no such person, then some other fit and proper person shall be appointed by this Court to be such governor.

6. That when any vacancy shall occur by reason of the death, resignation, incapacity, or removal of any of the governors to be appointed by the order of this Honourable Court, or of any person who shall hereafter be appointed in manner herein provided in the place of the governor so appointed, then the surviving or continuing governor shall co-opt a person to fill such vacancy, provided always that the person so co-opted shall be of the same religious denomination as the governor whose place is to be filled, and be a clergyman or layman as the case may be, and that at the meeting of governors to be held for the filling of such vacancy, there shall be at least four of said governors present, and that the person for whom the majority of the votes shall be given shall be held duly co-opted. That a week's notice at least shall be given of any meeting to be held for the co-optation of a governor, such notice to be given personally to each of the continuing or surviving governors of said school, or sent by a registered letter to his last known place of residence, and also to the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland.

7. That at all meetings of governors subsequent to their first meeting, the chair shall be taken by the governors in a rotation to be fixed by themselves at their first meeting; but if the governor whose turn it is to take the chair at any meeting shall not be present at the hour for which the meeting is convened, or within fifteen minutes after the same, then the chair shall be taken by the governor next in rotation. The chairman shall, in addition to his ordinary vote, have a casting vote; all questions shall be decided by a majority of the votes of governors present, and for all purposes, except the co-optation of a governor to fill a vacancy, three shall be sufficient to form a quorum. The names of the governors to take the chair at the first meeting shall be drawn by lot from those present.

8. The governors of said school shall have power to nominate and appoint, at a salary not exceeding Twenty-five pounds per annum, a secretary or clerk, who shall make minutes for all meetings of governors, keep the minutes of these proceedings, and the accounts of the income and expenditure of the funds, and discharge such other duties as shall be prescribed by the governors.

9. That the rents, issues, and profits of the trust property shall be lodged half-yearly by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland in the Bank of Ireland, to the credit, and in the joint names of the governors of the said school, to be applied by them and their successors for the purposes of the said school, and for no other purpose whatsoever.

10. That the school shall be at present prepared for the accommodation of 15 female pupils, all to be born of Protestant parents, said number to be increased hereafter by the governors if the funds shall permit; that said children, on their admission, shall not be less than eight or more than twelve years of age, and that before the admission of any child as a pupil the governors shall require the queries to be answered and the certificates to be signed, which successively set forth in the schedule hereto annexed. The children are to be maintained and supported in the school with diet, clothing, and firing, and all other necessaries for their subsistence, and in cases where it shall be judged proper by the governors they shall be put out apprentices into Protestant families, but no child shall be permitted to remain in the school after the age of 17 years.

11. That the course of instruction to be pursued in said school shall include the daily reading of the authorized version of the Holy Scriptures, and on week-days, instruction in English grammar, reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, history, and singing from notes, together with needlework and household work in its various departments.

12. That each pupil shall be elected by a majority of votes of the governors present at the meeting at which such election shall take place, and when a pupil is to be elected notice shall be given thereof in the summons convening the meeting.

13. That a properly qualified person of the Protestant religion shall be appointed by the governors to be matron and schoolmistress, who shall, with such assistance as the governors shall deem advisable, conduct the school under the supervision of the governors, and subject to their directions.

14. That the governors shall be empowered to fix the salary of the person to be appointed matron and schoolmistress, and also to appoint and fix the wages of any assistants and servants they may consider necessary, and to employ a medical attendant at such salary or remuneration as the said governors shall think fit, and also to dispense with, and remove or dismiss any of the persons so appointed and employed as aforesaid.

15. That the governors shall have power to make such rules and bye-laws as they shall think proper for the admission of pupils, the management and discipline of said school, and the course of instruction to be given therein, or for increasing the number of children to be maintained in said school. Provided that no such rule or bye-law shall take effect until approved of by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland.

16. That out of the income of the trust property, a sum of £50 annually shall be set apart and invested for providing apprenticeships, to be paid for such purposes the governors shall think fit to be apprenticed; and that no pupil shall be apprenticed except into a Protestant family, and that no apprentice shall exceed £30.

17. That the said governors shall meet once in each month for the general management of the affairs of said school, and that special meetings of the governors of the school, as occasion may require, shall be duly convened by requisition, signed by two or more of them, and forwarded to each of the others at least three days prior to the day named therein for the meeting.

18. That such sum, not exceeding £400, as the Court shall order, shall be expended in the furnishing of the house and providing necessaries for said school.

19. That all cheques shall be signed by two governors, and countersigned by the secretary, and that the accounts of the receipts and disbursements of all trust funds received and expended by the governors shall be audited at least once in each year by the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland, or such person or persons as they shall appoint for that purpose.

APPENDIX K.

SCHEME for the FUTURE GOVERNMENT of the BELFAST ACADEMY, as confirmed by the Court of Chancery, on the 1st day of June, 1864, and amended by said Court on the 5th day of May, 1876.

CONSTITUTION AND GENERAL MANAGEMENT.

1. Subscribers of less than Fifty Guineas and not less than Ten Guineas, shall have the power of nominating Pupils at half fees till the amount of the deductions thus made shall equal the amount of their original subscriptions.

2. Each Subscriber of Fifty Guineas shall be entitled to nominate, or provide for the nomination of, one Pupil annually, for ever, at a deduction of one-fourth on the usual fees. Each Subscriber of One Hundred Guineas, and between One Hundred and Two Hundred Guineas, shall be entitled to proportionate deductions.

3. Each Subscriber of Two Hundred Guineas shall be entitled to nominate, or provide for the nomination of one free Pupil, or two Pupils at half fees, annually, for ever. Persons subscribing larger sums shall be entitled to reserve the value of their contributions according to the same scale—i.e., a Subscriber of Three Hundred Guineas may nominate, or provide for the nomination of, either three Pupils at half fees, or one free Pupil and one at half fees, and so forth.

4. When a Subscriber of Two Hundred Guineas shall provide that the free instruction to be given in consideration of his subscription, shall be awarded by public competition, such Subscriber shall be regarded as the founder of a Scholarship, which shall be called by his name, or by whatever other name he may prefer.

5. Regulations specifying what persons shall be admitted to compete for each Scholarship, and setting other matters connected therewith, not prescribed by these Rules, may be agreed upon by the Council of the Academy on the one part, and the founder of the Scholarship or his representatives or authorized agents on the other part, provided that such regulations contain nothing contrary to these Rules; and such regulations shall have interim force from the time of their adoption by the Council till the next ensuing meeting of Petitioners, Principals, or Rector, Vice-Principals, or Vice-Rectors and Masters; and, if confirmed by that meeting, shall thenceforth have permanent force, and shall be entered in the book of Rules of the Belfast Academy in which the rules for regulating the Academy shall be entered.

6. Whereas in the year 1720, a large sum of money was left by Arthur Maxwell, Esq., of Drumbrin, in the County of Down, for several benevolent purposes, one of which was the education of young men for the Presbyterian Ministry;—And whereas the greater part thereof was consumed in litigation with Mr. Maxwell's heirs;—And whereas the trustees of this Maxwell Fund did in the year 1792 lead the residue of and fund to the Academy, believing that thereby they made the nearest approach practicable to carrying out the intentions of the testator;—And whereas it has been found by the report of William Brooke, Esquire, the Master of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, in the matter of "The Right Honourable Thomas O'Hagan, Her Majesty's Attorney-General for Ireland, and of the relation of Robert Young, of Belfast, in the County of Antrim, Civil Engineer, personal representative of James Young, a subscriber to the funds of the Belfast Academy, persons, John Cunningham, Reuben John Byrne, Sir Hugh McCalmont Cairnes, Henry Russell, Henry Crawford, Robert James Tennent, Samuel Vance, William McGhie, Thomas Amos Byrne, George Hill Watson, and Joseph Thackeray McGaw, Respondents," that the said sum is not now a debt payable out of or chargeable upon the property of the Academy.—And whereas it is desired to perpetuate the memory of said Arthur Maxwell in connection with the Academy—Therefore there shall be two free scholarships, to be called "The Maxwell Scholarships," the holders of which shall be entitled to instruction without charge in all the departments of the Academy, and shall be chosen by public competition out of persons nominated as provided in the Appendix to these rules, and duly certified to be of good moral character, and intended for the ministry of the Gospel in connection with some body of Presbyterians holding substantially the doctrines which were held by Mr. Maxwell, and for the maintenance of which his bequest was made, namely, the doctrines taught in the answers to the first thirty-eight questions of the Westminster Shorter Catechism, being the properly doctrinal part of said Catechism; including those holding said doctrines, but who may object to a subscription to a creed.

7. Pupils nominated or chosen by competition to free tuition, or tuition at reduced fees, shall be subject to the approval of the Board of Directors, constituted as hereinafter provided, and to dismissal by the Directors, on a complaint made by the Masters.

8. The Council, constituted as hereinafter provided, shall each year appoint a Board of Six Examiners, by whom all examinations for Scholarships shall be conducted. The Principal or Rector, and one Vice-Principal or Vice-Rector or Master shall always be Members of this board.

9. Persons nominated to free or reduced tuition shall not be allowed to deviate from the fixed course of education arranged by the Board of Masters, as hereinafter provided, without permission of the Directors.

10. Subscribers of Fifty Guineas and upwards shall be called Patrons of the Academy, and shall have the powers in its general management heretofore specified.

11. Each Subscriber of less than Fifty Guineas, and not less than Ten Guineas, shall have the powers of a Patron, and be taken and deemed to be a Patron, as long as there shall remain Ten Guineas of his subscription for which he has not received value in tuition.

12. Any public body or voluntary Association subscribing Two Hundred Guineas or upwards, shall have the power of nominating one of their members, who shall exercise all the powers and privileges of a Patron, and be taken and deemed to be a Patron during the period for which he shall have been so appointed, such period shall not exceed five years; but, on its expiration, the same person may be re-appointed. The first appointment shall be absolute, but every subsequent appointment shall be subject to the approval of the Council, (constituted as hereinafter provided) as in the case of a person to whom the rights of a Patron may have been assigned or bequeathed, and should such body or Association fail to make such appointment, the same regulations shall apply that are hereinafter provided in the case of a Patron dying without bequeathing his rights, and in the case of the person to whom those rights are bequeathed not being approved of by the Council.

13. Any Patron sending more than twenty votes from Belfast may appoint by writing, under his hand, a person to act for him as his deputy in his absence, in the affairs of the Academy, for a specified time; and such deputy shall, during such time, exercise all the powers and privileges of a Patron.

14. Any Patron or Subscriber may assign or bequeath his rights as a Patron or Subscriber, and the person to whom such assignment or bequest is made shall have all the powers and rights of the original Subscriber, provided that such person shall be approved by the Council, constituted as hereinafter provided.

15. If any Subscriber, whether Patron or not, be without bequeathing his rights in connection with the Academy, or if the person to whom he may have bequeathed his rights be not approved by the Council, his Executors or other personal representatives shall, within twelve months from his decease, appoint, subject to the approval of the Council, some person to succeed him in the enjoyment of said rights; and if they shall fail to do so, the Council shall, by a written notice, call upon them to make such appointment within Three Months from the date of such notice; and in default of such appointment, the Council shall, if the deceased Subscriber was a Patron, themselves appoint a person to succeed him in his rights and powers connected with the government and management of the Academy, but not in the right of presenting to free or reduced tuition, which right shall thereupon lapse.

16. For the general management of the Academy, there shall be a Board of Directors chosen by and from the Patrons, consisting of a Warden, two Vice-Wardens, Treasurer, Secretary, and six other Directors, besides the two Trustees chosen by the Patrons as hereinafter provided, which Trustees shall be Members of said Board ex-officio, of this Board, three shall be a quorum. The Warden, one Vice-Warden, and three Directors, shall vacate annually, and none of them shall be eligible to the same office for one year. The Treasurer and Secretary may be elected from year to year. At all meetings of Patrons and Directors, the Warden, if present, shall preside, or in his absence the Senior Vice-Warden.

17. On the Twentieth of December in each year (the anniversary of the founding of the Academy), or some other convenient day, a General Meeting of Patrons shall be held for the election of the above-mentioned Officers-Secretary and Directors; and immediately after the votes are taken for such election, there shall be a meeting of the said Patrons, Principal, or Rector, Vice-Principal or Vice-Rector and Masters, for the transaction of such other business as may be necessary, and at such meeting a report from the Council shall be presented, setting forth the financial and educational condition of the Academy.

18. This meeting shall have power to adjourn from time to time; and a Special General Meeting may at any time be called by the Council on giving not less than Ten days' Notice, by Advertisement, in two newspapers circulating in Belfast, and by circular through the Post Office, addressed to the last known place of residence in the United Kingdom of each Patron.

19. When a vacancy shall occur in the office of Principal or Rector, Vice-Principal or Vice-Rector or Master, a list of eligible candidates shall be prepared by the Board of Masters constituted as hereinafter provided, and submitted to the Directors, who out of such list shall elect a person to fill the vacant office: such short list shall contain not more than five, nor fewer than three, provided always that if the Board of Masters shall represent to the Directors that they cannot find three eligible candidates, they may, with the consent of the Directors, return a less number than three.

20. The Board of Directors and the Board of Masters jointly shall form a Council, by whom all matters concerning the Academy, not specially assigned by these Rules to one or other of said Boards, shall be administered: the Council shall not be competent to transact any business, unless there be present three Members of each of the Boards, and, at meetings of said Council, the Warden shall preside, in his absence, the Principal, in his absence, a Vice-Warden; and, in his absence, a Vice-Principal.

21. The Directors shall, at a meeting convened for the purpose, have the power of dismissing the Principal, or any Vice-Principal or Master, for unpopularity, neglect of duty, or inexcusable inefficiency, they shall also have the power of dismissing a Master for non-observance to the Principal, and of discharging the Principal for gross and persistent abuse of his powers over the Masters, provided that not fewer than nine Members of said Board vote for such dismissal.

23.* The Property shall be vested in three Trustees, two of whom shall be chosen from time to time as vacancies shall occur by and from the Patrons, and the third by and from the Board of Masters. If this third Trustee shall resign, or otherwise cease to be one of the Board of Masters, he shall thereupon cease to be a Trustee.

24.* Subject to the provisions of the next following Rule, the Trustees shall have power to sell or lease for any term, or to grant in perpetuity, with or without fine all or any part of the freehold or leasehold property of the Academy, and shall also, subject as aforesaid, have power to purchase or take on lease or fee farm grant, for the purposes of the Academy or for the improvement or more convenient occupation of other lands belonging to the Academy, or for the purpose of making lands about to be sold or leased more profitable, any land held in fee-simple or for other perpetual estate, or for any term of years.

24.* Before any part of the freehold or leasehold property of the Academy can be sold or let, or other wise alienated, and before any purchase or lease of land shall be made or taken, and before the produce of the sale of any land or the fines received on making leases shall be disposed of, the transaction must be approved of by two meetings of Council specially summoned for the purpose. It must then be reported to a meeting of Patrons, also specially summoned, with not less than ten days' notice, such notice to be given by an advertisement in two of the Belfast newspapers, and by letters through the Post Office addressed as aforesaid.

25.* On any sale or letting on lease of all or any part of the freehold or leasehold property of the Academy, the price or produce thereof shall be paid to the Trustees, whose receipt shall be a good discharge to the purchaser; and the Trustees shall dispose thereof pursuant to the resolutions of the Council, subject to the provisions of the next preceding Rule.

26 The Trustees for the time being shall keep, or cause to be kept, a book containing the names of the Subscribers for the time being, in which all transfers and devolutions of the interests and rights of subscribers shall be entered, and which entries in said book shall on all occasions be taken as conclusive evidence as to the persons in whom the said interests and rights are for the time being vested.

27. The Trustees shall give to each Subscriber, on payment of his subscription, a certificate stating the amount and the privileges to which it entitles him, also the Trustees and Directors shall keep, or cause to be kept in the same or a separate book, an account exhibiting the names of the Subscribers, and the state of their claims for tuition from time to time, in the form of a Debtor and Creditor Account. They shall also keep, or cause to be kept, a Minute Book containing a record of their own proceedings; and all said books shall be open at all reasonable times to all persons having an interest therein.

INTERNAL MANAGEMENT.

28. The internal and educational affairs of the Academy shall for the present, as hitherto, be conducted by a Principal or Rector, and such a number of Masters as may from time to time be determined, according to the provisions hereinafter contained.

29. By the word "Masters" in these Rules it is intended to designate the Masters of the four schools into which the Academy is at present divided, together with such other Masters as may hereafter be appointed on the same footing—namely, receiving the fees of their own pupils, and holding their positions while their conduct is satisfactory to the Principal or Rector, and the Board of Directors, but extra Teachers may be engaged for subjects of less importance, or for a specified time, without having a right to be regarded as Masters within the meaning of these Rules. Should any doubt arise as to whether a particular Teacher is entitled to be considered a Master within the meaning of these Rules, the decision of the question shall rest with the Board of Masters, constituted as hereinafter provided.

30. As soon as practicable the office of Principal or Rector shall be separated from that of Classical Master, and then the Principal or Rector shall be required to teach such branches as shall bring him in contact with the greatest possible number of the pupils of the Academy. As per, all the classes of Geography, with or without Natural History as may be arranged, and the highest class in Belles Lettres, and the highest in either Greek or Latin composition. In connection with this change the English and Classical Schools shall be either amalgamated or more closely connected, the Classical Master having the superintendence of both, and also of the department of Modern Languages as a Vice-Principal or Vice-Rector.

31. As soon as practicable the Mathematical Master shall also be constituted a Vice-Principal or Vice-Rector, having superintendence over the department of Writing and Mechanical Drawing.

32. The Principal or Rector, the two Vice-Principals or Vice-Rectors, and the Masters shall form the Board of Masters, and shall have the regulation of the internal affairs of the Academy.

33. The Board of Masters shall immediately arrange, and may from time to time modify, a course of education, specifying what classes ought to be taken simultaneously by each pupil at each stage of his education.

34. The discipline of the Academy, except in the dismissal of pupils necessitated to receive free education, shall rest entirely with the Principal or Rector and the Masters.

35. The duty of the Principal or Rector shall be—
(1) To teach such classes as may be assigned to him by the Council according to the 36th of these Rules —
(2) To see that the several Masters employ proper Assistants, and that the Masters and Assistants attend regularly and efficiently to their duties, follow proper methods of teaching, use proper books, and generally conduct themselves with fidelity and propriety. If any Master shall disregard the directions of the Principal, the Principal shall bring his conduct before the Board of Masters in the first instance, and afterwards, if necessary, before the Board of Directors, who shall have the power to deal with the matter as they may see fit.

36. The Museum and Library, considered as the property of the Academy, shall be under the management of the Council, but in regard to their use by the Masters and Pupils, they shall be under the management of the Board of Masters, subject to an appeal to the Council.

37. Bye-Laws to regulate matters not specially provided for in these Rules may be made by the Patrons, Principal or Rector, and Masters, at their Annual Meeting hereinafter appointed to be held, or at any adjournment thereof, provided that such bye-laws shall contain nothing contrary to the meaning and intent of these fundamental Rules, and provided that every such bye-law has been previously approved of by two Meetings of Council, between which not less than seven days shall have intervened.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING SCHOLARSHIPS.

THE MAXWELL SCHOLARSHIPS.

1. Each Maxwell Scholarship shall be tenable for four years, subject to approval and dismissal by the Directors, as provided in the seventh of the foregoing rules.

2. Candidates to compete for the Maxwell Scholarship shall be nominated in the following manner.

For each vacant Scholarship, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, through a committee of their body or otherwise as they shall from time to time determine, and in what manner they shall from time to time appoint, may nominate six candidates; and two other candidates may be selected by a preliminary examination out of persons in like manner nominated through committees or otherwise by the other Presbyterian bodies in Ireland, who hold the doctrine taught in the doctrinal portion of the Westminster Shorter Catechism as aforesaid, although they may object to subscription to a creed; and each body containing fewer than twenty congregations may send one competitor to this preliminary examination, and a body containing in Ireland twenty or more congregations, may send one competitor for every ten congregations. A congregation which has never had a minister shall not be counted, and where two or more congregations are under the pastoral charge of one minister, they shall count as one congregation, and inasmuch as the relative numbers of the different Presbyterian bodies may in process of time change by the union of two or more of these bodies, or by other causes, therefore the total number of candidates to be nominated, and the proportions in which they shall be nominated by the different bodies, also the number of competitors to be sent forward to the preliminary examination, may be altered from time to time by the council of the Academy as they may think fit, on a representation from any of the bodies concerned. The bodies whom this rule at present entitles to send forward candidates to the preliminary examination, are the Synod of Ireland, the United Presbyterian Presbytery of Ireland, the Refracted Presbyterian Synod, commonly called Covenanters, and the Eastern Reformed Presbyterian Synod, also commonly called Covenanters.

Girls will be admitted from 7 to 12 years of age, and no girl shall remain at the Institution after having attained the age of 17; but girls may be permitted to take service at 14, as under servants, but not as servants of all work, application in writing being first made to the Committee through the Matron.

All girls are to be brought up in the religion they profess when they enter, until they leave the Institution, and no officer or servant therein shall attempt to tamper or interfere with them in this respect, on penalty of dismissal.

A Governor will visit the Institution at least once a fortnight, receiving written notice, from the Secretary, of the day on which that period will commence.

Should the Governor, so summoned, be unable to attend, he will be good enough to apprise the Secretary as soon as possible after the receipt of the notice.

The Visiting Governor will be pleased to make his report (in a book which will be provided for the purpose) of the condition in which he found the several departments of the Institution.

The Visiting Governor's Report Book will be laid

He is to produce when required by any member of the Committee, all books, returns, papers, and correspondence belonging to the Institution.

He is to visit the Institution frequently, and see that proper order and discipline are maintained, and report any irregularity to the Visiting Governor.

The Secretary, as Acting Treasurer, shall receive all sums of money ordered by the Committee by cheque, signed by two Members of the Committee, and shall pay the same conformably to the Committee's instructions.

He shall at once lodge in the Bank of Ireland, to the credit of the Institution, all such sums of money as he may receive on its behalf, prior to the next meeting of the Committee.
